THE SECOND BOOK

OF THE CHRONICLES.

INTRODUCTION.

THE second book of Chronicles contains a brief sketch of the sacred history from the accession of Solomon to the throne, in the year of the world 2989, (before Christ 1015,) to the return from captivity, in the year 3468, (before Christ 536.) It contains many things omitted in the historical books which precede. It begins with a description of the reign of Solomon, and dilates with particular exactness on the munificent piety of that monarch in the construction of the temple, minutely specifying its ornaments as typical of spiritual decorations which were to embellish the Christian church; a subject highly interesting and useful to the Jews, who, at the time when this book was written, were preparing to rebuild the temple. Hence the account of the solemn consecration of the first building; of the noble and comprehensive prayer of Solomon; and of the covenanted promises which God graciously imparted at the dedication, must have furnished such consolation to the Jews, scarce yet reviving from the despondence of captives. Then is repeated from the book of Kings, the representation of the magnificence and prosperity which Solomon enjoyed agreeably to God's promise, chap. i. 11, 12. After this we are furnished with a recapitulation of the history of the kings of Judah, occasionally intermixed with relations respecting Israel, when connected with Judah. Great part of this history is selected either immediately from the book of Kings, or both Kings and Chronicles were copied from some larger annals, known under the title of the Books of Kings; since frequent references are herein made to some books of Kings, and sometimes for circumstances not extant in the canonical books, chap. xvi. 11; xxi; xxiv. 27; xxv. 26; xxviii. 26; xxxii. 32; xxxiii. 18; xxxv. 27.

These accounts however, in the books of Chronicles, are enriched with many additional particulars. They present us with a lively picture of the state of the kingdom of Judah; and of the various vicissitudes and revolutions which it sustained under different princes. They serve, as the author seems to have designed, greatly to illustrate the necessity of depending on God for defence, without whose protection kingdoms must fall. The advantage derived from obedience to God, and the miseries that resulted from wickedness and sin, are strikingly shewn. The book abounds with useful examples, and the characters are forcibly displayed by a contrasted succession of pious and depraved princes. The change and defection even of individual persons, and their decline from righteousness to evil, are shewn with much effect. The rebellion of Israel, and the contest between the two kingdoms; the preservation of Joash from the destruction which overwhelmed the rest of the house of Judah; the struggles between idolatry and true religion; the seasonable discovery of the copy of the law; with many other interesting particulars which exhibit the interposition of the Almighty defeating evil, and effecting His concerted purposes, deserve to be considered with great attention.

Several predictions are scattered through the book: as the promises made to Solomon, chap. i. 12; vii. 17—22; to Jehoshaphat, xix. 2; xx. 15, 17, 37; and to others, xxxiii. 8. Some sentiments appear to be transcribed from it into the New Testament. Compare 2 Chron. ii. 5, 6, with Acts vii. 48, 49, and xvii. 24; also 2 Chron. xix. 7, with 1 Peter i. 17. Dr. Gray.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST 1015.

1 The solemn offering of Solomon at Gibeon. 7 Solomon's choice of wisdom is blessed by God. 13 Solomon's strength and wealth.

[a] 1 Kings 2. 46.

AND [a] Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the LORD his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

Before CHRIST 1015.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at [b] Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle

[b] 1 Kings 3. 4. 1 Chron. 16. 39. & 21. 29.

Chap. I. ver. 3. — went to the high place — at Gibeon;] See note at 1 Kings iii. 4. It is remarkable that the original tabernacle was at this time at Gibeon, while the ark was at Jerusalem. On what account they were separated, so that the ark was without the tabernacle and its vessels, and the vessels, altar, and tabernacle without the seat of the Divine glory, it is by no means easy to explain. *Bp. of the congregation of God, which Moses the servant of the LORD had made in the wilderness.

[c] 2 Sam. 6. 2, 17. 1045.

4 [c] But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

[d] Exod. 38. 1.

5 Moreover [d] the brasen altar, that Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, ‖ he put before the tabernacle of the LORD: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

‖ Or, was there.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brasen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it.

7 ¶ In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast shewed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me [e] to reign in his stead.

[e] 1 Chron. 28. 5.

9 Now, O LORD God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: [f] for thou hast made me king over a people † like the dust of the earth in multitude.

[f] 1 Kings 3. 9.

10 [g] Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may [h] go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people, that is so great?

[g] 1 Kings 3. 11, 12.

[h] Numb. 27. 17.

11 And God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king:

12 Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as [i] none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

[i] 1 Chron. 29. 25. Eccles. 2. 9. chap. 9. 22.

13 ¶ Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation, and reigned over Israel.

14 [k] And Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

Before CHRIST 1015.

[k] 1 Kings 10. 26, &c. & 4. 26.

15 [l] And the king † made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycomore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

[l] 1 Kings 10. 27. chap. 9. 27, 28.

16 [m] And † Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

[m] 1 Kings 10. 28. chap. 9. 28.

† Heb. the going forth of the horses which was Solomon's.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, † by their means.

CHAP. II.

1, 17 Solomon's labourers for the building of the temple. 3 His embassage to Huram for workmen and provision of stuff. 11 Huram sendeth him a kind answer.

AND Solomon determined to build an house for the name of the LORD, and an house for his kingdom.

2 And Solomon told out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 ¶ And Solomon sent to ‖ Huram the king of Tyre, saying, As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him an house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

‖ Or, Hiram, 1 Kings 5. 1.

4 Behold, I build an house to the name of the LORD my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him † sweet incense, and for the continual shewbread, and for the burnt offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.

† Heb. incense of spices.

5 And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods.

---

14. — which he placed in the chariot cities,] Meaning those cities where there was abundance of good pasturage for horses. Bp. Patrick.

16. — and linen yarn:] See note at 1 Kings x. 28.

Chap. II. ver. 5. — the house which I build is great:] A temple, Solomon says, for the worship of the one infinite and all-perfect Being, ought to be as sumptuous and magnificent as possible; not that it is to be thought that God can receive pleasure from any external pomp or ornaments of human services, or that His presence can be confined to any place whatever, as He is immeasurable in greatness, and equally diffused through every place. But my only design is, to signify (as far as outward things can do so) a regard proportionate to the majesty of Him whom we adore. Pyle.

Before CHRIST 1015.

6 [a] But who † is able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

7 Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill † to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, whom David my father did provide.

8 Send me also cedar trees, fir trees, and ‖ algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants,

9 Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be † wonderful great.

10 And, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

11 ¶ Then Huram the king of Tyre answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon, Because the LORD hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them.

12 Huram said moreover, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, † endued with prudence and understanding, that might build an house for the LORD, and an house for his kingdom.

13 And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Huram my father's, 14 The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

Before CHRIST 1015.

15 Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants:

16 And we will cut wood out of Lebanon, † as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in flotes by sea to † Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

17 ¶ [b] And Solomon numbered all † the strangers that were in the land of Israel, after the numbering wherewith David his father had numbered them; and they were found an hundred and fifty thousand and three thousand and six hundred.

18 And he set [c] threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people a work.

CHAP. III.

1 The place, and time of building the temple. 3 The measure and ornaments of the house. 11 The cherubims. 14 The vail and pillars.

1012.

THEN [a] Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, ‖ where the LORD appeared unto David his father, in the place that

10. — I will give to thy servants,] Or, as it may be rendered, "I will give on account of thy servants." It is said at 1 Kings v. 11, that Solomon gave these stores to Hiram: they were designed probably in part for the subsistence of the workmen, and the rest was sent to the king. Pyle.

12. — Blessed be the Lord God of Israel,] From these words it has been inferred by some, that Hiram was a proselyte to the true religion, because he here owns the God of Israel to be Jehovah, the Maker of heaven and earth; because he congratulates the Israelites on the happiness they enjoyed under such a king, which was the effect of his love to God and His church, and because he declared his love to God's chosen people, not only by embassies and letters, but by real acts of kindness, sending to Solomon materials for building the house of God, and the best artificers in the world. Bp. Patrick. Or perhaps these expressions respecting the God of Israel are only used in compliment to Solomon, who, as well as all the Israelites, as Hiram knew, delighted in hearing terms of respect applied to the God of Israel. Pyle.

17. And Solomon numbered all the strangers &c.] By these strangers are probably meant those who remained of the Amorites, Hittites, &c. mentioned afterwards at chap. viii. 7. It is probable they were not idolaters, for, if they had been so, David would not have suffered them to remain in the land; but they were worshippers of the true God, though not admitted into the Jewish religion. Solomon numbered them on this occasion, "after the numbering wherewith David had numbered them," that he might know their strength and condition; not from motives of vanity and ostentation, but from a prudent care that he might distinguish them from the Jews, and that he might employ them in such parts of his work as he did not think fit to assign to his own people. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — in mount Moriah,] See note at Gen. xxii. 2. It is generally admitted, as a well-grounded opinion, that this mount Moriah, on which Solomon built his temple, was the same as that to which Abraham was commanded to go to offer his son Isaac, Gen. xxii. 2. Dr. Wells.

—— where the Lord appeared unto David] Where the angel of the Lord appeared unto David, and commanded him to offer sacrifice in the threshingfloor of Ornan, or Araunah. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST 1012.

David had prepared in the threshingfloor of ‖ Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 ¶ Now these are the things wherein [b] Solomon was † instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the [c] porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was an hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

[c] 1 Kings 6. 3.

5 And the greater house he cieled with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.

6 And he † garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold; and graved cherubims on the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

‖ Or, (as some think) of moveable work.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubims ‖ of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 ¶ And the wings of the cherubims were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubims spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were ‖ inward.

1 The altar of brass. 2 The molten sea upon twelve oxen. 6 The ten lavers, candlesticks, and tables. 9 The courts, and the instruments of brass. 19 The instruments of gold.

MOREOVER he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof.

2 ¶ [a] Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits † from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

[b] 1 Kings 7. 24.

3 [b] And under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

6. — gold of Parvaim.] The situation of this place, from which gold was procured, has been the subject of much discussion. There are reasons for concluding that the island of Ceylon may be meant. That island was called by the Phenicians, Taphparvan, which means in their language, "the shore of Parvan," Taph signifying a shore. Bochart.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — he made an altar of brass,] The altar erected by Solomon in his temple, as here described, was much larger than that which had been made for the tabernacle, Exod. xxvii. 1—3; as that was five cubits square, and three in height; whereas this was twenty cubits square, and ten in height. Though it is said to be made of brass, it is thought to have been filled within with rough stones, which were covered with thick plates of brass: there was an easy ascent leading up to it on the east side. The altar, which was in the temple built after the return of the Jews from captivity, consisted entirely of rough stones. Josephus says, that the altar, which was in the temple in his time, consisted of rough stones, being fifteen cubits high, forty long, and as many broad. Calmet.

lilies; and it received and held three thousand baths.

6 ¶ He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: † such things as they offered for the burnt offering they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

† Heb. the work of burnt offering.

7 And he made ten candlesticks of gold according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made an hundred || basons of gold.

9 ¶ Furthermore he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

10 And he set the sea on the right side of the east end, over against the south.

11 And Huram made the pots, and the shovels, and the || basons. And Huram † finished the work that he was to make for king Solomon for the house of God;

12 To wit, the two pillars, and the pommels, and the chapiters which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two wreaths to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were on the pillars;

13 And four hundred pomegranates on the two wreaths; two rows of pomegranates on each wreath, to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were † upon the pillars.

14 He made also bases, and || lavers made he upon the bases;

15 One sea, and twelve oxen under it.

16 The pots also, and the shovels, and the fleshhooks, and all their instruments, did Huram his father make to king Solomon for the house of the LORD of † bright brass.

17 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the † clay ground between Succoth and Zeredathah.

† Heb. thicknesses of the ground.

18 Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for the weight of the brass could not be found out.

19 ¶ And Solomon made all the vessels that were for the house of God, the golden altar also, and the tables whereon the shewbread was set;

20 Moreover the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should burn after the manner before the oracle, of pure gold;

Before CHRIST 1012.

21 And the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, made he of gold, and that † perfect gold;

† Heb. perfections of gold.

22 And the snuffers, and the || basons, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold: and the entry of the house, the inner doors thereof for the most holy place, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

CHAP. V.

1 The dedicated treasures. 2 The solemn induction of the ark into the oracle. 11 God being praised giveth a visible sign of his favour.

1005. THUS all the work that Solomon made for the house of the LORD was finished: [a] and Solomon brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated; and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

[a] 1 Kings 7. 51.

1004. 2 ¶ [b] Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the city of David, which is Zion.

[b] 1 Kings 8. 1, &c.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

6 Also king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims:

8 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle; but they

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the LORD; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of musick, and praised the LORD, saying, [e] For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD;

[e] Ps. 136.

14 So that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of God.

CHAP. VI.

1 Solomon, having blessed the people, blesseth God.

12 Solomon's prayer in the consecration of the temple, upon the brasen scaffold.

THEN [a] said Solomon, The LORD hath said that he would dwell in the [b] thick darkness.

2 But I have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build an house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

6 But I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now [c] it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

8 But the LORD said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build an house for my name, thou didst well in that it was in thine heart:

9 Notwithstanding thou shalt not build the house; but thy son which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

Chap. V. ver. 9. — And there it is unto this day.] Or rather, as the margin translates, "There they are (meaning the staves) unto this day;" for so the same words are translated at 1 Kings viii. 8. And, when that book was written, they were exactly true; but, when the author of this book of Chronicles transcribed them into his book, after the captivity, there were then neither staves nor ark remaining. See note on 1 Kings viii. 4. Therefore, it is here only recited from the book of Kings, how Solomon settled things. Bp. Patrick.

11. — (for all the priests — were sanctified, &c.] This solemnity was performed, not by any particular course of the priests, but the whole body of them attended the service, being purified on purpose by solemn washings, &c. And all the Levite musicians, ver. 12—14, placed in their several desks, joined the priests in playing the sacred hymn in honour of God; which was no sooner performed, than God, in testimony of His gracious acceptance of this temple for the stated place of His publick worship, filled the whole place with the same cloud of glory which used to reside in the tabernacle; which appeared with such a mixture of tremendous darkness and brightness, that the priests were prevented from proceeding in the sacrifices till it was abated. See 1 Kings viii. 10, &c. Pyle.

As God vouchsafed to travel with His people in the tabernacle of Moses, so did it please Him to rest with them in the temple of Solomon. The feast of the dedication of that temple afforded the most magnificent sight that was ever presented to the eyes of mortals. Let us imagine to ourselves a building, where scarce any thing appeared less valuable than silver and gold; a building, of which God Himself condescended to be the architect, and which had therefore in the design and execution all the perfection that Infinite Wisdom could give it. Before this building let us think we see the nation of the Israelites assembled, encircling their king, seated upon an exalted throne of burnished brass, with all the ensigns of majesty and royalty; while, amid the harmony of different kinds of instruments, with the acclamations of a whole people, joining in a grand chorus of praise and thanksgiving, the glory of Jehovah, or a body of light above the brightness of the sun, descends from heaven, and fills the temple! Imagination can hardly reach the amazing idea. But this is the scene described by the sacred writer: "And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, &c." ver. 11—14. Never, after this, let us entertain low notions of God, or of the house where His glory dwelleth. Bp. Horne. See the note on chap. vi. 18.

Chap. VI. ver. 5. — neither chose I any man to be a ruler] These words differ from the parallel place at 1 Kings viii. 16, where it is said, "But I chose David to be over My people Israel." The meaning is, that till the time of David there was no settled succession of rulers, but God raised up judges out of what tribe and family He pleased; and, when He made Saul king, He did not continue the dignity in his family, as was the case with David. Bp. Patrick.

10 The LORD therefore hath performed his word that he hath spoken: for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

11 And in it have I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ¶ And he stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands:

13 For Solomon had made a brasen scaffold, of five cubits † long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of the court: and upon it he stood, and kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven,

13. For Solomon had made a brasen scaffold, &c.] This verse is added to what we have in the book of Kings: it had been stated in the last verse, that Solomon stood in the presence of all Israel; and here it is explained, that he was raised for that purpose on a scaffold. Bp. Patrick.

—— and kneeled down upon his knees &c.] The house of God does not take its name from the practice of preaching there, but from that of praying: "My house shall be called the house of prayer," Matth. xxi. 13. Accordingly we find, that when the temple of Solomon was finished, it was immediately applied to its proper use. We hear of no preaching on this great occasion, but only of prayers and religious offerings. The king, the priests, and all the people, attended at the solemn service of its dedication. Sacrifices were offered without number; and the king, in his capacity of a Prophet, prayed publickly for the blessing and favour of God upon the house which he had built. His words upon this occasion are very striking. Jones of Nayland.

14. And said, O Lord God of Israel, &c.] See note at 1 Kings viii. 23.

In his dedication-prayer, king Solomon, personating, as it should seem, the great Mediator, states before God the various wants and miseries of his people, requesting for those, who should pray in or towards that temple, that they might be supplied and relieved: see ver. 20, 21. Pardon for time past, and grace for time to come, comprehend between them the spiritual necessities of mankind; and both are supposed to have been justly and beautifully represented by the service and the furniture of the tabernacle and temple of old: the former by the acceptance of sacrifice and the sprinkling of blood, without which there is no remission; the latter by the table of shewbread, the golden candlestick with its lamps, and the altar of incense, denoting the support of our spirits by the true bread which cometh down from heaven, the instruction of our minds by the light of truth shining forth in the word of God, and the merits of a Redeemer ascending with the prayers of the faithful, to render them acceptable at the eternal throne. Under the new law, in like manner, at the baptismal font, and at the holy table, are exhibited and communicated the Spirit purifying and cleansing from sin, the body and blood of Christ strengthening and refreshing the souls of men. Such are the benefits (and what greater benefits can heart desire, or imagination conceive?) to be obtained, through faith, in these holy places, where God is pleased to meet us and to bless us, if indeed we are disposed to receive the blessing, by turning every one of us from his iniquities. Bp. Horne.

18. But will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? &c.] This most awful and important question seems to have almost overwhelmed the vast and capacious mind of Solomon himself. Certainly that which is without bounds cannot be comprehended within that which has bounds, whether large or small; and therefore, in a strict and proper sense, "the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands;" see Acts vii. 48. But it is no less certain, that there is a sense, agreeably to which it may be truly said, that the Most High does dwell in temples made with hands. So Solomon asserts in this same prayer at the dedication of the temple, ver. 1, 2: and God Himself is introduced as saying the same in the 132d Psalm, ver. 13, 14. Accordingly we read, that "when the priests were come out of the holy place, the house of the Lord was filled with a cloud, so that the priests could not stand to minister, &c." see chap. v. 11—14. The Master took possession of His house, and for a time dispossessed even His own servants, to show that he did so. As if He had said, "The house, which you have designed for My worship, I have designed for your blessing: what you have dedicated, I have accepted: what you have consecrated, I have allowed: I have taken it for the purpose you intended." Or, to use the far more emphatical words of the sacred penman, "I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before Me: I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put My name there for ever; and Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually." Thus, notwithstanding the iniquities of mankind, and His own purity, as well as incomprehensible majesty, has God been pleased to "dwell indeed on earth," and to vouchsafe an especial manifestation of His presence in holy places, dedicated to His name, and set apart for His worship. An house designed for that end is therefore styled "the house of God," or place of His residence. And let us not think that He is less present with us, than He was with Israel. Is the Christian church less favoured than the Jewish church was? Have we lost any thing by the incarnation of His Son? Surely not. It may be said indeed, we do not see Him as the Israelites did. But "the glory," or body of light or fire, which the Israelites saw, was only a sign or token of His presence. "God is a Spirit, whom no man hath seen, nor can see." We do not see the souls of those who are assembled to worship Him: yet are they present. The holy angels may be present when we worship Him; and God Himself, we trust, is so by His Spirit. We know who has said, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them," Matth. xviii. 20. Bp. Horne.

20. That thine eyes may be open upon this house &c.] In these words the use of the temple is signified. This house was the place where God would give audience, and have respect to the petition, out of regard to the place in which it was offered. They, who expect to be heard when they address a king, go into his court, and present themselves in the proper place for an audience. The temple was the court of the great King; and, though He can hear the voice of men in every place, yet it was expedient that one place should be honoured above all others to stir up reverence in men, and give them a reasonable ground of hope when they should offer their petitions. It seems by the expression, that the people were encouraged, not only to pray within the temple, but to have respect to it, and to turn themselves toward it in their devotions, even when they prayed to the God of Israel in distant places: "Hearken unto the supplications of Thy people Israel, which they shall make toward this place." And the practice was duly observed by Daniel in his captivity at Babylon: it was his manner "to open his window toward Jerusalem, and to kneel and pray three times a day," Dan. vi. 10. His respect was to the temple; and he held to the practice, though then the ruins of it only were remaining. In fact, the tabernacle and temple were the places where the devotion of the people, and the favour of God, met together: the house of God was the common assembly of heaven and earth; there God was to be found, and there the people sought Him: there Hannah, in the bitterness of her soul, offered up her devotions, and her petition was granted. Yea, and Christ Himself allows, Matth. xxiii. 17, that "the temple sanctified the gold" which was offered in it: and, if it could sanctify the gold, it would rather sanctify the more valuable offerings of prayer and thanksgiving. This was known to that godly woman Anna the prophetess, who, having devoted herself to God, departed not from the temple, but served Him there with fastings and prayers night and day. There the prayers of Simeon were granted, and the promise of God fulfilled to him, when he took up the child Jesus in his arms, and blessed God, who in the temple had indulged him with a sight of what his eyes most desired to behold. Jones of Nayland.

28. — or caterpillers;] The Hebrew word here means some small destructive insects. That they are liable to the ravages of such animals in the East, appears from Sir J. Chardin, who says, that Persia is subject to have its harvest spoiled by locusts and small insects, which they call Sim; these are small white lice, which fix themselves on the foot of the stalk of corn, gnaw it, and make it die. It is rare for a year to be exempt from some scourge of this description. Harmer.

4 ¶ Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And king Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so

38. — and pray toward their land,] Thus both prince and people were to pray in this house, while they possessed the land of Judea and the city where it stood; to pray towards it when they sojourned in foreign coasts, or were detained in the land of their captivity; to pray towards the place where it had stood, in case it should be demolished. Thus Daniel did, (Dan. vi. 10,) after this house, built by Solomon, was burnt to the ground. Dr. Jackson.

41. Now therefore arise, O Lord God, &c.] These words form part of Psalm cxxxii. 8, 9, with very little variation. In them he beseeches God to take up His habitation here, with "the ark of His strength," so as to stir from hence no more; and also so to defend His priests who ministered to Him, that they might obtain His blessings for others, and that all the people might rejoice in His great bounty. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. — the fire came down from heaven,] God had already given one gracious token of His acceptance of the temple for the place of His holy residence and worship, by the cloud of glory coming into it, chap. v. 13, 14: and now, as a further confirmation of it, the king's foregoing prayer was no sooner ended, than the sacrifices were immediately burnt and consumed by a flame, from the same cloud, upon the altar; in the same manner as it was at the consecration of the tabernacle, Lev. ix. 24. Pyle.

The cloud, which denoted the presence of God, had already filled the house, so that the priest could not stand to minister: and in the ages after, as well as before, the Divine presence was manifested about the ark, and between the cherubim which overshadowed it. On special occasions, it appeared in a visible manner, under the symbol of a cloud, with a light or glory attending it: and, when the cloud was not seen, the place was always understood as being inhabited in a particular manner by the glory of the Godhead. Jones of Nayland.

This kind of answer by fire was of the most satisfactory kind. By this answer God determined the controversies between Elijah and Baal's priests: by the like effects of fire from heaven, the calling of Aaron to the priesthood was proved to be not by man, but by God's immediate appointment. And so was the consecration of the Son of God to His everlasting priesthood confirmed by the visible appearance of the Holy Ghost in tongues of fire, which was the accomplishment of both the former miraculous appearances from heaven, the one at the consecration of Aaron, the other at the consecration of this material temple. Dr. Jackson.

13. If I shut up heaven &c.] God here again declares to Solomon, that His dispensations of mercies or judgments would always be in proportion to the virtuous or disobedient behaviour of the people; that their conscientious regard to the laws of their religion would never fail to draw down upon them continued blessings; and their true repentance and reformation of life, to stop the miseries that at any time befell them: but that, whenever they degenerated into obstinate idolatry and irreligion, neither the promises made to David, nor the name of Israel, nor the splendour of the temple, would screen them from the Divine vengeance; they should become wretched even to a proverb, ver. 21, and be forced to acknowledge that the slavery of the whole nation, and the desolation of their sacred temple, are but just retributions of Heaven for their ingratitude under the choicest favours and blessings, by forsaking the great God who so mercifully bestowed them. Pyle.

14. If my people, — shall humble themselves, — and turn &c.] Solomon is here instructed, that the only way, by which God can be reconciled to a sinful people, is, by their prosecuting their fasting and humiliation to the actual reformation and amendment of their lives; that it is ever the proper fruit of repentance, to forsake our sins and become better for the future, more pious and devout towards God, more sober and chaste with regard to ourselves, more just and charitable, meek and humble towards all men. Without this, humiliation and prayer will signify nothing; sorrow and tears will have no avail to save our own souls, or to preserve our generation from destruction. Abp. Tillotson.

16 Now all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the house of the LORD, and until it was finished. So the house of the LORD was perfected.

17 ¶ Then went Solomon to Ezion-geber, and to ‖ Eloth, at the sea side in the land of Edom.

Chap. VIII. ver. 2. That the cities which Huram had restored &c.] Here is a short relation of what is told more largely at 1 Kings ix. 12, 13: only we are further informed in this place, that Solomon rebuilt the cities, after they were restored to him by Huram, so that his own subjects became the inhabitants. Bp. Patrick.

3. — went to Hamath-zobah,] Probably the country lying between the Euphrates and Damascus. Bochart. Perhaps the country is so called, as being a part of the kingdom of Hamath, seized on by the king of Zobah. Dr. Wells. See notes at Numb. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 2; 2 Sam. viii. 9; and 1 Kings viii. 65.

11. — My wife shall not dwell in the house of David] "The ark of the Lord" had dwelt for a considerable time in the house of David, where a tabernacle had been made on purpose for it. On this account, Solomon thought that especial regard should be paid to a place, which had been employed for so sacred an end, and would not suffer his wife, who was a stranger, though a proselyte to the Jewish religion, to keep her court there: for she and her servants might in many ways have defiled a place, which had been made sacred by the symbol of the Divine presence dwelling there. Bp. Patrick.

14. — David the man of God] It is observable that David is here called "the man of God," as Moses had been; because, after Moses, there was none like him divinely inspired, to raise the publick worship to a higher pitch by his heavenly hymns; and to direct the manner of its performance in proper order. Solomon was a very wise man in natural knowledge, and in political affairs, and in moral and Divine things; but he was much inferiour to David both in true piety, and in the gift of prophecy. Bp. Patrick.

[a] 1 Kings 10. 1. &c. Matth. 12. 42. Luke 11. 31.

AND [a] when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon with hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and camels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon told her all her questions: and there was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

3 And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house that he had built,

4 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; his ‖ cupbearers also, and their apparel; and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the LORD; there was no more spirit in her.

5 And she said to the king, It was a true † report which I heard in mine own land of thine ‖ acts, and of thy wisdom:

† Heb. word. ‖ Or, sayings.

6 Howbeit I believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou exceedest the fame that I heard.

7 Happy are thy men, and happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.

8 Blessed be the LORD thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the LORD thy God: because thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, to do judgment and justice.

9 And she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.

10 And the servants also of Huram, and the servants of Solomon, which brought gold from Ophir, brought algum trees and precious stones.

Before CHRIST about 992.

11 And the king made of the algum trees ‖ † terraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and harps and psalteries for singers: and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which she had brought unto the king. So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold;

14 Beside that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and ‖ governours of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold: three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And there were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, which were fastened to the throne, and † stays on each side of the sitting place, and two lions standing by the stays:

19 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ¶ And all the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of † pure gold: ‖ none were of silver; it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

† Heb. shut up. ‖ Or, there was no silver in them.

21 For the king's ships went to Tarshish with the servants of Huram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, ‖ ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

22 And king Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

Chap. IX. ver. 8. Blessed be the Lord thy God,] In these words she says much more than is related at 1 Kings x. 9: for here she calls the throne of Israel "the throne of the Lord," and acknowledges Solomon to be made king "for the Lord his God;" that is, not only to rule by His authority, and as His deputy; but for His glory, and to promote His religion. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST about 992.

23 ¶ And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart.

[f] Chap. 12. 15.

30 And Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.

975.

31 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. X.

1 The Israelites, assembled at Shechem to crown Rehoboam, by Jeroboam make a suit of relaxation unto him. 6 Rehoboam, refusing the old men's counsel, by the advice of young men answereth them roughly. 16 Ten tribes revolting kill Hadoram, and make Rehoboam to flee.

[a] 1 Kings 12. 1, &c.

AND [a] Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

Before CHRIST about 975.

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas my father [†] put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly; and king Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men,

14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father made

24. — and raiment,] Presents of raiment are still frequently made in these countries to the great. Thevenot tells us it was the custom in Egypt, in his time, for the consuls of the European nations to send to the basha and his officers valuable presents of vestments, whenever a new basha arrived, or a new consul entered on his office. Harmer.

29. — in the book of Nathan the prophet, &c.] See note at 1 Kings xi. 41. It is there stated only generally, that his acts were written in "the book of the acts of Solomon." We are here told the particular books in which they were recorded. The last of these authors, Iddo, wrote also the acts of Rehoboam, chap. xii. 15; some suppose that he lived till the time of Asa, chap. xv. 1, where he is called Oded. We need not suppose that the three writers here mentioned joined to make one book; but they severally and distinctly gave an account of such things as occurred to their knowledge; out of which, it is probable, the author of these books of Chronicles took many things which are here supplied. Bp. Patrick.

your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 So the king hearkened not unto the people: for the cause was of God, that the LORD might perform his word, which he spake by the [b] hand of Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

[b] 1 Kings 11. 29.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? and we have none inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to your tents, O Israel: and now, David, see to thine own house. So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Hadoram that was over the tribute; and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam † made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 And Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

CHAP. XI.

1 Rehoboam raising an army to subdue Israel, is forbidden by Shemaiah. 5 He strengtheneth his kingdom with forts and provision. 13 The priests and Levites, and such as feared God, forsaken by Jeroboam, strengthen the kingdom of Judah. 18 The wives and children of Rehoboam.

[a] 1 Kings 12. 21, &c.

AND [a] when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

2 But the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren: return every man to his house: for this thing is done of me. And they obeyed the words of the LORD, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

Before CHRIST about 975.

5 ¶ And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and built cities for defence in Judah.

6 He built even Beth-lehem, and Etam, and Tekoa,

7 And Beth-zur, and Shoco, and Adullam,

8 And Gath, and Mareshah, and Ziph,

9 And Adoraim, and Lachish, and Azekah,

10 And Zorah, and Aijalon, and Hebron, which are in Judah and in Benjamin fenced cities.

11 And he fortified the strong holds, and put captains in them, and store of victual, and of oil and wine.

12 And in every several city he put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

13 ¶ And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel † resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 For the Levites left their suburbs and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for [b] Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD:

[b] Chap. 13. 9.

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made.

16 And after them out of all the tribes of Israel such as set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

17 So they strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong, three years: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.

Chap. XI. ver. 6. He built even Beth-lehem, &c.] By "building" it is meant, here as in other passages, that he repaired and fortified places which were built before.

13. And the priests and the Levites &c.] The wicked changes which Jeroboam had made in matters of religion, became a further addition of strength to Rehoboam; for the priests and Levites were either expelled from their habitations among the ten tribes, or voluntarily deserted their habitations, and came to Jerusalem; Jeroboam having set up the worship of the golden calves, and made priests out of the laity for the service of his idols. Pyle.

15. — and for the devils,] The Hebrew word here signifies "goats" literally, and was a term commonly used for demons or false gods of all denominations; who, according to the notions prevailing in those times, were supposed to appear under this shape. Pyle. As we no where read of Jeroboam having set up or allowed any other false worship than that of the golden calves, we may reasonably conclude that by the word "devils" are meant these idols:—perhaps it should be translated, "for devils, even for the calves which he had made." Dr. Wells. See note at Lev. xvii. 7.

17. — in the way of David and Solomon.] Although the number of people which came to him out of all the tribes added great strength to Rehoboam's kingdom, yet his power was chiefly owing to God, who protected and assisted him as long as he and his people continued in the way of his predecessors, David and Solomon. It is observable, that in these words Solomon is mentioned as an example of true piety, as well as David: this is probably said with reference to the greater part of his reign, before the period of his old age, when he forsook the law of Moses. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST 974.

18 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihail the daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse;

19 Which bare him children; Jeush, and Shamariah, and Zaham.

[c] 1 Kings 15. 2.

20 And after her he took [c] Maachah the daughter of Absalom; which bare him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.

21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives, and threescore concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and threescore daughters.)

22 And Rehoboam made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.

23 And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city: and he gave them victual in abundance. And he desired † many wives.

CHAP. XII.

1 Rehoboam, forsaking the Lord, is punished by Shishak. 5 He and the princes, repenting at the preaching of Shemaiah, are delivered from destruction, but not from spoil. 13 The reign and death of Rehoboam.

972. AND it came to pass, when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, he forsook the law of the LORD, and all Israel with him.

971. 2 And it came to pass, that in the fifth year of king Rehoboam Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, [a] because they had transgressed against the LORD,

Before CHRIST 971.

3 With twelve hundred chariots, and threescore thousand horsemen: and the people were without number that came with him out of Egypt; the Lubims, the Sukkiims, and the Ethiopians.

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king humbled themselves; and they said, The LORD is righteous.

7 And when the LORD saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them ‖ some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless they shall be his servants; that they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon [b] had made.

[b] Chap. 9. 15.

10 Instead of which king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

21. —for he took eighteen wives,] When we read of the many instances which occur of the kings of Israel disobeying the law of God, which commanded them not to multiply wives, we should always bear in mind that, in those days, the desire of having abundance of children was extremely great, and that barrenness, or the want of children, was esteemed the greatest possible unhappiness. Bp. Patrick.

23. And he dealt wisely, and dispersed &c.] It seems probable that, on his designing to make Abijah his son king, who was one of his younger sons, the other sons took great offence, and shewed a disposition of rebellion; and his method of preventing the effects of this was to send them away from court, and to disperse them through the kingdom by preferring them to the government of several small towns: and "he gave them victual in abundance," that is, enabled them to live with splendour and abundance. Pyle.

Chap. XII. ver. 1. —he forsook the law of the Lord,] As Rehoboam's mother was an Ammonitess, it is probable that he received an education which naturally led to idolatry, or to an indifference to true religion. Bp. Wilson.

2. —in the fifth year] Their apostasy took place in the fourth year of Rehoboam's reign, (after they had been three years obedient, chap. xi. 17;) therefore God speedily corrected them, that He might reduce them to His service, before they were settled in their impiety. Bp. Patrick.

3. —the Lubims, the Sukkiims, and the Ethiopians.] The Lubims were, no doubt, the people of Libya, a famous country in Africa, bordering on Egypt. The Sukkiims are thought to have lived near the Red Sea, and to have been so named from their living in caves and dens of the earth, the word from which the name is derived signifying a cave or den; hence they are thought to have been the same with a people called Troglodites, inhabiting those parts, whose habits of life were of this description. The people called Cush, (which we translate Ethiopians,) were either those to the south of Egypt, or in Arabia; for, as has been observed before, the name applied to both. Bp. Patrick.

8. —that they may know my service, &c.] That they may feel the difference between being under My protection, and being abandoned by Me; between the blessings which attend a true course of piety, and the wretched effects of irreligion and lewdness. Pyle.

Before CHRIST 971.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard chamber.

12 And when he humbled himself, the wrath of the LORD turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: ‖ and also in Judah things went well.

‖ Or, and yet in Judah there were good things.

13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for [c] Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are they not written in the † book of Shemaiah the prophet, and of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies? And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

16 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

NOW [a] in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah. And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah † set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valour.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel;

5 Ought ye not to know that the LORD God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt?

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon the son of David, is risen up, and hath [b] rebelled against his lord.

[b] 1 Kings 11. 26.

7 And there are gathered unto him vain men, the children of Belial, and have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and tenderhearted, and could not withstand them.

8 And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be a great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam [c] made you for gods.

[c] 1 Kings 12. 28.

9 [d] Have ye not cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh † to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are no gods.

[e] Chap. 2. 4.

12. — and also in Judah things went well.] Affairs began again to prosper. But the words in the Hebrew are, "there were good things in Judah," which may be understood of the reformation made in the whole kingdom; many good things being found amongst them in the midst of their corruption. It is probable that the priests kept up the worship of God in its purity, and many good people joined in it, especially those who had fled from the idolatries of Jeroboam. Bp. Patrick.

14. — he did evil, because he prepared not &c.] He did evil again, because he set not his heart sincerely to seek or follow the Lord. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XIII. ver. 2. — His mother's name — Michaiah the daughter of Uriel] It was stated at chap. xi. 20, 21, that his mother was named Maachar, the daughter of Absalom, (or Abishalom, 1 Kings xv. 2.) It seems her name was both Michaiah and Maachah, and her father's name Uriel as well as Absalom. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

4. — and said, Hear me, &c.] Of course it is not meant that he addressed the whole army of Jeroboam, but that he entered on a parley with Jeroboam and his principal officers, to see if matters could be accommodated without bloodshed. Bp. Patrick.

5. — a covenant of salt?] See notes on Levit. ii. 13; Numb. xviii. 19.

7. — when Rehoboam was young and tenderhearted,] Not young in years, but in the conduct of government, (for Rehoboam was forty years old when he began to reign, chap. xii. 13.) the meaning is, that Rehoboam acted at first as young and inexperienced princes are wont to do. Pyle.

11. And they burn unto the Lord every morning &c.] Abijah, in his address to the Israelite army, is thus particular in detailing these matters, in order to put them in mind with what regularity and solemnity the worship of God was kept up in Judah, which they had not seen for some years, and perhaps had forgotten. Bp. Patrick.

sacrifices and sweet incense: the [f] shewbread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

12 And, behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, fight ye not against the LORD God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused an ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the LORD, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the LORD God of their fathers.

957. 19 And Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and Ephrain with the towns thereof.

2 And Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the LORD his God:

4 And commanded Judah to seek the LORD God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment.

6 ¶ And he built fenced cities in Judah: for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because the LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls, and towers, gates, and bars, while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the LORD our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered.

8 And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears, out of Judah three hundred thousand; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valour.

13. But Jeroboam caused an ambushment &c.] Jeroboam, it appears, made no reply to this address of Abijah; but he seems to have been so struck with the effect it might produce, that he would not trust to his superiour numbers, but had recourse to artifice for the purpose of conquering his enemy. Bp. Patrick.

15. —and as the men of Judah shouted, &c.] They gave a shout for the purpose of terrifying their enemies with this mark of their confidence in the victory: and "God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah;" that is, they were struck with such terrour that they fled without striking a blow, and suffered a vast slaughter, such as is scarcely paralleled in history. Pyle.

14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar; for the fear of the LORD came upon them: and they spoiled all the cities; for there was exceeding much spoil in them.

1 Asa with Judah and many of Israel, moved by the prophecy of Azariah the son of Oded, make a solemn covenant with God. 16 He putteth down Maachah his mother for her idolatry. 18 He bringeth dedicated things into the house of God, and enjoyeth a long peace.

AND the Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded:

2 And he went out to † meet Asa, and said unto him, Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin; The LORD is with you, while ye be with him; and if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.

3 Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law.

Before CHRIST 941.

4 But when they in their trouble did turn unto the LORD God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them.

5 And in those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.

8 And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the † abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that the LORD his God was with him.

10 So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

12. So the Lord smote &c.] Asa had called upon the Lord with profound humility and sure trust and confidence; and the Ethiopians were put to flight. Thus God blesses and protects religious princes, and, in general, those who are truly zealous for His glory; and, if He suffers them to be exposed to great dangers, He displays His power in their behalf, and delivers them. Osterwald.

14. —for the fear of the Lord came upon them:] The inhabitants, seeing so vast a host defeated, had no courage to defend themselves. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XV. ver. 2. — The Lord is with you, &c.] God hath been pleased to bless you with a glorious victory over an enemy far superiour to you in number and strength, in reward for the justice and piety you have hitherto exercised; and you may expect continual successes, upon your cheerful perseverance in the ways of virtue and religion. Pyle. This is a prophecy which is well worthy of serious notice at all times and by all nations and people. Bp. Wilson.

3. Now for a long season &c.] From the time when the kingdom of Israel separated from their brethren of Judah in the days of Jeroboam, Israel has been "without the true God, and without a teaching priest," for they have not worshipped the true God, but the golden calves, and all the true priests have gone into the land of Judah. Bp. Patrick.

4. But when they in their trouble did turn] If we follow the common interpretation which respects the present and future state of Israel, these words should rather be translated, "If in their trouble they had turned, &c. they should have found Him." Bp. Patrick.

These expressions in the 4th, 5th, and 6th verses, seem to be applicable either to past or future times. Thus the general sense may be, Take warning from the dealings of Providence with the Israelites, either in ancient times, or in their present apostasy from God's worship; or with respect to what is threatened against them, if they for the future should persist in their disobedience to the Divine laws. You never saw, nor ever will see them given up to idolatry and impiety, but you always did, and always will find them embroiled in wars and confusion, and wretched beyond expression; as, on the other hand, you will find the mercies of Heaven extended towards them upon their repentance and reformation. Pyle.

8. — the prophecy of Oded] Probably a short expression for "the prophecy of the son of Oded;" although some think that the father may have prophesied as well as the son, and foretold the same calamities. Bp. Patrick.

IN the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa [a] Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, to the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

17. — the high places were not taken away out of Israel:] It had been said twice in the preceding chapter, that Asa did take away the high places, ver. 3, 5, but that related to Judah; whereas, out of the territories he had conquered in the land of Israel, we are here informed, he was not able to remove them. Or the meaning may be, that he gave orders for the removal of the high places, which were not obeyed. Or, as others think, he took away the high places which were devoted to the service of idols, but suffered those to remain which were employed in the worship of the true God. Bp. Patrick.

—— the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.] By comparing these words with chap. xvi. 7. to the end, it plainly appears that their meaning is nothing more than that Asa kept himself from idolatry to the last; though, in other instances, in the latter end of his life, he was not so religious as he ought to have been. Pyle.

19. — there was no more war] That is, as some interpret, there was no more war with the Ethiopians, or other such people, though with Baasha king of Israel he had perpetual war, 1 Kings xv. 16. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XVI. ver. 1. In the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa] A considerable difficulty arises from comparing this passage with 1 Kings xv. 33; for there it is said, that "in the third year of Asa began Baasha to reign," and that he reigned "twenty-four years;" so that the last year of Baasha's reign must answer to about the twenty-sixth year of Asa, and consequently Baasha must have been dead about nine or ten years before the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign. Of this difficulty, which has been much discussed by learned men, two principal solutions have been proposed. According to the one, which is supported by the authority of Josephus, it is supposed that the transcribers of the original copies have committed a mistake in the number, and that it should be written the twenty-sixth year of Asa, instead of the thirty-sixth, (as also at ver. 19. of the last chapter, the twenty-fifth instead of thirty-fifth,) which will make it the last year of his reign when Baasha "came up against Judah." According to the other solution, we are to understand by the words, "In the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Asa," not actually the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign, but the thirty-sixth year of the kingdom of Judah over which he reigned, that is, from the time of the separation under Jeroboam; agreeably to which the translation should be, "the thirty-sixth year of the kingdom of Asa," that is, the kingdom of Judah. This method of solving the difficulty has a great number of learned commentators for its support. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

3. There is a league between me and thee,] Here was another instance of false policy, to send to an infidel king, when God had so lately rescued him from a much greater army. And, what added to the sin, he gave him the treasure which he had devoted to God. Bp. Wilson. These words may be translated, "Let there be a league between me and thee." Houbigant.

7. — at that time Hanani the seer] Here follows a remarkable history added to what we read in the book of Kings, (1 Kings xv.) which relates the great weakness of Asa in his declining years, and God's displeasure at it. Bp. Patrick.

9. For the eyes of the Lord &c.] The Prophet Hanani teaches us, in these beautiful expressions, that God grants and continues His favours only to those who serve Him with an upright and sincere heart. The change now wrought in Asa shews that it is of no consequence to have begun well, and to have done our duty for some time, if we do not persevere. This is a warning to persons of pious dispositions to be on their guard, lest, by growing careless and remiss, they deprive themselves of the protection of God, and the effects of His love. Ostervald.

—— Herein thou hast done foolishly:] He was defective in his inward trust and confidence in God, and "foolish" in relying rather on the arm of man than on the Divine protection. Bp. Patrick.

12. — Asa — was diseased in his feet,] The diseases mentioned in Scripture are described by so few symptoms, that physicians hardly know how to determine them. Such is the case in this instance of Asa. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

—— he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians.] It is not meant that he committed a fault in desiring the help of the physicians; but in trusting to their skill more than to the goodness and power of God, to whom he did not address his prayers, but continued in his former fault of putting confidence in man. Bp. Patrick.

13. And Asa slept with his fathers,] Such was the dark end of a reign, which had begun and continued for a series of years with so many bright virtues and excellencies. He died a melancholy instance of the weakness and depravity of human nature. However, from regard to his former services, he was honourably interred in the royal sepulchre, (ver. 14,) in a vault which he had made for himself, which he appointed to be decked and perfumed with great art; and the court celebrated his funeral with burning great quantities of spice, and other similar testimonies of respect. Pyle.

14. — and divers kinds of spices] The embalming of bodies had been a very ancient custom, as it was adopted in the burial of Jacob. Some think that the circumstance of his ordering his body to be embalmed, and buried after the manner of the Gentiles, is here mentioned as a blamable piece of vanity, in addition to his other offences. Bp. Patrick.

—— they made a very great burning for him.] The burning seems to have been not of his body, but of odours and spices at his funeral. Dr. Wall.

Chap. XVII. ver. 7. — he sent to his princes, &c.] To attain more effectually his good end of establishing true religion, and rooting out idolatry, he made it his early care to have a number of priests and Levites (ver. 8.) in all his chief towns, to read and teach the law of God to the people, as it was laid down in the original Scriptures; and he appointed some of his "princes," that is, magistrates, to see it regularly done. Pyle. When princes thus take care of religion and the service of God, they may expect the favour and protection of God, as this prince experienced so signally. Bp. Wilson.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

† Heb. yet, or, more. 6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD † besides, that we might enquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until † they be consumed.

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

11. — the Philistines brought &c.] They voluntarily paid him their tribute, which it is probable had been neglected in the time of some of his predecessors, though imposed on them by David.

—— and the Arabians brought him flocks,] The Arabians courted his favour, and made him rich presents of flocks, in which their wealth principally consisted. Bp. Patrick, Pyle.

14. And these are the numbers &c.] The names of the commanders are mentioned, and the number of their troops. From which it appears, that, so mightily did the nation prosper under the religious administration of this king, that though he possessed little more than a third part of the ancient dominions of Israel, yet he was able to raise above a million of men capable of bearing arms, which exceeded the proportion that even David had. Pyle.

Chap. XVIII. ver. 3. — I am as thou art, &c.] The Prophet Hanani had before cautioned his father Asa against forming an alliance with the king of Syria, chap. xvi. 7; and Jehoshaphat is afterwards reproved for it at chap. xix. 2; xx. 37. Bp. Patrick.

In all that follows in this chapter there is scarcely any thing different from what occurs in the book of Kings. See 1 Kings xxii.

Before CHRIST 897.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king † with one assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of their's, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

15 And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, ‖ but evil?

Or, but for evil.

18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the LORD; I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.

[b] Job 1. 6.

20 Then there came out a [b] spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

21 And he said, I will go out, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the LORD said, Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out, and do even so.

22 Now therefore, behold, the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil against thee.

23 Then Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah came near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

24 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go ‖ into † an inner chamber to hide thyself.

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

Before CHRIST 897.

26 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the LORD spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, all ye people.

28 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.

31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel. Therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the LORD helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.

32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again † from pursuing him.

33 And a certain man drew a bow † at a venture, and smote the king of Israel † between the joints of the harness: therefore he said to his chariot man, Turn thine hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am † wounded.

IT came to pass after this also, that the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them other beside the Ammonites, came against Jehoshaphat to battle.

2 Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea on this side Syria; and, behold, they be in Hazazon-tamar, which is En-gedi.

3 And Jehoshaphat feared, and set † himself to seek the LORD, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

Chap. XIX. ver. 4. — He went out again through the people &c.] Resolving to make the utmost amends for his miscarriage, by promoting a further reformation in his kingdom, he made a progress in person through all the principal towns, and settled the magistracy with such care and exactness, that all irregularities, both in sacred and civil matters, might be either prevented or duly punished; giving a severe charge to them to execute the laws with perfect courage and impartiality, as they would answer it to God, whose vicegerents they were. Pyle.

8. — for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies,] These words are variously expounded, some understanding by the "judgment of the Lord," causes about sacred matters; and by "controversies," some understanding civil causes, others criminal and capital. It is sufficient to say, that they tried all sorts of causes. Bp. Patrick.

10. And what cause soever shall come to you] It is meant, whatsoever cause shall come to you by way of appeal from the other cities, in which it was the custom of the judges to refer matters of great difficulty to this supreme court at Jerusalem.

—— between blood and blood,] Probably meaning, in a question of bloodshed, whether it was voluntary or accidental.

—— ye shall even warn them that they trespass not] This seems to be a command that they should not only pronounce a righteous sentence in every cause that came before them; but that they should admonish him who was in the wrong, and all other persons in the like case, to beware of injuring their neighbours in the time to come. Bp. Patrick.

11. — all matters of the Lord; &c.] Some understand by the "matters of the Lord," all sacred things; and by "the king's matters," all civil and political causes. Others conceive the former to relate to those things which were defined by the law of God, and were to be judged by that law; and the latter, to those things which, not being defined by the Divine law, were left to the judgement of the king. Bp. Patrick.

—— Deal courageously, and the Lord shall be with the good.] Administer justice impartially, and as persons who fear not man in the discharge of their duty to God; and the Lord will bless and defend you, as long as you act like good and upright judges. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XX. ver. 2. — from beyond the sea on this side Syria;] From the Dead sea, which is on this (or the western) side of Syria; the Dead sea being the western boundary of that country. It seems that Jehoshaphat did not hear of the enemies' approach till they were actually in En-gedi, a place in the tribe of Judah. By comparing Gen. xiv. 7, with this passage, it appears that Hazazon-tamar was an ancient name for En-gedi. Bp. Patrick.

3. — and proclaimed a fast] In important and perilous circumstances, the kings used to proclaim fasts in particular towns, or through the whole kingdom, according as the case required. Thus Jezebel proclaimed a fast in Jezreel, to procure the condemnation of Naboth, 1 Kings xxi. 9. So the king of Nineveh ordained a fast in his capital, when he was threatened with

14 ¶ Then upon Jahaziel the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite of the sons of Asaph, came the Spirit of the LORD in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the LORD unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not your's, but God's.

19 And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the LORD God of Israel with a loud voice on high.

20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; [c] Believe in the LORD your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

approaching ruin, Jonah iii. 7. In this instance, as the danger concerned the whole kingdom, a fast was proclaimed through the whole kingdom. Calmet.

6. — O Lord God of our fathers, &c.] This is the most admirable prayer that we have recorded, as made by any of the kings. Jehoshaphat begins with an acknowledgment of God's supreme and irresistible power, which extends over every creature in heaven and in earth. He then represents to his Maker, ver. 7, the peculiar relation which the people of Israel had to Him, and the promise of possession of their land, which they inherited from Him, and the circumstance of their having built a sanctuary for His peculiar worship, ver. 8. He proceeds to represent, ver. 10, the foul ingratitude and injustice of their enemies in invading their country, when the Israelites had formerly gone out of the way on purpose to avoid giving them disturbance; appeals to the justice of God, ver. 12, who helps those to right who suffer wrong; and, lastly, describes the weak condition of His people, whose only hope was in their God. Bp. Patrick.

9. — as the sword, judgment,] Some translate "the sword of judgment." Bp. Patrick. Otherwise "the sword, or any other judgment, even pestilence and famine, &c." Dr. Wells.

14. Then upon Jahaziel &c.] Jahaziel seems not to have been a Prophet before this time, but now to have received an immediate inspiration from God, for the purpose of giving comfort and assurance to the people before they stirred from the place where they prayed. Bp. Patrick.

16. — go ye down] As Jerusalem was seated on an eminence, they are said to "go down" from it, as their enemies are immediately after "to come up to it." Bp. Patrick.

20. — believe his prophets, &c.] Belief is in Scripture always supposed to arise and begin from a willingness to know and be informed in the will of God, and to end in actual obedience to His commands so made known. The meaning here is, "Observe and obey His Prophets, obey the commandments which they deliver you from God: so shall ye be partakers of the promises annexed." Dr. S. Clarke.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of ‖ Berachah; for there they blessed the LORD: therefore the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah, unto this day.

5 His wicked reign. 8 Edom and Libnah revolt.
12 The prophecy of Elijah against him in writing.

22. — the Lord set ambushments] The meaning seems to be, that the ambushments which the Syrians had laid against Judah, by a confusion among themselves, caused by the hand of God, fell upon a part of their own army, mistaking them for their enemies. Bp. Patrick. "The Lord" ordered things so, that the ambushments "which were come against Judah," that is, which were designed to fall unawares on the army of Judah, by some mistake came against or fell upon the Syrians, so that they smote each other. Dr. Wells.

23. — every one helped to destroy another.] They continued, it appears, in the greatest confusion, each falling upon his neighbour, and all imagining that they were destroying the army of Judah, which, according to the Prophet's direction, came upon them early in the morning. Bp. Patrick.

27. Then they returned, — to go again to Jerusalem] This is a further instance of their gratitude to God for the victory, that they did not return every man to his home, but went immediately to Jerusalem to offer up their publick thanksgiving. Bp. Patrick.

As Jehoshaphat had called upon the Lord in the time of his distress, so he discharged the duty of gratitude in a very edifying manner, rendering publick thanks to God on his return from the war. On the whole, we draw the three following topicks of instruction from the events relating to Jehoshaphat here recorded: first, That prayer, fasting, and humiliation, are the most effectual means to which we can have recourse in time of danger or necessity, whether publick or private: secondly, That God can never want the means to save and to deliver those who place their trust in Him: thirdly, That when God has heard our prayers, and granted our request, we are bound to render Him our hearty and sincere thanks and praise for His mercies towards us. Ostervald.

33. — for as yet the people had not &c.] The reason why the high places were not taken away is here given; namely, that the people could not bear it; for their hearts were not disposed to serve God exactly according to the law of Moses; they had renounced indeed idolatry, but they still required the liberty of offering sacrifices to God in the "high places," as well as in the temple. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XXI. ver. 2.—Jehoshaphat king of Israel.] He was king of Judah; but, as all the tribes had the common name of Israel, he may here be called king of Israel, by a latitude of expression, as Asa also is at chap. xxviii. 19. Pyle. But almost all the ancient versions have "king of Judah" instead of "king of Israel," and "Israel" seems here to have been written for "Judah" by a mistake of transcribers. Houbigant.

3.—the kingdom gave he to Jehoram;] Jehoram was made partner of the kingdom with his father, 2 Kings viii. 16. Afterwards, at ver. 5, when Jehoram "began to reign," it is meant, in consort with his father. Bp. Lloyd.

4.—he strengthened himself, and slew &c.] He first "strengthened himself" that he might slay his brethren without danger to himself, and then proceeded to the act itself. Bp. Patrick.

11.—and caused the inhabitants &c.] He not only gave his subjects a bad example, and enticed them to idolatry, but by threatenings and compulsions endeavoured to constrain them to conform to his evil example. Bp. Patrick.

12.—there came a writing—from Elijah] It is certain that Elijah had been taken up into heaven in the time of Jehoshaphat; thus it is probable that he foresaw, by the spirit of prophecy, the wickedness of Jehoram, and that he spake the words here delivered to one of the Prophets, charging him to convey them in a letter to Jehoram, when he arrived at that pitch of impiety which is here related, so that he might be affected by them, as by a message from heaven, and might be induced to repent. For the words in the original admit this sense, that the writing was sent as the writing of Elijah; but they do not necessarily imply that it came immediately from him. Some have supposed that, by a mistake of transcribers, the name Elijah may have been substituted for Elisha: but this is entirely conjectural. Bp. Patrick, Pyle. And another supposition has been, that not Elijah the Tishbite is meant, but some other Prophet of the same name, who was then living. Dr. Wall.

14.—with a great plague will the Lord smite &c.] No calamity can be thought of, which did not befall this wicked prince; his kingdom being destroyed and depopulated by the fiercest nations, his treasures ransacked, his wives carried into captivity, his children slain, himself labouring for two years under a sore disease, and deprived at his death of the honour of royal sepulture, ver. 19. All these calamities were denounced against him in the writing sent to him in the name of Elijah, that he might not think they came by chance, but by the special direction of Almighty God, as a punishment for his impieties. *Bp. 19. — his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness:] As was observed of the disease of Asa, ch. xvi. 12, so it may be observed on this disease, that the symptoms related do not determine it. 1 Jehoiada, having set things in order, maketh Joash king. 12 Athaliah is slain. 16 Jehoiada restoreth the worship of God.

AND [a] in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into covenant with him.

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the LORD hath [b] said of the sons of David.

[b] 2 Sam. 7. 12. 1 Kings 2. 4. & 9. 5. chap. 6. 16. & 7. 18.

4 This is the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the † doors;

5 And a third part shall be at the king's house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD, save the priests, and they that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

7 And the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not the courses.

9 Moreover Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's, which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right † side of the † temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

12 ¶ Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, † Treason, Treason.

† Heb. Conspiracy.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges: and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her; and when she was come to the entering of the horse gate by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the LORD's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and [d] slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had [e] distributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burnt offerings of the LORD, as it is written in the [f] law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained † by David.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Joash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada. 4 He giveth order for the repair of the temple. 15 Jehoiada's death and honourable burial. 17 Joash, falling to idolatry, slayeth Zechariah the son of Jehoiada. 23 Joash is spoiled by the Syrians, and slain by Zabad and Jehozabad. 27 Amaziah succeedeth him.

about 878. [a] 2 Kings 12. 1, &c.

JOASH [a] was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And Joash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded † to repair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of [b] Moses the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness?

[b] Exod. 30. 12, 13, 14.

7 For the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And at the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.

Before CHRIST 856.

9 And they made † a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD the collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and † the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.

† Heb. the healing went up upon the work.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels for the house of the LORD, even vessels to minister, and ‖ to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. And they offered burnt offerings in the house of the LORD continually all the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was full of days when he died; an hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.

about 850.

16 And they buried him in the city of David among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

17 Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah, and made obeisance about 840.

Chap. XXIV. ver. 3. And Jehoiada took for him two wives;] That is, recommended to the king, when he was come to an age fit to marry, two wives. Dr. Wells.

16. — because he had done good in Israel,] "In Israel," that is, in the part of the land of Israel, over which he reigned, namely, Judah. This shews a good disposition then subsisting in the king and his people, that they paid honour to the memory of Jehoiada, "because he had done good toward God, and toward His house," having been the instrument of restoring the Divine worship, and of repairing the decays which had taken place in the temple, and furnishing it with vessels for the Divine service. Bp. Patrick.

17. — came the princes of Judah,] Some of the principal men, who in their hearts continued devoted to the worship of Baal, "made obeisance to the king;" that is, made their addresses to him with great reverence, pretending devotion to his service, and requested leave to worship the idols which Jehoiada had destroyed. Bp. Patrick.

The great change now wrought in Joash shews of how great importance it is for men in eminent situations to have about them wise and virtuous persons, and for the ministers of religion to be endued with zeal and prudence. The death of persons of this character is a great loss; and evil counsels are ever fatal to those who follow them. Ostervald.

to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them. (Before CHRIST about 840.)

18 And they left the house of the LORD God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the LORD; and they testified against them: but they would not give ear.

20 And the Spirit of God † came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the LORD, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the LORD, he hath also forsaken you. († Heb. clothed.)

21 And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the LORD. (840.)

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, The LORD look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass † at the end of the year, that the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of † Damascus. (840. † Heb. in the revolution of the year. 839. † Heb. Darmesck.)

24 For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the LORD delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers. So they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in great diseases,) his own servants conspired against him for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings. (Before CHRIST 839.)

26 And these are they that conspired against him; ‖ Zabad the son of Shimeath an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of ‖ Shimrith a Moabitess. (‖ Or, Jozachar, 2 Kings 12. 21.)

27 ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the burdens laid upon him, and the † repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the ‖ story of the book of the kings. And Amaziah his son reigned in his stead (‖ Or, Shomer. 839. † Heb. founding. ‖ Or, commentary.)

CHAP. XXV.

1 Amaziah beginneth to reign well. 3 He executeth justice on the traitors. 5 Having hired an army of Israelites against the Edomites, at the word of a prophet he loseth the hundred talents, and dismisseth them 11 He overthroweth the Edomites. 10, 13 The Israelites, discontented with their dismission, spoil as they return home. 14 Amaziah, proud of his victory, serveth the gods of Edom, and despiseth the admonitions of the prophet. 17 He provoketh Joash to his overthrow. 25 His reign. 27 He is slain by conspiracy.

AMAZIAH [a] was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem. (839. [a] 2 Kings 14. 1, &c.)

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was † established to him, that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father. († Heb. confirmed upon him.)

4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of

21. And they conspired against him, &c.] So degenerate was this prince grown, that he suffered that very temple, which he himself had piously repaired, to be profaned with the blood of a virtuous man, the son of his best benefactor, to whom he owed his life and his crown. Pyle.

To what extremities of wickedness will not wretched man proceed, when deserted by his Maker! King Joash is turned, not idolater only, but persecutor; yea, which is more horrible to consider, persecutor of the son of that Jehoiada, to whom he owed his own life. Zechariah, his foster brother, the only issue of those parents, by whom Joash lived and reigned, is, for his conscientious rebuke of the idolatry of prince and people, unjustly and cruelly murdered by that unthankful hand. How possible is it for fair and pious beginnings to close in monstrous impieties! Bp. Hall.

22. — he said, The Lord look upon it, and require it.] The Prophet resigned his breath without any the least reviling word; only telling them that God would not fail to punish such outrageous impieties. The words, "The Lord look upon it, &c." are not an imprecation, but a prophecy: they are to be taken in a future sense, "The Lord will look upon it and require it." Pyle.

Assuredly, his zeal for justice, not the uncharitable thirst of revenge, drew forth these words. God heard his dying words, and soon called Joash to a severe account. His crime made him odious when living, and deprived him, when slain, of the sepulchre of his fathers, ver. 25; as if this last mark of royalty were too good for him who had forgotten the law of humanity. Bp. Hall.

23. — all the princes of the people] Those who had advised Joash to restore the worship of Baal. Bp. Patrick.

25. — buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.] Because he had been a notorious idolater. Bp. Wilson. The fate of Joash was like that of other bad kings. God delivered him up to the Syrians, though they "came with a small company of men," ver. 24; he was killed in his bed by his own subjects, and buried with disgrace: whence we are taught, that they who provoke the wrath of God by their sins, will experience sooner or later the severity of His judgments. Ostervald.

Chap. XXV. ver. 2. — but not with a perfect heart.] It is said at 2 Kings xiv. 3, that he did that which was right, but "not like David his father." He did in fact what the law required, but not with a sincere and solid piety. Bp. Patrick.

5 ¶ Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also an hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for an hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; for the LORD is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for God hath power to help, and to cast down.

12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were broken in pieces.

13 ¶ But † the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Bethhoron, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

5. — three hundred thousand choice men,] We here discern how much the iniquities of the people had now diminished their numbers since the days of Jehoshaphat, that is, in the space of about seventy years; for this king could bring only 300,000 men to the field, and Jehoshaphat brought nearly four times as many; see chap. xvii. Bp. Patrick.

6. He hired also — out of Israel] In hiring these Israelites, the king acted rashly and presumptuously. For, in the first place, he "enquired not of the Lord" upon the occasion: see Judges xx. 27; 1 Sam. xxiii. 2, 4; 2 Sam. ii. 1; v. 19, 23; 2 Kings xvi. 15; 1 Chron x. 14, &c. He sought not, as, upon concerns of importance, David and the other religious kings of Judah had constantly sought, those special directions from God, which, under the existing dispensation, a dispensation, into the texture of which miracles were interwoven, were always to be obtained by an immediate reference to the Most High before His altar. And, in the next place, he knew that the people of Israel had long been open idolaters; and that the heaviest calamities had fallen upon his own ancestors, in consequence of connexions which they had formed with idolatrous Israel. He could not then look for the Divine blessing upon this proceeding: but he had reason to expect that his sinful misconduct would be made the instrument of his punishment. Gisborne.

7. — for the Lord is not with Israel, &c.] The Prophet here reprimands them sharply for entering into an alliance with the Israelites, a people debauched by the wicked house of Jeroboam, which was of the tribe of Ephraim. Pyle.

At the same time God, in great mercy, affords Amaziah both opportunity and encouragement to stop short in the evil course on which he had entered. Gisborne.

8. But if thou wilt go, &c.] If thou wilt go to fight against Edom, do it only with thine own men; for, though they are not a numerous army, yet God will make them to be strong enough for the battle, so as to conquer the Edomites; but, if thou take the forces of Israel with thee, "God will make thee fall before the enemy:" for God hath power to help or give thee victory by a small army, and to cast thee down or cause thee to be conquered, even with the greatest army. Dr. Wells.

9. — But what shall we do for the hundred talents &c.] Amaziah was confounded at the message of the Prophet. He could not venture to retain the Israelites to go with him to the war, when he was assured that his own destruction would be the consequence. But he was far from possessing that singleness of heart, that true and lively faith, which would have taught him to obey the command of God instantly and cheerfully, whatever present sacrifice might be inseparable from obedience. His heart hankered after the money which he had advanced. Was that to be relinquished? If not, how was it to be recovered? If compliance with the Divine will would not have cost him any thing, he would readily have obeyed. But an expensive proof of obedience was required. He pondered therefore and hesitated; and "said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel?" Gisborne.

—— The Lord is able to give thee much more than this.] God, who is the Lord of the whole earth, has the earth, and every thing which it contains, at His disposal. "Every beast of the forest is His, and the cattle upon a thousand hills." "The silver is Mine, and the gold is Mine, saith the Lord of hosts," Ps. l. 10; Hag. ii. 8. He could have at once extended the dominions of Amaziah to the widest bounds promised to the children of Israel; from Lebanon to the confines of Egypt; from the Western sea to the great river Euphrates. He could have rendered this king an object of respect, of admiration, and of dread, to all the surrounding nations. At the present hour, all the kingdoms of the earth, and the glory of them, are at the disposal of the Son of God, our Lord and Saviour. All power in heaven and in earth is given unto Him. Every article, in which worldly prosperity consists; every event, which contributes to worldly greatness; every outward circumstance in any respect advantageous to men, is in His hands. Well therefore may we be assured, that whatever we lend to the Lord, by resigning it for His sake, He is able beyond measure to repay to us again. Gisborne.

13. — the soldiers of the army] That is, the Israelite army.

—— and smote three thousand of them,] Thus Amaziah was punished for having entered into an alliance with idolaters, although at the Prophet's reproof he broke it off: and God, it is

Before CHRIST about 827.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him a prophet, which said unto him, Why hast thou sought after the gods of the people, which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? forbear; why shouldest thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbare, and said, I know that God hath † determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then [c] Amaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us see one another in the face.

‖ Or, furze bush, or, thorn.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The ‖ thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by † a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

† Heb. a beast of the field.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites; and thine heart lifteth thee up to boast: abide now at home; why shouldest thou meddle to thine hurt, that thou shouldest fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

20 But Amaziah would not hear; for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.

Before CHRIST 826.

21 So Joash the king of Israel went up; and they saw one another in the face, both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

22 And Judah was † put to the worse before Israel, and they fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim to † the corner gate, four hundred cubits.

† Heb. the gate of it that looketh.

24 And he took all the gold and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

26 Now the rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel?

probable, also suffered this calamity to fall upon him, because he used his victory over the Edomites with too much cruelty. Bp. Patrick.

17. Then Amaziah — took advice,] Although he would not be advised by the Prophet, it appears that he consulted others, who led him to destruction; for he proceeded, without first desiring to have satisfaction made for the injury done to him, to make war on Joash king of Israel, and provoke him to battle. Bp. Patrick.

24. — with Obed-edom,] Who had the chief care of the treasures in the temple. Dr. Wells.

27. — after the time that Amaziah did turn away &c.] He survived Joash several years; but it appears he grew more and more hated by his subjects, and at enmity with God; so that at last a conspiracy was formed against him, under which he fell. Pyle.

In obedience to the command of God, Amaziah resigned the hundred talents; yet he lived in calamity, and died by violence and treason. Did the Lord God, the God of goodness and truth, forsake His servant? No: the Lord forsook Amaziah, because Amaziah drew back from being His servant. Amaziah, when he had destroyed the Edomites, brought with him to Jerusalem their idols; and with the infatuation, which belongs to presumptuous wickedness, set them up to be his gods, and burned incense to them, and worshipped them: yet the sword of Divine justice paused in its scabbard. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." The Lord, instead of immediately cutting off the king in the midst of his ingratitude and impiety, was mercifully pleased to send a Prophet, to rebuke him and call him to repentance, ver. 15. How did the king receive the message from God? When the former Prophet had delivered his message, Amaziah obeyed his command. But he now refused to humble himself before his Maker. His heart was obstinately fixed in apostasy. He charged the Prophet with insolent obtrusiveness for daring to reprove him; and ordered him to be silent on pain of punishment, ver. 16. Then the Prophet, perceiving him not to be reclaimed, pronounced his doom, "I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel." Hence followed the disastrous residue of his life, and his miserable end. And we may learn from his example, that no former acts of righteousness, no former sacrifices of present interest for conscience sake, will avail us as an excuse for indulging afterwards in sin. Gisborne.

Chap. XXVI. ver. 5. — in the days of Zechariah,] This is not the Zechariah, whose book of prophecies is extant in the Bible, for he lived 300 years afterwards; nor Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, who was slain some years before; but probably the son of the latter Zechariah, who was called after his father's name, and was eminent for his divine wisdom. It is not here said that he was a Prophet, but that he "had understanding in the visions of God," by which is probably meant, that he was skilful in expounding the ancient prophecies, and giving instruction out of them. Bp. Patrick.

6. And he went forth and warred &c.] From this verse to the 15th, the sacred writer shews by several instances how excellent a prince this was, and what prosperity God gave him while he was truly religious: for he shewed extreme solicitude for the welfare of his people; he was skilful in husbandry, but at the same time extremely active in warlike affairs, inasmuch as he prudently demolished the fortifications of his enemies on the frontiers, and provided his own frontiers with works, garrisons, arms, and engines of war. Thus his power became so formidable, that the Ammonites "gave gifts," ver. 8, to preserve his friendship, and "his name spread abroad," not only to the Philistines on the west, but to the Arabians and others on the east, and to the borders of Egypt on the south. Bp. Patrick.

10. Also he built towers] It has commonly been supposed that these towers were made for sheltering the shepherds from the bad weather, or for defending them from the incursions of the enemies. It may also be conjectured, that they were designed to keep the inhabitants who pastured there in subjection, and to induce them to pay quietly their tribute. William of Tyre mentions parts of the Eastern countries, inhabited by Armenian and Syrian Christians, who fed there prodigious flocks and herds, but were in subjection to the Turks, who, though few in number, yet lived in strong places, and thus kept the peasants in entire subjection. Harmer.

14. And Uzziah prepared for them throughout all the host shields, &c.] It deserves notice, that here seems to be the earliest mention on record of a magazine of military stores. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

15. — engines, — to shoot arrows and great stones] It appears from this passage that those authors must be mistaken who attribute the invention of the engine called the Balista, and other such, to the Greeks and Romans; since we have here an instance of their being employed in the East, before the Greeks had brought the military art to any great perfection. Perhaps Uzziah was the inventor of them, and on this account it is stated that "his name" was "spread abroad." It appears that from this time they began to be used in besieging and attacking towns; and therefore Ezekiel, when describing the future sieges of Jerusalem and Tyre, makes mention of engines of war. Calmet.

This is probably the earliest description on record of those engines, named by the Greeks and Romans Balistæ and Catapultæ; together with their use and application. Fragments to Calmet.

It appears that some of these engines were employed to shoot arrows, and others to cast great stones. The powers of various engines of this sort, as described by the ancients, were very great. Nonnius speaks of instruments, which threw stones of 100 or 120 pounds weight: Diodorus mentions a machine which threw stones of 360 pounds. The distance, to which they threw, is also surprising, since they reached to three stadia, or furlongs; perhaps even 16 ¶ But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and went into the temple of the LORD to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense: and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense altar.

to a mile distant: they could throw in one night 500 stones, and by day a thousand. They were employed likewise in battle. Tacitus mentions a battalion of the enemy, overthrown by a volley of great stones. These machines had no need of stores of iron, powder, sulphur, pitch, &c. but for the most part could find ammunition, wherever a fort was to be attacked, or a city besieged. *Script. illust. Expos. 16. But when he was strong, &c.] When the grandeur to which he was raised dazzled his eyes, and his pride in earthly glories made him forgetful of the laws of his infinite Benefactor. Pyle. How hard it is to bear great prosperity with moderation and humble thankfulness! Bp. Patrick.

How easy is it for the best of men to be swoln with admiration of their own strength and glory: to be lifted up so high, as to lose the sight both of the ground whence they rose, and of the hand that advanced them! Bp. Hall.

—— and went into the temple] What could tempt him to this folly, it is hard to explain: perhaps he had a vain ambition of imitating heathen princes, who in many places executed the priesthood. Bp. Patrick.

18. — It appertaineth not unto thee, &c.] What religious heart would not have relented at so faithful and just an expostulation of the priests! But how hard is it for great persons to yield to those whom they have offended: Uzziah will not allow himself to be faulty; that which was done rashly, must be borne out with power. Bp. Hall.

19. —and while he was wroth,—the leprosy even rose up] While Uzziah yet speaks, God strikes. Ere the words of fury come out of his mouth, the leprosy appears in his forehead. Had it broken forth on his hand, or foot, or breast, it might have been hid from the eyes of men; but now his forehead is smitten with this judgment, that God may proclaim to all beholders, 'Thus shall it be done to the man whose arrogance hath thrust him upon a sacred charge.' The hand of God hath now done in an instant what the tongues of men had attempted in vain. Bp. Hall.

It is a rule established beyond all controversy concerning the office of the ministry, that "no man taketh it unto himself," Heb. v. 4. Internal gifts and graces may qualify a person for an office, but they cannot put him into one. No man, however righteous and holy through faith and the sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit, can have authority to act in the name of Christ, till Christ gives him that authority. Before that is done, let his life and character be what they will, his ministrations can have no validity. Whatever he may be in other respects, in this particular he is a grievous offender, and will be found guilty before God of sacrilegiously intruding into an office, to which he can have no pretensions: a crime, for which "the leprosy" once "rose up in the forehead" of a monarch; and Korah and all his company, holy as they said they all were, "went down alive into the pit." And that none in the Christian church might imitate the presumption of Uzziah, or "go in the gainsaying of Korah," even Christ "took not this honour unto Himself, nor glorified Himself to be made an high priest," (for a glory it was to Him,) till he was "called of God," by the visible descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him in the presence of the people, and by the voice from heaven, saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—From that time Jesus began to preach," Matth. iii. 17; iv. 17. Who then is that follower of Jesus, that shall offer to begin before? Bp. Horne.

21. — dwelt in a several house, &c.] He dwelt in a separate house by himself, being excluded from all conversation with others, and from all management of publick affairs; thus "he was cut off from the house of the Lord," that is, precluded from entering it for religious worship, as a just punishment for his daring entrance into the most holy place, and his attempt to perform there what belonged to the high priest exclusively. Dr. Wells. Uzziah withdraws with a dejected countenance and heavy heart; and wishes to be hid no less from himself, than from others. How easy is it for the God of heaven to bring down the highest pitch of earthly greatness, and to humble the most stubborn pride! Bp. Hall.

23. — in the field of the burial] He was buried in a sepulchre by himself, and not in one where any former king had been buried; (Dr. Wells;) for it was not deemed proper or lawful to defile the royal sepulchres with a leprous body. Pyle.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 2. — howbeit he entered not into the temple] It is the opinion of some, that he was so alarmed by the punishment which had befallen his father, that he did not so much as enter into the court of the temple, or that he never offered sacrifices there, but only in high places. But a preferable meaning seems to be, that he imitated his father in all that was good, but did not profanely enter the temple to offer incense as he had done. Bp. Patrick.

—— And the people did yet corruptly.] A better translation may be, "Yet still the people did corruptly;" that is, the generality of the nation could not be weaned from their old custom of worshipping at their private altars in a superstitious manner. Pyle.

3. — the wall of Ophel] The meaning of this is uncertain: some understand by Ophel, "a palace;" others, "a high place or cliff, where there was a tower;" and others again understand from this expression, that he beautified and repaired the porch of the house of the Lord. Bp. Patrick.

6. — because he prepared his ways before the Lord] Because he directed his counsels and actions according to the rule of God's word. It has been observed, that Jotham is the only one of the kings of Judah who has not some evil laid to his charge. David, Solomon, Rehoboam, Abijah, Jehoshaphat, &c. all committed some trespass of greater or less magnitude; but of Jotham no fault or errour is recorded. Bp. Patrick.

ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you, even with you, sins against the LORD your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for the fierce wrath of the LORD is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war,

13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the LORD already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

19 For the LORD brought Judah low because of Ahaz king of Israel; for he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the LORD.

20 And Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: this is that king Ahaz.

—— a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.] Meaning, a rage that hath no measure, and that crieth to heaven for vengeance. Bp. Patrick.

10. —but are there not with you — sins] He desires them to consider, that they, who thought themselves God's favourites because He had made them victorious, had sins enough to answer for; for which, if He punished them as they deserved, they might be soon reduced to the same condition with their brethren of Judah. Bp. Patrick.

11. —the fierce wrath of the Lord is upon you.] It hence appears, that, though God uses one nation as the instrument of another's punishment, yet He does not approve of the inhumanities committed by an enemy. Bp. Wilson.

14. So the armed men &c.] Here was a wonderful instance of obedience, in restoring not only the captives which were valuable, but all the spoil also which was no doubt considerable; and a remarkable proof of the great power of the Prophet, that he turned the barbarous cruelty of the Israelites to the tenderest humanity. How lamentable it is, that they were not to be so easily converted from idolatry, to which their inclination was so strong, that nothing could persuade them to forsake it. Bp. Patrick. Thus compassionate was God towards the people of Judah, who so little deserved mercy at His hands. Pyle.

19. —because of Ahaz king of Israel;] King of Judah, which was a part of Israel. See note at chap. xxi. 2. We read six times "the king of Israel" thus put for "the king of Judah."—"For he made Judah naked," that is, deprived it of the divine protection by his foul transgressions. Bp. Patrick.

20. —distressed him, but strengthened him not.] At 2 Kings xvi. 9, it is said that Tiglath-pileser did help him; how then did he distress him? Both these are true; for, as he came to his assistance against the king of Syria, so he took Damascus, carried the people captive, and delivered Ahaz from the power of the Syrians, 2 Kings xvi. 7, &c. But this was of little real avail to Ahaz, for he assisted him not in recovering the cities taken from him by the Philistines, nor did he lend him any forces, or enable him to recruit his strength, but rather weakened him by exhausting his treasures, and by destroying Samaria, by which the way was opened for the more easy invasion of his country in the next reign. Thus, in all ages of history, instances have occurred in which the nations which have called in the assistance of foreign princes, have been overrun and conquered by those who came for purposes of friendship. Bp. Patrick.

22. —this is that king Ahaz.] The expression here in the Hebrew is an expression of great contempt, with which Ahaz well deserved to be branded, as the most notorious offender that had ever been among the kings of Judah. Bp. Patrick. In the disastrous condition in which he was, he was guilty of a piece of stupidity, not to be paralleled in any other, except in the weakest and wickedest of men, and took the most effectual steps to inflame the displeasure of God, ver. 24, and hasten the destruction of his kingdom. Pyle. "This is that king Ahaz;" it seems to be a particular brand set upon Ahaz, as a most grievous and notorious sinner, because "in the time of his distress he trespassed yet more," because affliction made him worse instead of better. Abp. Tillotson.

Of all the kings of Judah hitherto, there is no one so dreadful an example either of sin or judgment, as this son of good Jotham. It is horrible to think that such a monster could descend from the loins of David. Where should be the period of this wickedness? He begins with the high places, thence he descends to the calves of Dan and Beth-el, thence he falls to a Syrian altar, to the Syrian

No wonder if he be branded by the Spirit of God with, "This is that king Ahaz." Bp. Hall.

27. — they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings] The Israelites were accustomed to honour, in a peculiar manner, the memory of their good kings; but they inflicted marks of posthumous disgrace on their wicked kings, by not suffering them to be interred in the usual sepulchres of the sovereigns. This custom was singular; the effect must have been powerful and influential; it was doubtless intended to make a suitable impression on the minds of the kings while living. The Egyptians had a custom similar to this of holding an inquest on the bodies of persons when dead. The sovereign himself was not exempt from this inquest: as the publick peace was interested in their lives, it was deemed for the publick welfare that they should suffer an impartial scrutiny by a publick trial; and some of them were not ranked among the honoured dead, and consequently were deprived of publick burial. The conformity between this practice of the Egyptians, and the practice of the Israelites, incidentally noticed in Scripture, is remarkable. Burder.

Chap. XXIX. ver. 5. — Hear me, ye Levites,] In this religious and pathetick address, Hezekiah exhorts the Levites and priests to set immediately about cleansing the temple, and seeing all its apartments, vessels, and utensils, made fit for use, calling to their minds into what miseries and calamities the profaneness of former times had plunged the whole nation, and how the contempt of God and of holy duties had rendered the kingdom of Judah the very scorn and derision of men; and finally, how highly it became them, who were God's ministers, to be peculiarly zealous to unite all their endeavours with his for procuring a reformation, which was the only means of preventing their destruction. Pyle.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he goats, for a [e] sin offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and [d] sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and the sin offering should be made for all Israel.

25 [f] And he set the Levites in the house of the LORD with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet: for so was the commandment † of the LORD † by his prophets.

30 Moreover Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the LORD with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said,

16. — into the inner part of the house] That is, into the holy place, for into the most holy none but the high priest might enter. By "the court of the house of the Lord" is meant the court of the priests, where the Levites attended upon them and ministered unto them. Bp. Patrick.

21. — to offer them on the altar] There are two laws in the books of Moses, requiring a sacrifice to be offered for the sins of the whole congregation; the one at Lev. iv. 13, 14, where a bullock was required for sins into which they had ignorantly fallen; the other at Numb. xv. 22, where the sacrifice of a goat as a sin offering is commanded, together with that of a bullock as a burnt offering, when they had fallen into errour in the practice of external rites. Now Hezekiah, being sensible that the people had not only acted contrary to their religion, but had in fact abolished it, by closing the doors of their temple, and omitting the appointed sacrifices, and every where exercising strange worship, appointed seven bullocks for a burnt offering, and as many goats for a sin offering, (though the law never required more than one,) thinking that these numerous sacrifices (together with the rams and lambs) were, if not necessary, at least very becoming, on account of the great and long neglect of the Divine service, and of the multitude and heinousness of their other sins against the Lord, for which they now required forgiveness. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST 726.

Now ye have ‖ consecrated yourselves unto the LORD, come near and bring sacrifices and thank offerings into the house of the LORD. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank offerings; and as many as were of a free heart burnt offerings.

32 And the number of the burnt offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, an hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt offering to the LORD.

33 And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt offerings: wherefore their brethren the Levites † did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: for the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt offerings were in abundance, with the fat of the peace offerings, and the drink offerings for every burnt offering. So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.

CHAP. XXX.

1 Hezekiah proclaimeth a solemn passover on the second month for Judah and Israel. 13 The assembly, having destroyed the altars of idolatry, keep the feast fourteen days. 27 The priests and Levites bless the people.

Before CHRIST 726.

AND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

2 For the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second [a] month.

[a] Numb. 9. 10, 11.

3 For they could not keep it at that time, because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing † pleased the king and all the congregation.

5 So they established a decree to make proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts went with the letters † from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, that are escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.

7 And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against

---

31. — brought in sacrifices and thank offerings;] The sacrifices of expiation being now ended, the king desired the assembly to present such other sacrifices as they had prepared, by way of thanksgiving and acknowledgment to God, or for the entertainment of themselves and their friends. Some of these were burnt offerings, and, as such, were wholly consumed on the altar; but part of them were peace offerings, and feasted upon by the offerers, as the law permitted. Pyle.

33. — the consecrated things] That is, the things otherwise devoted to the service of God. Dr. Wells.

34. — the priests were too few,] The reason of this was, that a great many priests, tainted with the corruptions of the foregoing reign, had neglected the king's order, and did not appear prepared for the service; whereupon, as the Levites were far more zealous for the reformation, they were appointed to supply the defects of the priests, at this time, by assisting in several matters that usually belonged to the priests. Pyle.

Chap. XXX. ver. 1. — to Ephraim and Manasseh,] This expression seems to imply that, while Hezekiah sent messages to all the tribes, he sent more particularly to these two tribes, being the nearest to him, and many of them having settled themselves in the land of Judah, in the reign of Asa, chap. xv. 9. Bp. Patrick.

2. — to keep the passover in the second month.] The late king had caused such confusion in religious matters, and many of the priests and people had been so long unaccustomed to the holy services, that the preparations for the passover could not be made by the time appointed by the law, the first month, ver. 3; and accordingly it was resolved to defer it till the second, without the least apprehension of the displeasure of God, who, they knew, had dispensed on like occasions with such ritual observances. See Numb. ix. 11. Pyle.

The ten tribes had never kept the passover, in such a manner as the law prescribed, since the division of the kingdom under Jeroboam; and it appears from ver. 26, that the tribe of Judah had never kept it with such solemnity since the time of Solomon. Bp. Patrick.

5. — proclamation throughout all Israel,] We may reasonably suppose that this took place with the consent of Hoshea king of Israel; for he has the best character given of him of all the kings of Israel: and, though "he did evil in the sight of the Lord," 2 Kings xvii. 2, yet it is added in the next words, "but not as the kings of Israel that were before him;" which probably implies, that he did not prevent his subjects from attending their Divine worship at Jerusalem, as other kings had done. Dr. Wells. We should remark, as an extraordinary instance of God's goodness to His sinful people in the ten tribes, that He raised up at the very last, when they were ripe for destruction, such a king to reign over them, who did not prevent those of his subjects, who were disposed, from going to worship at Jerusalem. Bp. Patrick. The two golden calves which Jeroboam had set up were at this time taken away; that at Dan by Tiglath-pileser, and the other by Shalmaneser: on this account, the Israelites were probably better disposed at this time to go up to Jerusalem for publick worship. Bp Wilson.

the LORD God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation, as ye see.

8 Now † be ye not stiff necked, as your fathers were, but † yield yourselves unto the LORD, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever: and serve the LORD your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is [b] gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

[b] Exod. 34. 6.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the LORD.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose and took away the [c] altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

[c] Chap. 28. 24.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in † their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

Before CHRIST 726.

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written. But Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good LORD pardon every one

19 That prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.

21 And the children of Israel that were † present at Jerusalem kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness: and the Levites and the priests praised the LORD day by day, singing with † loud instruments unto the LORD.

22 And Hezekiah spake † comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the LORD: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace offerings, and making confession to the LORD God of their fathers.

† Heb. to the heart of all, &c.

23 And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah † did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose

12. — by the word of the Lord.] They considered the command of the king and the princes on this occasion to be as a Divine command; and so it appeared to be by the mighty power of God, which wrought their hearts to a cheerful obedience. Bp. Patrick.

14. — took away the altars] They first destroyed all the superstitious altars and images which were used for purposes of idolatry. Pyle.

17. For there were many in the congregation &c.] It was found that many of the Israelites who came up from the ten tribes to celebrate this festival, had, through long ignorance and disuse, forgotten to prepare themselves for it by certain ceremonial purifications, required by the law; but, as they appeared to come with a sincere disposition of mind towards the service of God, they were admitted to all the services, ver. 18, the king himself putting up his prayers to God, to excuse them in this matter; and accordingly their devotions were accepted, ver. 20. Pyle.

20. — and healed the people.] That is, granted them pardon, and freed them from the guilt of sin. Bp. Patrick.

NOW when all this was finished, all Israel that were † present went out to the cities of Judah, and [a] brake the † images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh, † until they had utterly destroyed them all. unto every one that entereth (that is, that might enter) into the house of the Lord" with their fathers, when they came to wait in their courses, there was allowed in the temple a due portion to each priest and Levite, with his male children that came with him. Dr. Wells. Those males, that were three years old and upwards, were allowed to come into the temple with their parents, and in the distribution these were provided for, the others being passed over. Bp. Patrick.

17. —from twenty years old &c.] These words relate not to the priests, but to the Levites only, who, according to the law of Moses, were not obliged to enter on their functions till they were thirty years old, Numb. iv. 3. But David, in the latter end of his reign, a little before the building of the temple, admitted them to officiate at the age of twenty years, 1 Chron. xxiii. 27. Bp. Patrick.

18. And to the genealogy of all their little ones, &c.] The abovementioned officers gave to every family their portion; not only to the priests, but to their wives and children, of whom (as it here appears) an exact register was kept, according to which the distribution was made.

——for in their set office they sanctified themselves &c.] Rather, according to the Hebrew, "in faith," or "with fidelity, they sanctified themselves in holiness;" that is, they attended on their ministry in the house of God, not doubting but that a good and sufficient maintenance would be provided for them and their families. *Bp. 9. —this did Sennacherib &c.] As is related at 2 Kings xviii. Hezekiah bought his peace with Sennacherib in the first instance; but the faithless Assyrian afterwards returned with his whole army against the land of Judah, and sent the insulting message following, ver. 10—16, which is there given more at length.

Before CHRIST 710.

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

16 And his servants spake yet more against the LORD God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He wrote also letters to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they cried with a loud voice in the Jews' speech unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spake against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.

20 And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

Before CHRIST 710.

25. But Hezekiah rendered not again &c.] Hezekiah, though relieved from his dangerous sickness in a very extraordinary manner, and with miraculous evidences of the hand of God in his behalf, was not so humble, or so grateful for the Divine mercies as he ought to have been; but imprudently boasted of his wealth, and prided himself in the compliments of the king of Babylon. Being however made sensible of the evil consequences of his folly by a severe reproof from the Prophet, he repented heartily of it, and died in peace. These particulars are more largely related at 2 Kings xx, and Is. xxxviii, xxxix. Pyle.

This is here particularly noticed as a great blot in the character of Hezekiah. God takes very severe notice of all the unkind and unworthy returns that are made to Him for His goodness. Abp. Tillotson.

30. —stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon,] The sacred writer perhaps speaks here of the same circumstance which had been mentioned at ver. 4; which, being a work of great labour and art, he thinks fit again to notice among Hezekiah's memorable works. It is not known whether Gihon was a hill, or a

1 Manasseh's wicked reign. 3 He setteth up idolatry, and would not be admonished. 11 He is carried into Babylon. 12 Upon his prayer to God he is released, and putteth down idolatry. 18 His acts. 20 He dying, Amon succeedeth him. 21 Amon reigning wickedly is slain by his servants. 25 The murderers being slain, Josiah succeedeth him.

[a] 2 Kings 21. 1, &c. MANASSEH [a] was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem:

[b] Deut. 18. 9. 2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, like unto the [b] abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

† Heb. he returned and built. [c] 2 Kings 18. 4. 3 ¶ For † he built again the high places which Hezekiah his father had [c] broken down, and he reared up altars for Baalim, and made groves, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

Before CHRIST 698. 4 Also he built altars in the house of the LORD, whereof the LORD had said, [d] In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever.

[d] Deut. 12. 11. 1 Kings 8. 29. & 9. 3. chap. 6. 6. & 7. 16. 5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And he caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God, of which God had said to David and to Solomon his son, In [e] this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

9 So Manasseh made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen, whom the LORD had destroyed before the children of Israel.

fountain, the head of a stream. Some think it was the name, not only of a fountain, but also of an adjoining hill; the situation of which is, from the passage now before us, generally assigned to be near mount Zion, and on the west side of it. Dr. Wells.

31. Howbeit in the business &c.] Which is mentioned at large, 2 Kings xx. 12; Is. xxxix. 1.

—— God left him, to try him, &c.] God left him wholly to the inclinations of his own heart, that he might have a trial of its corruption when left to itself, that so he might be led to entertain a humble opinion of his own piety, and to behave himself in a lowly and thankful manner towards God, for all the good he was enabled to do. Dr. Wells. In this circumstance of his life was the most remarkable instance of Hezekiah's miscarriage; a case which tried his heart to the bottom, and may well serve to shew us how apt the greatest men are to be dazzled by temporal grandeur, without the utmost care and watchfulness over themselves. Pyle.

—— to try him,] That is, to shew him to himself, that he might see his own weakness, and be more humbled. Bp. Wilson.

Chap. XXXIII. ver. 9. — and to do worse than the heathen,] A most prodigious and unhappy change is this, from the height of piety in the father's time, to the worst and most degrading impiety. Bp. Patrick.

11. Wherefore the Lord brought upon them] These remarkable circumstances in the life of Manasseh were not mentioned in the book of Kings. In what year of his reign his captivity took place, and what were the circumstances and duration of it, is not related. Thus much we find here recorded, that his adversity opened his eyes to his miscarriages and impieties, and in the bitterness of his soul he sent up so many deep sighs and earnest prayers to heaven, that he at length obtained his pardon, and a happy deliverance out of captivity. After this, (see ver. 12, &c.) from the greatest sinner he became the greatest penitent; and from the bloodiest tyrant, one of the best of monarchs; so that, after his return, be bestowed his whole time and application in repairing the damages which his impiety had caused, both in religion and in his government. Universal History.

—— took Manasseh among the thorns,] Took him in a thicket, where he had hid himself after his defeat. Bp. Patrick. Some old translations give the sense, "Took Manasseh in chains, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon." This sense is by the thorns, and bound him with ‖ fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

12 And when he was in affliction, he besought the LORD his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and he was intreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the LORD he was God.

14 Now after this he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at the fish gate, and compassed about ‖ Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And he took away the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon peace offerings and thank offerings, and commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.

17 Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

Before CHRIST 677.

18 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and his prayer unto his God, and the words of the seers that spake to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel.

19 His prayer also, and how God was intreated of him, and all his sins, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, before he was humbled: behold, they are written among the sayings of ‖ the seers.

20 ¶ So Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ [s] Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

[s] 2 Kings 21. 19, &c.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them; many supposed to be the true sense, from its being deemed improbable that such a circumstance as his being taken by his enemies "among the thorns" should be mentioned in Scripture. Dr. Wall.

12. — when he was in affliction, he besought the Lord] Manasseh might now say with his grandfather David, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted." His prison was now a more happy place for him than his palace; Babylon a better school than Jerusalem. What fools are we to frown on our afflictions! These, how severe soever, are our best friends. They are not indeed for our present pleasure, but they are for our lasting profit. Bp. Hall.

13. — and he was intreated of him,] We wonder not at Manasseh sinning or repenting; we wonder at the goodness of God, who thus graciously called him to repent, and so received him repenting; that, as he had before been a most loathsome and monstrous spectacle of wickedness, he now became a pleasing and useful pattern of conversion. Who can despair of the mercy of God that sees the tears of a Manasseh accepted? The wickedness of men can never equal the goodness of God. Bp. Hall.

—— Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God.] Foolish sinners pay dear for their knowledge. Till his own smart and cure, Manasseh knew not that the Lord was God. The Almighty will be sure to be known for what He is, if not by His kindness, at least by His severity. If our prosperity and peace and sweet experience of His mercy can win us to acknowledge Him, it is more for our ease; but if we will needs be taught by stripes, it is more for His glory. Bp. Hall.

The repentance of Manasseh should be well considered, as it represents on one hand the necessity and advantage of afflictions, and on the other affords us an extraordinary instance of God's mercy to the greatest sinners, when they humble themselves and make a good use of their corrections. Let us likewise seriously attend to Manasseh's behaviour after his restoration, which was directly opposite to his former conduct; for during a long reign he remedied the faults he had committed in his youth. True repentance consists in removing and remedying, as much as possible, the evil we have done, and in amending our lives. That we may the better enter into these reflections, we should add to the reading of this chapter, the prayer which Manasseh made while a captive in Babylon, which we find in the Apocryphal books. Ostervald.

15. — he took away the strange gods, &c.] He had profaned the house of the Lord, but had not shut the doors, as Ahaz did; therefore he is said only to have purged it from idols, and not to have opened it. "The idol" is that which he is related at ver. 7. to have made. Bp. Patrick.

16. — commanded Judah to serve the Lord] This was a proof of the sincerity of his repentance, that he endeavoured to bring his people back to the service of God, whom he himself had misled to the service of idols. But, unhappily, he was unable wholly to undo the mischief he had caused: for the people still continued their evil inclinations, and were not perfect in their obedience to the Divine law, ver. 17. Bp. Patrick.

19. His prayer also,] This evidently alludes to some prayer of his composing, which was kept on record. Accordingly, we have among the Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, "the Prayer of Manasseh," which perhaps is that to which allusion is made; it expresses in the strongest possible terms the greatness of his guilt, misery, and repentance. Universal History.

—— the sayings of the seers.] Bruce informs us, that in Abyssinia "the king has near his person an officer, who is meant to be his historiographer. He is also keeper of his seal; and is obliged to make a journal of the king's actions, good or bad, without comment of his own upon them. This, when the king dies, or at least soon after, is delivered to the council, who read it over, and erase every thing false in it, whilst they supply every material fact that may have been omitted, whether purposely or not." It is not improbable that "the king's seer," 1 Chron. xxi. 9; xxv. 5; 2 Chron. xxv. 15, &c. may have been the person who occupied the post of regal historiographer; whence other writers of memoirs might also be called "seers:" this opinion is corroborated by what is here said of Manasseh. It is remarkable that the title "seer" occurs principally, if not altogether, under the regal government of Israel. Fragments to Calmet.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest, they delivered the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and they returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house:

Chap. XXXV. ver. 1. — Josiah kept a passover] This celebration of the passover is here detailed at some length, which was briefly mentioned at 2 Kings xxiii. 21, 22.

3. — Put the holy ark in the house] It is the opinion of some, that Manasseh or his son Amon had removed the ark from its place, among other enormities of which they were guilty; and

Before CHRIST about 623.

[a] Heb. offered.

7 And Josiah † gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

[a] Heb. offered.

8 And his princes † gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah and Zechariah and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the passover offerings two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

11 And they killed the passover, and the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites [c] flayed them.

[c] see chap. 29. 34.

12 And they removed the burnt offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, as it is written in the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph were in their † place, according to the [g] commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and the porters [h] waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service: for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

this may be the meaning of the words at 2 Chron. xxxiii. 23. "Amon trespassed more and more." But it is perhaps a more probable supposition, that Hilkiah himself had removed the ark while the temple was repairing as the most holy place, as well as other parts, might require reparation, and it was not fit to suffer the ark to be exposed to the workmen. Bp. Patrick.

18 — there was no passover like to this] This was the largest passover feast, if we consider it with respect to the king's generosity, that ever was celebrated, from the first beginning of the Israelitish monarchy, in the days of the prophet Samuel the Prophet, to this time. For, although such wealthier monarchs as David and Solomon might keep greater festivals as to numbers of people and sacrifices, yet none of them treated the people at their own cost, in so liberal and zealous a manner, as this prince did, nor had the whole nation so unanimously concurring in the measure. Pyle.

20. After all this, &c.] Some time after this, when the temple was repaired and made fit for the service of God, and the people had a reasonable expectation of great happiness to ensue after such pious works, there came a most unforeseen change, which is here perhaps noted particularly to teach us, never to be too confident, nor rashly to engage in any enterprise, bearing in mind the uncertainty of all earthly affairs. *Bp. 21. —for God commanded me to make haste:] Some think that the king of Egypt made this pretence because he knew that Josiah had a great reverence towards God; and, in obedience to Him, might desist from his purpose. Or perhaps he meant, that he felt a strong impulse to the undertaking, which he took to be from God. Bp. Patrick. Or, by "God" he means the oracles which he himself consulted as divine. *Bp. 25. —they are written in the lamentations.] The lamentations here mentioned, written immediately after the death of Josiah, are now lost. 15. — rising up betimes,] To "rise betimes" signifies in Scripture to do a thing with care, diligence, and affection: for good fathers of families, from whom this expression is taken, were wont to get up early to look after their business, and to quicken and encourage their servants to their duty. Such was the compassion and care of God for His people, that He gave them seasonable and timely admonitions to their duty, and notice of their danger, before it was too late. To this compassion and care of God it was owing that they were blessed with a succession of Prophets in the reign of every king, who most earnestly called upon them to reform. Yet, so strange was their unhappy propensity to idolatry, that, even when, under a good king, they became a little better, they soon relapsed, on the succession of a wicked king, into their former evil courses. Bp. Patrick.

16. But they mocked the messengers of God, &c.] That which made the calamities of the Israelites incurable, was their continual mocking or despising the messengers of their peace, which God sent from time to time to heal them. So that the calamities which ensued were not the end intended by God, in sending His messengers to them, but the fruit and effect of their mocking and despising both physicians and medicines. Dr. Jackson.

21. — until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths:] During this period, the land of Judah, together with that of Israel, whose inhabitants had so grossly neglected to observe the sabbaths, and other ordinances of their happy religion and constitution, was left to keep sabbaths in the melancholy sense of the word, that is, to lie uncultivated in rest and silent desolation, as the Prophet Jeremiah foretold, (Jer. xxv. 9, 12, &c.) and as Moses had long ago foretold, Levit. xxvi. 33—35. Pyle.

It should be observed, that in this very expression of the land enjoying her sabbaths, the promise of a restoration is conveyed. For the expression implies merely a temporary rest, and not a total dereliction. Dr. Berriman.

—— she kept sabbath,] Thus was the land left desolate, that it might enjoy its sabbatical years of rest, of which it had been defrauded by the avarice and disobedience of the Jews, fulfilling the early denunciation of Moses, Levit. xxvi. 34, and the later of Jeremiah, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21; and it is truly remarkable, that Nebuchadnezzar left it in that state, and did not attempt again to people it, as the policy of the kings of Assyria had led them to do in Samaria. The land therefore lay still vacant for their reception against their return; the providence of the God of Judah insensibly overruling the counsels and decrees of that haughty and arrogant conqueror, whom He had raised up to be the scourge of His chosen people, when their apostasies and abominations rendered them unworthy of His tutelar care and protection; and they were transported into captivity "for their good," Jer. xxiv. 5. There they were cured of the idolatrous infection they had imbibed in Egypt, and renewed in Canaan, in the course of seventy years; when the remnant that returned were purified in the furnace of affliction, and had purged away a part of their dross, Isai. i. 25. Dr. Hales.

—— to fulfil threescore and ten years.] This calamitous punishment was to continue for the space of seventy years, till the period when the Babylonian empire was to end, and the Persian to begin. Accordingly, on the very first year of the conquest of Babylon (where the Jews remained captive) by the great Cyrus, and of his residing in that city, ver. 22, 23, the just and merciful Providence of Heaven so ordered it, from many concurring circumstances, that this emperour, being well inclined to favour this captive people, issued a proclamation of licence and authority for them all to return to their own country; declaring himself obliged by the same great good-will of Heaven which had bestowed the universal empire on him, to assist this nation, restore them to their ancient habitation, and by his protection enable them to rebuild their famous temple at Jerusalem. Accordingly, he not only permitted, but encouraged the Jews of all descriptions to return home and set about that work, with all hearty wishes for their prosperity therein. Pyle.

22. Now in the first year of Cyrus &c.] These last verses of Chronicles are the same as those which begin the ensuing book of Ezra. It seems probable that Ezra, having some years before written the book that bears his name, and afterwards writing these books of Chronicles, which contain the genealogies and history ending at the time when the other began, annexed to the end of these books the first paragraph of that. Dr. Wall.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS book derives its name from Ezra, the author of it. It begins with the repetition of the last two verses of the second book of Chronicles, and carries the Jewish history through a period of seventy-nine years, commencing from the edict of Cyrus. The first six chapters contain an account of the return of the Jews under Zerubbabel, after the captivity of seventy years; of their re-establishment in Judea, and of the building and dedication of the temple at Jerusalem. In the last four chapters Ezra relates his own appointment to the government of Judea by Artaxerxes Longimanus; his journey thither from Babylon; the disobedience of the Jews; and the reform which he immediately effected among them. It is to be observed, that between the dedication of the temple and the departure of Ezra, that is, between the 6th and 7th chapters of this book, there was an interval of about fifty-eight years, during which nothing is here related concerning the Jews, except that, contrary to God's command, they intermarried with Gentiles.

This book is written in Chaldee from the 8th verse of the 4th chapter to the 27th verse of the 7th chapter. It is probable that the sacred historian used the Chaldee language in this part of his work, because it contains chiefly letters and decrees written in that language, the original words of which he might think it right to record; and indeed the people, who were recently returned from the Babylonian captivity, were at least as familiar with the Chaldee, as they were with the Hebrew tongue.

This book is written with all the spirit and fidelity that could be displayed by a writer of contemporary events. The sacred writers pass over the time of the captivity as a sad period of affliction and punishment: during which, if the people were indulged in the exercise of their religion, they had few historical events to record; and therefore we have no general history of their circumstances; and must have recourse to the books of those illustrious Prophets who flourished among them in Assyria, for the only particulars that can be obtained concerning their condition.

Ezra was of the sacerdotal family, a descendant of Seraiah in a right line from Aaron. He succeeded Zerubbabel in the government of Judea, by a commission which lasted twelve years, to the year of the world 3558; at the expiration of which term, he either returned to Babylon to give an account of the state of the province of Judea, or else retired into a private station in his own country; co-operating, doubtless, in the pious designs of Nehemiah his successor, by whom he is related soon after to have produced and read the law of Moses to the people. Ezra indeed appears to have been particularly well skilled in the law, to have given much attention to the study of the Scriptures, and to have been well versed in the interpretation of them. He styles himself a ready scribe, and professes to have prepared himself to instruct the people in the statutes of God: the tradition, therefore, of his having made a collection of the sacred writings is extremely probable. We know indeed from Josephus, that the Jewish priests after every important war were accustomed, on the establishment of peace, both at home and abroad publickly to ascertain, recognise, and copy out the registers of the priesthood, by which we must either understand the Scriptures, or believe that the same practice prevailed as to them.

Ezra was a most useful person to the Jews, who reverence his memory with a regard almost equal to that which they entertain for Moses. He is not particularly styled a Prophet in Scripture; but our Saviour makes no distinction between the authors of the sacred books, except that of "Moses and the Prophets." He was undoubtedly an appointed minister of God; and he wrote under the influence of the Holy Spirit, or his book would not have been admitted into the Hebrew canon, or received as sacred from the earliest ages of the Christian church. He is reported by some traditionary accounts to have died in the 120th year of his age, and to have been buried at Jerusalem; though others say that he died in Persia, and was buried on the banks of the river Semura; where his tomb is shewn. Bp. Tomline, Dr. Gray.

It was during the captivity of the Jews, and their consequent dispersion among the inhabitants of the most illustrious empire in the civilized world, that God principally employed them as the means of exciting the attention of the heathen to His majesty and His providence. By the prophetick denunciations of Jeremiah, which were so publick and decided as to attract the notice of the Assyrian army and their mighty monarch, Jer. xxxix, xl, the captivity of Judah glorified God amongst the heathen, even at its commencement. But, during its continuance, God employed various means to convince the Gentiles of His universal providence, and His resistless power. He raised up Daniel, whose prophetick spirit exalted him to the highest distinction under Nebuchadnezzar, and Darius the Mede: He rescued the three illustrious friends of Daniel from the burning fiery furnace, into which they were plunged as martyrs for the worship of Jehovah, in opposition to the profanations of idolatry. He preserved Daniel himself from the den of lions, to which he was condemned for the same glorious cause, and punished the proud impiety of Nebuchadnezzar by a seven years' insanity and degradation from his throne, to which he was restored, only when with the return of his reason he became pious, and submitted to pay solemn and publick homage to the God of Israel. Thus also, at the moment when Belshazzar was insulting Jehovah, by bringing forth the consecrated vessels of His temple to be polluted by his profanation, the miraculous hand-writing on the wall mixed with horrour his impious revelling, and announced his own impending destruction, and the downfal of his empire. These were not obscure or doubtful transactions; but, attested by the authentick decrees of the most distinguished monarchs, were solemnly proclaimed through their wide extended dominions: particularly in the instances of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iii. 29; iv. 1, 37; and of Darius, Dan. vi. 25. And, to crown this series of miraculous interpositions on the one hand, and of publick homage to the majesty of Jehovah on the other, from the most distinguished monarchs of the Eastern world, the great Cyrus, founder of the Persian empire, was so fully persuaded of that Divine Providence, whose Spirit had dictated the prophecies, pointing out so clearly the progress, nay the particular mode of his successes, that he became the active assistant in the restoration of the chosen people to their country. These solemn and publick testimonies to the majesty of the God of Israel, must have contributed materially to check errour and idolatry, in a country where the form of the government rendered the examples and opinions of the monarchs so powerful and operative. They must have gained to the Jews, even in their captive and degraded state, much consideration and attention: and, as such a state led them to take pride in their religious superiority, the only superiority now left to them, and to exalt the Divine original and the wisdom of their religion, so these events must have given weight and credibility to these representations. Dr. Graves.

Chap. I. ver. 1. Now in the first year of Cyrus &c.] This is that famous Cyrus, who, 140 years before the temple was destroyed, and 200 years before he was born, was mentioned by name in the prophecy of Isaiah, as designed by God for the restoration of His people, Isai. xliv. 28; xlv. 1—4. Bp. Patrick.

The period of seventy years, the determined time of the Jewish captivity under the Assyrian monarchy, being now expired, the deliverance of that nation began to be wrought, agreeably to the manner foretold by the Prophet Jeremiah, Jer. xxv. 12; xxix. 10. For Cyrus the Great, having now subdued Babylon, and erected the Persian empire on the destruction of that of Assyria, and, upon the first year of his settlement in Babylon conversing with Daniel, and being by his means acquainted with those prophecies of Isaiah, in which he saw himself, by name, described as the instrument of God for pulling down the Assyrian power, and restoring the Jewish nation to their temple and to their ancient land again, was so affected with the discovery, and so well disposed to the captive people, that, the very same year, he issued a proclamation in their favour. Pyle.

There are four decrees given by the kings of Persia in favour of the Jews: The first by Cyrus in the year B. C. 536, Ezra i. 1: the second by Darius, Ezra vi. 8: the third by Artaxerxes in the seventh year of his reign, Ezra vii. 11: the fourth by the same Artaxerxes to Nehemiah, chap. ii. in the twentieth year of his reign. Bp. Wilson.

——the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus] God, who had so long designed him for this work, suggested these thoughts to him, and excited him to prosecute them. Bp. Patrick.

We may well conceive that Cyrus, having in his late expedition into Syria and Palestine seen so large and good a country as Judea lying wholly desolate, might justly be moved with the desire of having it again inhabited. And who could be more proper to plant again this desolated country, than its former inhabitants? But, whatever second causes worked to this event, God's overruling power, which turns the hearts of princes as He pleases, brought it thus to pass, that, in the first year of Cyrus's monarchy over the East, he issued his royal decree. Dean Prideaux.

It is said that God "stirred up the spirit of Cyrus" to issue this decree: we may conclude He did this by the wise counsel of Daniel; first, to fulfil the prophecy of Jeremiah, ch. xxv. 11, this being the year of the expiration of the captivity, which Daniel had computed before, Dan. ix. 2; and secondly, to fulfil the prophecy of Isaiah respecting the rebuilding of the temple, ch. xliv. 28, to which Cyrus in his decree manifestly alludes. Dr. Hales. We have here a remarkable account of a heathen prince performing God's will and decrees; which should make us evermore depend on His goodness, and on His promises of help to those who seek Him in their distress. Bp. Wilson.

2.—The Lord God of heaven] It is observable, that whereas before the captivity we find God usually styled in Scripture by the name of "the Lord of hosts;" so the constant style of the holy books after the captivity is "the God of heaven," as here, and chap. vi. 10; vii. 21. Jos. Mede.

It has been made a question, whether Cyrus himself wrote this proclamation, in which the God of the Jews is acknowledged to be "the Lord God of heaven," or whether it was drawn up by some of the Jews who attended upon him. It seems by far the most probable, that God, who raised up the spirit of Cyrus to be a peculiar instrument in freeing His people from slavery, enlightened his mind to understand that there was but one only God, whom the Jews worshipped, and who spake in those holy books which were shewn to him. Bp. Patrick.

——he hath charged me to build him an house] So he understood from Isaiah's prophecies; and, most distinctly, from chap. xliv. 28, "He shall say to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Bp. Patrick.

Since Daniel was at Babylon when Cyrus took possession of that city, and is said to have prospered there, not only in the reign of Darius, but also in that of Cyrus the Persian, Dan. i. 21; vi. 28; it is hardly possible to believe that the prophecies of Isaiah here referred to were not shewn by him to the new monarch. Bp. Horne.

4.—let the men of his place] "Let my officers there &c." Dr. Wells.

5. Then rose up the chief of &c.] On the proclamation of Cyrus, a considerable number of the Israelites resolved to venture back into the land of their fathers, out of love to their country, and zeal for the true worship of God; though the far greater part, being settled in the Babylonish territories with their wives and families, had not courage to venture on a journey into a land which had so long lain waste and desolate. The principal heads of those who now returned were of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, though there were some of the other tribes mixed with them. Pyle.

7. Also Cyrus—brought forth the vessels] It had been expressly foretold at Jer. xxvii. 22, that the sacred vessels should be restored to the house of God. It happened by a singular providence that these vessels had been preserved to this time; they were looked upon by Nebuchadnezzar as sacred things, which he would not turn to his own private use, but dedicated to his gods; and this was the means of their preservation. Bp. Patrick.

8. — Sheshbazzar,] The Babylonish name of Zerubbabel; which is found by comparing Ezra v. 16, with Zech. iv. 9. It was common during the captivity for the principal Jews to bear two names, the one Jewish, the other Babylonian. Daniel was thus called Belteshazzar; and Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah received the names of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, Dan. i. 7. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — the children of the province] The Jews are here called the "children of the province," either because they had been for a long time part of the province of Babylon, in common with the other subjects of Assyria; or, as originally belonging to Judea, which had been made an Assyrian province ever since the captivity. Pyle.

—— of those which had been carried away,] Of those whose parents and ancestors had been carried away. Bp. Patrick.

2. — Jeshua, Nehemiah, &c.] Jeshua was the high priest, and, as such, is mentioned before the rest; he held the office by lineal descent, being grandson of Seraiah, who was high priest when Jerusalem was destroyed, and was put to death by Nebuchadnezzar. It is to be observed, that Nehemiah and Mordecai, here mentioned, were not the Nehemiah and Mordecai of whom we read so much in the books of Nehemiah and Esther, but others of the same names. Dean Prideaux.

3. The children of Parosh, &c.] The numbers mentioned in the ensuing catalogue belonged chiefly to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; some of them being denominated from the chief ancestors of their families, and others from the places or great towns which they formerly inhabited in those two tribes. It is probable that all who are here set down gave in their names as intending to return to Judea, though some of them might change their intentions, or die by the way; and others, who are not in this register, might afterward join themselves to the number; which is the most probable reason of the differences in the numbers here given by Ezra, and those given by Nehemiah. 36. The priests: the children of Jedaiah, &c.] It hence appears, that, of the twenty-four courses of the priests that were carried away to Babylon, only four returned, making a number of about 4289 persons; the rest being either extinct, or staying behind. But, of these four which now returned, each subdivided themselves in such a manner, that the twenty-four courses were made up again, and retained the same titles which were held before. Dean Prideaux, Pyle.

43. The Nethinims:] See note at 1 Chron. ix. 2.

55. The children of Solomon's servants:] These are supposed to have been descendants of artificers, who were employed in the building of Solomon's temple; and who, becoming proselytes, were, with their children and posterity, appointed by Solomon for its perpetual conservation and reparation. Bp. Patrick.

59. And these were they &c.] The persons here mentioned, as coming out from several towns of Chaldea or Mesopotamia, were probably Israelites, descendants of some of the ten tribes, who, having been carried away captive long before the captivity of Judah, had by length of time, or by some other misfortune, lost the genealogy of their families, and so could not claim a settlement and particular possessions in the land, as the other Israelites did; but still were desirous of living amongst them, and of seeing the worship of God restored. Pyle.

61. — and was called after their name:] This person, it appears, thought it so great an honour to be descended from so noble a family as that of Barzillai, that he chose to be called by that name, which he preferred to his own in the family of the priests; by which vain ambition he lost his title to the priesthood, because he could not regularly make out his descent from the line of the priests. *Bp. —— that they should not eat of the most holy things,] That is, that they should not partake of the sacrifices offered for sin, nor of the right shoulder of the peace offerings, nor of the shewbread, which were all most holy, and the portion of the priests alone. This shews that "the Tirshatha" possessed great power and authority over them, being able to impose such a restraint on those who had been reputed priests. Bp. Patrick.

—— till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.] Till there might stand up a priest who could pronounce whether these persons were of the line of Aaron or not, from the revelation of the Divine will by Urim and Thummim. Bp. Patrick.

It is evident from this passage, that the Urim and Thummim of the former temple were either burnt with it, or at least lost before this time: whether they were ever afterwards restored, that is, whether God ever raised up a priest after the captivity to whom He declared His will by Urim and Thummim, we are no where informed in holy writ. It is the general tradition of the Jews, that God never did declare His will in this way to any priest after the Babylonish captivity. Dr. Wells.

64. The whole congregation together was &c.] The numbers before expressly detailed are considerably smaller than the general sum here mentioned. The difference is probably to be explained by the addition of those mentioned at ver. 61, 62, and others of the common people of the twelve tribes, who could not make out their pedigree. Dr. Wells.

It should be observed, how small the sum total here mentioned is, in comparison with the vast multitude which came out from Egypt; yet this number is more than the double of that which was carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar. Bp. Patrick.

It is most certain, that, notwithstanding the decree of Cyrus, and others by subsequent Persian kings, for the return of the Jews into their own land, there were a great many who waved the taking advantage of them, and continued still in Chaldea, Assyria, and other Eastern provinces. It is probable too that those who remained were the most affluent and wealthy, as it is natural to suppose that such would be least willing to remove into a desolate country. If we may guess by the example of the family of Aaron, we must conclude that those who staid were much more numerous than those who removed to Judea; for, of the twenty-four courses of the sons of Aaron, it is related at ver. 36, that four only returned. Dean Prideaux.

69.—threescore and one thousand drams of gold,] The richness of these donations, and of those mentioned at chap. viii. 25, shews that the captivity of the Jews in Babylon was not a state of slavery, and that worldly prosperity continued within their reach. The same appears also from the history of Daniel, Nehemiah, and other Jews, who were promoted to great honour in the Assyrian and Persian courts. Bp. Patrick.

—— drams of gold,—pound of silver,] The "drams of gold" being mentioned together with "pounds of silver," seem to convey the idea of weight: whereas in fact these daraconim, drams, were a Median coin, struck by one of the elder Darius's, and named after him Daricks. The Scholiast on Aristophanes says, "The stateras of gold are the Daricks; so called, not from Darius father of Xerxes, but from a more ancient king." This agrees with the older account, 1 Chron. xxix. 6, 7, "the princes of Israel gave—ten thousand drams of gold." These then were golden Daricks, obtained from Persia by commerce. The word, rendered "pound" of silver, is mina, worth sixty shekels, Ezek. xlv. 12; about £7. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

—— and one hundred priests' garments.] Such presents of garments would appear singular to us; but, in the East, where to give is to honour, such a present of garments, or of any other usable commodities, is in perfect compliance with established customs. Fragments to Calmet.

Chap. III. ver. 1. And when the seventh month was come,] We are no where informed in what month they began their journey from Babylon; but, from chap. vii. 9, we understand it was a journey of four months from thence to Jerusalem; so that we may conclude they began their journey in the first or second month; and, after they had spent some time in settling themselves in their several cities, the seventh month approached or drew nigh, (so the expression here may be rendered,) in which was the season of the first great feast, that occurred after they came to Judea: accordingly they assembled themselves to celebrate it at Jerusalem. *Bp. 2. — builded the altar —, to offer burnt offerings] Thus the first thing they did was to restore the altar of burnt offerings, (of which see the description at 2 Chron. iv. 1.) By the expression of the next verse, "they set the altar upon his bases," it seems certain that they rebuilt it on the spot where it formerly stood; and it appears that they daily offered sacrifices upon it, even before any of the rest of the temple was built. Dean Prideaux.

The first care of the Jews on their return is their publick sacrifice. That school of captivity in which they had been trained had taught them to begin with God. A forced discontinuance makes devotion more savoury and more sweet to religious hearts; whereas, in an open freedom, piety does too often languish. Bp. Hall.

We should well observe, that, as soon as the Jews were returned from Babylon, they set about rebuilding their altars and the temple, in order to perform Divine service. This was the effect of their piety, and especially of the zeal of their rulers. Christians ought to display on all occasions a similar zeal; the care of God's worship should above all things possess their minds, and their greatest joy should be, to see the kingdom of God established and confirmed. Ostervald.

We have here a remarkable proof, that when God suffers His children to be persecuted, it is not for their destruction, but for their amendment, and to the end that He may establish them again in His true worship. Bp. Wilson.

3. — for fear was upon them] The Hebrew particle, which we translate for, has also the sense of although; and this seems to be the meaning here; implying that, although they were in great fear of their evil neighbours, still they were unwilling to desist from restoring the worship of God. Bp. Patrick.

4. They kept also the feast of tabernacles,] This seventh month, being a month of many solemnities of worship appointed by the Mosaical law, (Numb. xxix,) they began it by the feast of trumpets; then the great day of expiation on the tenth, and the feast of tabernacles on the fifteenth, till the whole was concluded; the morning and evening sacrifices ushering in every day's solemnity, and being constantly offered up from this time forward, and every other festival of the year being punctually observed agreeably to the law. Pyle.

—— according to the grant that they had of Cyrus] Cyrus, we may suppose, had specially commanded the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon to afford them their assistance. Bp. Patrick.

8. — of their coming unto the house of God] To the place where the house of God formerly stood. thought this goodly; they who had seen the former, thought this mean and homely, more sorrowing at what they had lost, than rejoicing at so unequal a reparation. Bp. Hall.

The old men, who had seen the glory of the first temple, and had no expectation that this, which was now building by a few poor exiles lately returned into their country, could ever equal the former, which had all the riches of David and Solomon, two of the wealthiest princes of the east, expended in its erection, wept at the remembrance of that which was gone, while others rejoiced at the foundation of the new one. Indeed the difference between the former temple and this which was now beginning was so great, that God Himself tells the Prophet Haggai, (chap. ii. 3,) that the latter was as nothing in comparison with the former. It is true that the dimensions of the two temples were the same; but in its ornaments, materials, and workmanship, Solomon's temple was far superiour to the second temple; and, what was far more important, the second temple entirely wanted that which constituted the main glory of Solomon's temple, the extraordinary marks of the Divine favour; consisting especially in the holy ark of the covenant, and the mercy seat which was upon it, in the Shechinah or symbol of the Divine presence, in the Urim and Thummim, and in the holy fire on the altar: but all these wants and defects were afterwards abundantly supplied in the second temple, when the Desire of all nations came to this temple, when Christ our Saviour, who was the most true Shechinah of the Divine Majesty, honoured it with His presence; in this respect the glory of the latter house did far exceed the glory of the former; and the prophecies of Haggai, who foretold that it should be so, had a full completion. Dean Prideaux.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin] The Samaritans: the people whom Shalmaneser and Esar-haddon, kings of Assyria, had brought from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, and other places, and had settled in parts of the country formerly inhabited by the ten tribes of Israel; see ver. 2 and 10. They were called Samaritans, from having occupied the city of Samaria and its neighbourhood, and were also called Cutheans, from the country which some of them had formerly inhabited. See the history of the captivity of the ten tribes, and of the settlement of these strangers in their inheritance, in 2 Kings xvii. Bp. Patrick, Collyer.

2. — we seek your God,] This people had worshipped the true God since the time of Esar-haddon, when lions were sent to infest their country as a chastisement for their idolatry: they had moreover received instruction at that time, by their own desire, from an Israelite priest: but they nevertheless continued to worship images, joining the service of God with idolatry; and thus did their children's children; see 2 Kings xvii. When therefore they pretended to be of the same religion with the Jews, they spoke deceitfully. Bp. Patrick, Collyer.

3. — Ye have nothing to do with us] You have no just claim to join with us in building a house to our God, nor can we by our religion admit you so to do, as being worshippers of other gods as well as of our God. Dr. Wells.

The Jews steadily rejected the proposal made by the Samaritans, to join with them in rebuilding the temple of the God of Israel, and celebrating His worship; and we can discern important reasons, in consequence of which this rejection appears to have been subservient to the purposes of the Divine economy. The intermixture of the Samaritans with the Jews might have rendered the accomplishment of the prophecies concerning the family and birth of the Messiah less clear; might have introduced again idolatry among the restored Jews, now completely abhorrent from it, and in various ways defeated the grand objects of Providence in selecting and preserving a peculiar people. In consequence of this rejection, and the alienation it produced, the Jews probably became more vigilant in preserving the strictness, and the Samaritans more zealous in emulating the purity, of the Mosaick ritual. They became hostile and therefore unsuspected guardians and vouchers of the integrity of the sacred text, particularly of the Pentateuch. And while the Jews, in general blinded by their national prejudices, could see in the promised Messiah only a national and temporal deliverer; the Samaritans appear to have judged of His pretensions with more justice and success. And though our Lord visited them only as it were incidentally, yet He was able to declare to them His character, and avow His dignity, without that mysterious reserve and jealous caution, which the proneness of the Jewish multitude "to take Him by force and make Him a king" constantly required. And it seems evident, that the Samaritans were predisposed and prepared to receive and diffuse the light of the Gospel more than any other description of men, the pious and reflecting part of the Jewish nation only excepted. And thus the circumstance, in the progress of the Jewish dispensation, which at first view might seem to prove it was peculiarly partial or confined, appears in its final result to have materially facilitated the diffusion of true religion in the world, and thus to have been subservient to the general advantage of mankind. Dr. Graves.

5. — all the days of Cyrus &c.] Since by these underhand and subtle dealings of the adversaries of the Jews, the work of the temple was much retarded, and the effect of Cyrus's decree defeated in many particulars; this seems to have been the cause why, in the third year of Cyrus, Daniel gave himself up to mourning and fasting for three weeks together. Daniel died not long afterwards; and in him the Jews lost a powerful advocate at the Persian court. Still, though their enemies derived from this circumstance greater advantage in their designs against them, and though they prevailed to divert those encouragements which Cyrus had ordered for the carrying on of the work, yet in his reign they never were able to put a total stop to it. Dean Prideaux.

14 Now because † we have maintenance from the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king;

† Chald. we are salted with the salt of the palace.

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have † moved sedition † within the same of old time: for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king that, if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their † companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And †I commanded, and search hath been made, and it is found that this city

† Chald. by me a decree is set.

6.—in the reign of Ahasuerus,] This Ahasuerus is known in profane history by the name of Cambyses: he began to reign B. C. 529. The name Ahasuerus seems rather to have been a title common to several kings of Media and Persia, than a proper name of any of them. It is evidently compounded of two Persick words, which signify the great chief or prince. Dr. Jennings.

7.—In the days of Artaxerxes] Otherwise called Smerdis, one of the magi who was made king, and reigned for a few months only. Univ. Hist.

——interpreted in the Syrian tongue.] There have been various conjectures of learned men respecting this passage. A probable meaning of the words, "was interpreted in the Syrian tongue," is, that it was translated out of the Syrian tongue into the Persian, or that which was at this time used at the Persian court: the Hebrew words admit of this sense. Pyle.

10.—whom the great and noble Asnapper] Some understand Asnapper to be another name for Shalmaneser, or Esar-haddon, who sent these colonies hither; but perhaps it is more reasonable to suppose he was some great commander, who was entrusted by one or both of those kings to conduct them, and bring them over the river, (Euphrates,) and see them settled in these countries. Bp. Patrick.

11.—Thy servants—on this side the river, and at such a time.] This is the title of the letter—the letter itself follows. "At such a time." The time was expressed, no doubt, in the original letter; but here it is only noted in general, that the day and year were mentioned when the letter was written. Bp. Patrick.

12.—building the rebellious and the bad city, &c.] The opposition of the Samaritans on this occasion was well-timed. Egypt had revolted from the Persian yoke immediately on hearing of the death of Xerxes. The Samaritans therefore could not have chosen a fairer opportunity to carry their point, or a stronger argument to work upon the king's fears, than the danger, which might result from permitting the Jews to fortify their city, not only of their following the rebellious example of Egypt in refusing to pay tribute, but also of their obstructing the passage of the Persian army to be employed in the reduction of Egypt, either going or returning through Palestine. Dr. Hales.

13.—toll, tribute, and custom,] The distinction between these words has been variously conjectured. One opinion is, that the first word signifies the part which every man paid out of his estate, according to the valuation; the second, that which was paid for every head; and the third, that which was paid for merchandise on the highway. Witsius.

14.—because we have maintenance from the king's palace,] Literally in the original, "Because we are salted with the salt of the palace." As salt is reckoned among the principal necessaries of life, hence, by a very natural figure, it is used for food or maintenance in general. It is said to be still a common expression in the East, to say, "I have eaten the salt of such a person;" meaning, "I have been fed by him." Parkhurst.

A modern Persian monarch said in a tone of indignation, respecting one of his servants who had attempted to deceive him, "I have then such ungrateful servants and traitors to eat my salt." Sir J. Chardin. Tamerlane, in his Institutes, speaking of a person who had quitted his service, joined the enemy, and fought against him, says, "At length my salt which he had eaten overwhelmed him with remorse; he again threw himself at my feet, and humbled himself before me." Harmer.

Before CHRIST 522. of old time hath †made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river; and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

† Chald. Make a decree.

21 †Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 ¶ Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease †by force and power.

† Chald. by arm and power.

24 Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia. 520.

CHAP. V.

Before CHRIST 520.

1 Zerubbabel and Jeshua, incited by Haggai and Zechariah, set forward the building of the temple. 3 Tatnai and Shethar-boznai could not hinder the Jews. 6 Their letter to Darius against the Jews.

THEN the prophets, [a] Haggai the prophet, and [b] Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them.

2 Then rose up Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God helping them.

3 ¶ At the same time came to them Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?

4 Then said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men †that make this building?

† Chald. that build this building?

5 But the eye of their God was upon

---

21. Give ye now commandment &c.] Artaxerxes, the king who now reigned, had been a chief leader of the sect of the Magians, to whom the religion of the Jews was in the utmost degree opposed; and the aversion, which he had to them on this account, no doubt contributed to induce him to issue this decree against them. Dean Prideaux.

23. — and made them to cease by force and power.] We learn from hence, that God sometimes permits the most holy undertakings to be retarded, and that His church has often had to contend with artifice and violence. But the sequel will shew us, that He does at length confound the crafty designs of the wicked, that He makes manifest the innocence of His children, and that, after He has tried them, He makes those, who had been their greatest enemies, become their friends. Ostervald.

As we see, from this part of Scripture, that God sometimes permits the best undertakings to be opposed, and the best men to be slandered; we discover that it is no new thing to meet with such conduct, and that good men should always bear it with patience. Bp. Wilson.

24. Then ceased the work &c.] Artaxerxes, by whose decree the work of the temple was thus stopt, reigned in all but seven months, and was succeeded by Darius, in whose second year the building was resumed: the work therefore ceased not longer than two years and seven months. Dean Prideaux.

Chap. V. ver. 1. — Zechariah the son of Iddo,] The grandson of Iddo; for his father's name was Berachiah. Bp. Patrick.

—— prophesied unto the Jews] Rather, "prophesied against" them, as the words of the original may be interpreted; for these Prophets reproved them because they did not build the temple. They both prophesied in the second year of Darius, as appears from the beginning of their prophecies; one in the sixth, the other in the eighth month. Bp. Patrick. We should here take notice, that, while the building of the temple was interrupted, God sent His Prophets to encourage the Jews, and to engage them to renew their application to that pious design. Thus it is that God never forsakes His church; He always, when He judges it necessary, commissions faithful ministers to labour in its edification; and we ought on no occasion to be disheartened when our enterprises are just and conformable to the will of God, for His providence will give them a happy issue, though it seem contrary to all appearance. Ostervald.

By the death of Artaxerxes, his edict prohibiting the building of the temple became of no effect: still the Jews neglected to resume the work, and on this account God smote their land with barrenness, so that both the vintage and harvest failed them; Hagg. i. 6, 11, &c. Haggai informed them of the cause of this judgment, and exhorted them to perform their duty, which would be the means of averting it: accordingly they again set about the work, and applied themselves with all diligence to provide the materials necessary for the purpose, Hagg. i. 14, 15. To encourage them further in the prosecution of the work, another message (Hagg. ii. 1, &c.) came to them from God by the same Prophet, not only assuring them of His presence therein to make it prosper in their hands, but also promising that the glory of the latter house, when built, should be greater than that of the former; which was accordingly accomplished when Christ our Saviour came to this temple and honoured it with His presence. The word of the Lord came also to them by Zechariah the Prophet, exhorting them to repentance, and promising them mercy and favour on their obedience, Zech. i. 1, &c. Dean Prideaux.

2. — began to build the house of God] The work had been begun before, but made little progress, till these great men, encouraged by the Prophets, again set it in forwardness. Bp. Patrick.

3. — Tatnai, governor on this side the river,] That is, governour of the provinces of Syria and Palestine. Pyle.

4. Then said we unto them &c.] In the Greek, Syriack, and Arabick translations, the words are, "Then said they unto them;" that is, Tatnai and those with him said to the Jews. Dr. Wells. If the word we be the true reading, there should be no interrogation; but the sense must be, "We (the Jews) said or told unto them after this manner, what were the names, &c." Bp. Patrick.

5. But the eye of their God] By the favour and good providence of God, the king's ministers in these parts became their friends so far as not to prohibit their proceeding with their work, but referred the matter to the consideration of Darius himself, to whom they made a fair and honest report of the case. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST 520. the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter.

519. 6 ¶ The copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and his companions the Apharsachites, which were on this side the river, sent unto Darius the king:

† Chald. in the midst whereof. 7 They sent a letter unto him, † wherein was written thus; Unto Darius the king, all peace.

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into the province of Judea, to the house of the great God, which is builded † Chald. stones of rolling. with † great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded [e] 1 Kings 6. 1. and set up.

12 But after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of [d] 2 Kings 24. 2. & 25. 8. Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

536. 13 But in the first year of [e] Cyrus the [e] Chap. 1. 1. king of Babylon the same king Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

[f] Chap. 1. 8. & 6. 5. 14 And [f] the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made ‖ governor; Before CHRIST 536. ‖ Or, deputy.

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and yet it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAP. VI.

1 Darius, finding the decree of Cyrus, maketh a new decree for the advancement of the building. 13 By the help of the enemies, and the directions of the prophets, the temple is finished. 16 The feast of the dedication is kept, 19 and the passover.

519. THEN Darius the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the † rolls, where the treasures were † laid up in Babylon. † Chald. books. † Chald. made to descend.

2 And there was found at ‖ Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written: ‖ Or, Ecbatana, or, in a coffer.

3 In the first year of Cyrus the king the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;

4 With three rows of great stones, and —— returned answer] As follows at chap. vi.

8. — the house of the great God,] Such was the expression of the Jews, to distinguish their God from all idols, who were supposed to be the gods of particular countries. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VI. ver. 2. — was found at Achmetha,] It would seem that they searched in vain at Babylon, and therefore searched at this place, afterwards called Ecbatana, where the kings of Persia sometimes held their court. Bp. Patrick.

3. — the breadth thereof threescore cubits;] It has been before stated at note on chap. iii. 12, that the dimensions of the new temple were the same as those of Solomon's temple; for the latter seems to have been built on the very same foundations with the former. Still it may seem that Cyrus's commission makes the new temple broader, as it allows it sixty cubits in breadth, whereas Solomon's temple had only twenty cubits in breadth. It should be observed, however, that these measures seem to be applied to different parts of the two temples. The twenty cubits breadth of Solomon's temple was only the breadth of the temple proper, measuring from the inside of the walls. The sixty cubits breadth, on the other hand, mentioned in Cyrus's commission, was the breadth, not of the temple proper, but of the whole building enclosing it, containing different apartments and galleries. The outward breadth of this whole building was seventy cubits; and thus, if we allow five cubits respectively for the breadth of the outer walls, we obtain the breadth measured from the inside of the walls to be such as is here described. Dean Prideaux.

4. With three rows of great stones,] This agrees with the description of Solomon's building his temple at 1 Kings vi. 36, &c. for there seems no doubt that Cyrus gave his commission after a row of new timber: and let the expences be given out of the king's house:

5 And also let the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and † brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and † your companions the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in this place.

8 Moreover † I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expences be given unto these men, that they be not † hindered.

† Chald. by me a decree is made.

† Chald. made to cease.

9 And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail:

10 That they may offer sacrifices † of sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.

11 Also I have made a decree, that whosoever shall alter this word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and being set up, † let him be hanged thereon; and let his house be made a dunghill for this.

Before CHRIST 519.

† Chald. let him be destroyed.

12 And the God that hath caused his name to dwell there destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed.

13 ¶ Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, so they did speedily.

14 And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the † commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia.

15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king. 515.

16 ¶ And the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of † the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy, † Chald. the sons of the transportation.

17 And offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin offering for all Israel, twelve he goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, that pattern, having probably consulted the Jews that were about him for that express purpose. Dr. Lightfoot.

11. — and being set up, let him be hanged thereon;] It is the opinion of some, that these words should be translated, agreeably to the sense of the Greek version, "and standing let him be beat upon it," that is, according to the modern expression, "whipped at the post," as was the manner among the Persians and other nations. In the subsequent words it is ordered, that his house when pulled down should not be built up again, but the place where it stood be made a dunghill. Thus it was customary among the Romans to pull down the houses of very wicked persons, for their greater disgrace. Bp. Patrick.

12. — I Darius have made a decree;] By virtue of this decree, the Jews were not only fully authorized to go on with the building, but were also furnished with the expences of it out of the taxes of the province. This had been granted by Cyrus in the former decree; but, by the underhand dealings of the Samaritans and other enemies, in bribing those through whose hands the administration of publick affairs and the publick revenues passed, this part of Cyrus's decree was rendered ineffectual. For a long time, therefore, the Jews, being forced to carry on the work at their own charges, and being in a state of great poverty so soon after their return from captivity, made a very slow progress. Now, however, being largely assisted by the king's bounty, they engaged in the building with such diligence, that they soon brought it to a conclusion. The publication of this decree at Jerusalem may be reckoned the complete restoration of the Jewish state. Dean Prideaux. We here see the happy issue which God gives to those who wait on Him with patience and resignation. Bp. Wilson.

14. — they prospered through the prophesying &c.] That is, the Prophets directed and encouraged them in the work. Bishop Patrick.

15. — the month Adar,] Adar was the twelfth month of the ecclesiastical year among the Jews, answering to part of February and part of March. Lewis.

17. — twelve he goats, according to the number of the tribes] We are here supplied with an additional proof that, on the return of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin from the Babylonish captivity, many also of each of the other tribes returned with them from Assyria, Babylonia, and Media, whither they had been carried; and, joining with them in the rebuilding of the temple, partook in the solemnity of the dedication; otherwise, there is no reason why the sin offering should now be offered in behalf of all the twelve tribes. Since, however, the greater part of those who returned consisted of the tribe of Judah, their name swallowed up the names of all the rest; for, from this time, the whole people of Israel, of what tribe soever they were, began to be called Jews, and by that name they have been known ever since all the world over. Dean Prideaux.

Before CHRIST 515. for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; †[a] as it is written in the book of Moses.

[a] Numb. 3. 6. & 8. 9.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the LORD God of Israel, did eat,

22 And kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the LORD had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

CHAP. VII.

1 Ezra goeth up to Jerusalem. 11 The gracious commission of Artaxerxes to Ezra. 27 Ezra blesseth God for his favour.

457. NOW after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes king of Persia, Ezra the son of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah,

Before CHRIST 457.

2 The son of Shallum, the son of Zadok, the son of Ahitub,

3 The son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,

4 The son of Zerahiah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,

5 The son of Abishua, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the chief priest:

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king granted him all his request, according to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 And there went up some of the children of Israel, and of the priests, and the Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king. 457.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For upon the first day of the first month † began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, according to the good hand of his God upon him. about 457. † Heb. was the foundation of the going up.

10 For Ezra had prepared his heart to

21. — all such as had separated themselves unto them] That is, proselytes who had forsaken their heathenish religion, and made themselves entirely subject to the law of Moses; for such might eat of the passover, Exod. xii. 48, 49. Bp. Patrick.

22. — the king of Assyria] The king of Persia; (Darius;) being here called king of Assyria, as having conquered those countries which formerly belonged to the kings of Assyria. Bp. Patrick. Darius was a prince of great wisdom, clemency, and justice; and has the honour to be recorded in Holy Writ as a favourer of God's people, a restorer of His temple at Jerusalem, and a promoter of His worship therein. God was pleased to make him His instrument in all this work; and with respect to this it was, no doubt, that He blessed him with a numerous issue, a long reign, and great prosperity. Dean Prideaux.

In the change in the state of the Jews here related, we cannot sufficiently admire the providence of God, and the care He takes of His people: we see that God watches over the church, and finds means to support it, even by idolatrous princes, and in places where it has been most persecuted. Ostervald.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. Now after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes] The temple worship at Jerusalem, and the free enjoyment of the Jewish religion, having now continued without any considerable interruption for nearly threescore years, (fifty-eight years, see the dates in the margin,) through the reigns of the Persian monarchs, Xerxes and Darius; in the seventh year of the next successor, Artaxerxes Longimanus, the Jews, as is here related, obtained further favour and privileges from the Persian crown, by means of Ezra, who was of the line of Aaron, descended from the heads of that line who are mentioned in the following verses. Pyle.

—— son of Seraiah,] He was not immediately the son of Seraiah, but descended from him; perhaps his grandson, or great grandson. Seraiah perished when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans, 2 Kings xxv. 18, 21. Bp. Patrick. Ezra could not be the immediate son of Seraiah; for, if he had been only one year old at his death, he would now have been aged 132; and we find him alive in the time of Nehemiah, fifteen years afterwards.

3. — the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,] In this genealogy six generations are omitted between Azariah and Meraioth, which are to be supplied from 1 Chron. vi. 7, &c. These are probably omitted for the sake of brevity. Bp. Patrick.

6. — he was a ready scribe] He calls himself a scribe, from his declaring and explaining the things contained in the Scriptures. The word in the original signifies one skilled and learned in that which was the Book by way of eminence, a teacher and expounder of it: and he was a ready scribe, because he was peculiarly expert and understanding in the law, both in matters which related to the priesthood, and to the civil authority. Bp. Patrick.

—— the king granted him all his request,] It is scarcely probable that this uncommon favour was obtained by ordinary means; and it seems to have been granted at the solicitation of Esther. It was usual for the kings of Persia to allow, on some particular occasions, their favourites to ask what boons they pleased; and it is probable that, by the direction of Mordecai, she embraced some favourable opportunity of asking this of the king. Dean Prideaux. This observation supposes the history of the book of Esther to refer to this period: respecting which see the Introduction to that book.

—— according to the hand of the Lord his God] Meaning, that God was so favourable to him as to incline the king to give a favourable answer to his petition. Bp. Patrick.

9. — upon the first day of the first month] On the first day of the first month he went from Babylon to the river Ahava, where he spent three days in taking a view of the people that accompanied him, chap. viii. 15. After eight days more, part of 11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, king of kings, ‖ unto Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, and at such a time.

[b] Chap. 8. 25.

16 [b] And all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the freewill offering of the people, and of the priests, offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem:

17 That thou mayest buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meat offerings and their drink offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will of your God.

19 The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

Before CHRIST about 457.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure house.

21 And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily,

24 Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach ye them that know them not.

12. Artaxerxes, king of kings,] Artaxerxes had several kings subject to him. Bp. Patrick.

—— at such a time.] Here, as at chap. iv. 10, the time, we must suppose, was specified in the original instrument, although it is expressed generally.

14. —— and of his seven counsellers,] This decree had the greater authority, as being by the advice of his seven counsellers; for these were the principal men of the kingdom, as appears from Esth. i. 14. Bp. Patrick.

—— which is in thine hand;] In which thou art so well versed. Dr. Wells.

22. Unto an hundred talents of silver,] Amounting to the sum of about £35,350, according to Bishop Cumberland's computation of the Hebrew silver talents; but, whether these or any other talents were meant, cannot be ascertained. Pyle.

23. Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, &c.] Jacobus Capellus says of these words, that they ought to be written on the palaces of kings in letters of gold, and engraven on the hearts of all the faithful with a pen of adamant. So strong a sense of God's supreme authority do they express, and so clearly do they mark out the regard that is due from the greatest kings and potentates to His most sacred commands. Bp. Patrick.

26. And whosoever will not do &c.] It appears from this verse that Artaxerxes gave the Jews liberty to live by their own laws, and to judge all causes according to them: also, that he gave their magistrates the power of life and death over their own nation. Dr. Wells.

—— and the law of the king,] By the law of the king is here meant this decree, which was now made in favour of the Jews, giving them authority to exercise their own laws again. When matters could not be determined by the Divine laws, they were to be judged by the king's law. Bp. Patrick.

27. Blessed be the Lord God] Ezra, having recorded the gracious edict which has just been given, was so penetrated with the goodness of God in inspiring the Persian king with such a favourable disposition, that he could not refrain from breaking forth in the expressions of thankfulness to God which here follow. Dr. Wells. Ezra's thanksgiving to God for putting it into the heart of the king and his counsellers to favour the Jews, shews how full of piety and zeal was this worthy minister of religion.

about 457. THESE are now the chief of their fathers, and this is the genealogy of them that went up with me from Babylon, in the reign of Artaxerxes the king.

2 Of the sons of Phinehas; Gershom: of the sons of Ithamar; Daniel: of the sons of David; Hattush.

3 Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of Pharosh; Zechariah: and with him were reckoned by genealogy of the males an hundred and fifty.

4 Of the sons of Pahath-moab; Elihoenai the son of Zerahiah, and with him two hundred males.

5 Of the sons of Shechaniah; the son of Jahaziel, and with him three hundred males.

6 Of the sons also of Adin; Ebed the son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males.

7 And of the sons of Elam; Jeshaiah the son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males. Before CHRIST about 457.

8 And of the sons of Shephatiah; Zebadiah the son of Michael, and with him fourscore males.

9 Of the sons of Joab; Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josiphiah, and with him an hundred and threescore males.

11 And of the sons of Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan ‖ the son of Hakkatan, and with him an hundred and ten males. ‖ Or, the youngest son.

13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of Bigvai; Uthai, and ‖ Zabbud, and with them seventy males. ‖ Or, Zaccur, as some read.

15 ¶ And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there ‖ abode we in tents three days: and I viewed the people, and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi. ‖ Or, pitched.

16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment

Thus pious men give to God all the glory of the good which befalls them, and put their whole trust in Him, both in prosperity and in adversity. Osterwald.

Chap. VIII. ver. 2. — Daniel:] Not the celebrated Prophet of this name, but some eminent person of Ithamar's family. Bp. Patrick.

3. — by genealogy of the males] The males only are here numbered, and no notice taken of the women and children, ver. 21, which, without doubt, greatly increased the number. Pyle.

13. And of the last sons of Adonikam,] By "the last sons of Adonikam" seem to be meant those of the descendants of Adonikam who went up with Ezra, to distinguish them from others of the same family who had before gone to Jerusalem. Bp. Patrick.

15. — the river that runneth to Ahava;] There seems to have been a river of this name, ver. 21, as well as a town. The river probably ran into the Euphrates, and the town stood where the union of the two rivers took place. Bp. Patrick.

According to another opinion, the river Ahava is that which ran along the Adiabene, where the river Diava or Adiava is known to be, on which Ptolemy places the city of Abane or Aavane. This is probably the country called at 2 Kings xvii. 24, Ava, from which the kings of Assyria transferred the people called Avites into Palestine. Ezra, intending to pick up as many Israelites as he could to carry back to Judea, made a halt in the country of Ava or Ahava, whence he sent emissaries into the Caspian mountains, to invite such Jews as might there be found to come and join him. Calmet.

—— and there abode we in tents three days:] In a similar manner the caravans are wont to encamp four or five leagues from Bagdad, upon an arm of the Tigris, for some days, to see whether they have got all things necessary for so long a journey, and whether nobody is left behind. Sir J. Chardin.

—— found there none of the sons of Levi.] No Levites, properly so called; none of the sons of Levi who were not priests: the want of these to attend upon the priests was likely to prove a great defect in the temple service. Pyle.

16. Then sent I for Eliezer, &c.] Accordingly, he sends eleven of the principal persons of his company to Iddo, a very considerable man at Casiphia, a place of the Babylonish province, where he knew there were a great number of the families of the Levites residing, desiring him to use all his influence to send a number of them, and the inferiour officers called Nethinim, to go with him to Jerusalem. Pyle.

Or, by "the place Casiphia," ver. 17, may be meant, mount Caspius, near the Caspian sea, between Media and Hyrcania, where were many captives. Calmet.

The Greek translators render it, "a place of silver;" which the Hebrew word signifies. Grotius.

18 And by the good hand of our God upon us they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen:

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty;

[a] See chap. 2. 43.

20 [a] Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So we fasted and besought our God for this: and he was intreated of us.

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them,

25 And weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellers, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

Before CHRIST about 457.

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of † fine copper, † precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the LORD; the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels weighed in the house of our God by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with him was Jozabad the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every

20. Also of the Nethinims, whom &c.] This is a clear account who the Nethinims were; not Levites, and probably not natural Israelites, but some whom the kings and nobles had given to the Levites for slaves. Dr. Wall.

22. For I was ashamed &c.] Ezra had so openly declared his dependence on God for safe conduct on his journey, that he was ashamed to ask a guard of protection from the king, who, being little instructed in Divine matters, might have imagined that the Jews only made vain boasts of the favour of God towards them, and of the prophecies respecting their restoration. Thus, had Ezra petitioned for protection and defence from the king, his motives would have been probably mistaken, as if he distrusted the power and favour of God. This then made it the more necessary that he should appoint a solemn fast, in which they might "afflict themselves before their God," ver. 21; that is, humbly and sorrowfully acknowledge their offences towards Him, and "seek of Him a right way;" that is, implore Him to prosper them on their journey. Bp. Patrick.

23. So we fasted and besought &c.] This behaviour of Ezra and his associates, in imploring the blessing of the Almighty by fasting and prayer, might well serve to convince the idolatrous people among whom they lived, that they had a perfect confidence in the Divine protection. Thus good men ever trust in God rather than in man; they seek their principal security in prayer, and God on His part hears their prayers and blesses them, as He did Ezra. Ostervald.

26. — six hundred and fifty talents &c.] Making together a million sterling of our money. Bp. Wilson.

28. — Ye are holy unto the Lord; &c.] On delivering the treasures into their custody, he solemnly charges them, that they must remember they were God's priests and stewards, and the treasures committed to them His peculiar right and property; and therefore, that no care, courage, pains, or hazard, could be too great for keeping them safe, and delivering them justly and punctually into the temple treasury at Jerusalem, where both priests and Levites, and the whole council of the nation, would be witnesses, either of their fidelity, or of their dishonesty, in discharging this important trust. Pyle.

32. And we came to Jerusalem,] It appears from chap. vii. 9, that they came to Jerusalem on the first day of the fifth month, having spent four months in the journey.

Before CHRIST about 457. one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered burnt offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he goats for a sin offering: all this was a burnt offering unto the LORD.

36 ¶ And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they furthered the people, and the house of God.

CHAP. IX.

1 Ezra mourneth for the affinity of the people with strangers. 5 He prayeth unto God with confession of sins.

457. NOW when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

2 For they have taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons: so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

3 And when I heard this thing, I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down astonied. Before CHRIST 457.

4 Then were assembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonied until the evening sacrifice.

36. —and they furthered the people,] The king's lieutenants and governours fully obeyed the orders of the king, and contributed every thing requisite for the temple and its services. Pyle.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. —doing according to their abominations, &c.] This expression is commonly used in Scripture to signify the worshipping of idols; but here signifies, in general, imitation of the heathen in promiscuous marriages with any nation whatever, which would soon lead to the commission of idolatry. The marriages of the Jews with the seven nations had been expressly forbidden at Deut. vii. 2, 3; and the same law extended to all nations not proselyted to the Jewish religion. Even before the law of Moses it seems to have been deemed unlawful, after they had received the covenant of circumcision, to intermarry with other nations that were uncircumcised, Gen. xxxiv. 14. Bp. Patrick.

All the nations then in the world, except the Jews, were idolaters. Therefore, to forbid marriage with idolaters was the same to the Jews, as to forbid marriage with any who were not of their communion. That the prohibition to the Jews of marrying with the heathens was not on account of their nation, but their religion, is proved by the fact, that this is the reason given for the command, in almost every place where the command is repeated. Leslie.

2. —the holy seed] The Jews are called "the holy seed," on account of God's covenant with them, making them a peculiar people separate from all other nations. Bp. Patrick.

3. —I rent my garment and my mantle,] I rent both my upper and my inner garment, in token of my great grief and fear of God's displeasure for such a sin; "and plucked off the hair &c." as a still stronger token of my grief and alarm; "and sat down astonied" that the people could have been guilty of such a flagrant sin, so shortly after their return from that captivity which had been occasioned by similar sins in their ancestors. Dr. Wells.

After the example of Ezra, all good men do confess and lament, not only their own miscarriages, but those of others, and implore God's pardon for them. Bp. Wilson.

4. —of those that had been carried away;] Of those who had been carried in captivity to Babylon, and had now returned so little amended; he speaks of those who had returned some years ago with Zerubbabel. Bp. Patrick.

6. —O my God, I am ashamed and blush &c.] With what trouble and confusion does Ezra here acknowledge and bewail the sins of his offending people! and, in a similar manner, should the people of all sinful nations, at the solemn appointed seasons of fasting and humiliation, set their sins in order before them with all their heinous aggravations; and lament and bewail with bitterness of soul their offences against the Most High. Abp. Tillotson.

8. —to give us a nail] To give us a fixed or settled abode, as it is explained in the margin. Since the tents in which the Hebrews once lived were fastened down by nails or pins, therefore "a nail" came to signify in their language "a settled abode." Bp. Patrick. See the note from Bp. Lowth on Isai. xxii. 23.

12 Now therefore give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God † hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this;

† Heb. hast withheld beneath our iniquities.

14 Should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people of these abominations? wouldest not thou be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?

Before CHRIST 457.

15 O LORD God of Israel, thou art righteous: for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are before thee in our trespasses: for we cannot stand before thee because of this.

CHAP. X.

1 Shechaniah encourageth Ezra to reform the strange marriages. 6 Ezra mourning assembleth the people. 9 The people, at the exhortation of Ezra, repent, and promise amendment. 15 The care to perform it. 18 The names of them which had married strange wives.

NOW when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people † wept very sore.

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, We have trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us make a covenant with our God † to put away all the wives, † Heb. to bring forth.

9. — to give us a reviving,] The restoration of the Jews is here called "a reviving." In a similar manner Ezekiel compares them, when they were captive in Babylon, to the dry bones of dead men, Ezek. xxxvii. 1. Bp. Patrick.

—— and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.] This expression is not to be understood literally: the original word, translated "wall," signifies "the fence of a shepherd's fold;" it is here figuratively taken to express the establishment of the Jews in their former land of Judah, and in their city Jerusalem. Dr. Hales.

13. — hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve,] The Greek translation expresses it very emphatically, "Thou hast eased us of our sins;" that is, Thou hast not let the whole weight of them fall on us. It is here only said with reference to the Jews, that the punishment of a long captivity, which God had inflicted on them, was beneath the desert of their sins; but it is universally true, that all temporal punishments inflicted on men are far less than their iniquities deserve. Were it not for the merciful mitigations of God's righteous displeasure, the sinner would not be able to bear it, but would utterly sink under it. Abp. Tillotson.

—— and hast given us such deliverance as this;] We here find that, on the most solemn occasions of humiliation, good men have always testified a thankful sense of the goodness of God to them. Indeed the mercy of God does then appear above measure merciful, when the sinner is most deeply sensible of his own vileness and unworthiness. In this passage, Ezra has so strong a sense of the greatness of their deliverance, that he hardly knows how to express it. Abp. Tillotson.

14. — wouldest not thou be angry &c.] These words, in the form of a question, convey a strong and peremptory affirmation; as if he had said, After such a provocation there is great reason to conclude that God would be angry with us till He had consumed us. And the inference to be drawn from the expression is, that it is a fearful aggravation of sin, and a sad presage of ruin to a people after great judgments and deliverances, to return to sin, and especially to the same sins again. Abp. Tillotson.

15. — thou art righteous: for we remain &c.] It is of Thy long-suffering that we are here permitted to live and to approach Thy sacred presence; and it can be nothing less than a wonderful measure of compassion which can pardon our present guilt, and save us from the punishment we deserve. Pyle.

The prayer which Ezra made on this occasion is very instructive. He herein acknowledges, with profound humility, that the sins of the Jews had obliged the Lord to chastise them, and had reduced them to the servile condition in which they were. This shews us that in the evils which we suffer we should always give glory to God, and acknowledge the righteousness of His judgments. And as Ezra, after he had confessed the sins of the Jews, promised they should no more break the law of God, we must acknowledge that the method of obtaining the return of God's grace and the remission of our past sins, is to forsake those sins by a speedy and sincere conversion, and to take care not to fall into them again. Ostervald.

Chap. X. ver. 1. — there assembled unto him &c.] This prayer being made at the time of evening sacrifice, when many assembled for publick worship; and being uttered with great passion, and the highest expressions of grief and sorrow; those who were present were very much moved to see such a person as Ezra, a priest of God, and a great ruler under the king of Persia, so dejected with fear, confusion, and astonishment. The report of the circumstance, it appears, was presently carried through Jerusalem, and the neighbouring places, which brought together a great number of persons of all descriptions, making great lamentations, and considering themselves to be under the heavy displeasure of the Almighty. Bp. Patrick.

2. — yet now there is hope in Israel] There is hope in God's mercy that He will pardon us in this thing, provided we truly repent. Dr. Wells.

3. — let us make a covenant &c.] Let us, as a token of sincere

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: be of good courage, and do it.

5 Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to swear that they should do according to this word. And they sware.

6 ¶ Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he did eat no bread, nor drink water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be †forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for †the great rain.

11 Now therefore make confession unto the LORD God of your fathers, and do his pleasure: and separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for ‖ we are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God ‖ for this matter be turned from us.

4. Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee:] "Arise" from the ground on which thou liest prostrate; for the management of this matter belongeth unto thee in chief, as not only best skilled in the law, but also, as having full power from the king of Persia to rectify every thing according to the law. Dr. Wells.

6. — and when he came thither,] The word "when" is not in the Hebrew: the passage had perhaps better be translated, "till he came thither, he had eaten no bread, &c." Bp. Patrick.

8. — all his substance should be forfeited.] In the Hebrew, "should be devoted." It signifies that his goods were to be so forfeited, as to become sacred to God, and thus incapable of being restored to the former owner, being placed in the treasury of God's house. Bp. Patrick.

9. — sat in the street of the house of God.] They sat probably in the court of the people, where they worshipped; which lying open to the air, and being not yet perhaps girt about with a wall, as we may gather from Neh. iii. 8. is called "a street." They were "trembling" because of the offence they had committed, and their dread of its consequences; "and for the great rain," which fell at the time, and which they believed to be a token of God's anger against them, on account of their transgression. Bp. Patrick.

12. — As thou hast said, so must we do.] We should take especial notice, with what readiness the Jews on this occasion obeyed Ezra and the priests, by putting away the strange wives they had married contrary to the command of God. As this obedience must have been very grievous to them, especially since several amongst them had children by these wives, (see ver. 44.) it affordeth a strong proof of their submissive disposition, and of the sincerity of their repentance. Thus sinners, who are truly affected by their faults, and desire to obtain forgiveness of them, scrupulously perform all that God commands, and are ever ready to renounce all that is most dear to them. Guyse.

Magistrates should never be discouraged, however numerous the offenders may be. Let them do their duty, and God will be with them. Bp. Wilson.

Thus this reformation was concluded, without which the priestly line would have been in a short time corrupted and confounded, and the generality of the nation debauched into lewdness and idolatry, to the entire loss of all the merciful ends and designs of the late happy restoration. Pyle.

Ezra continued in the government of Judea till he was succeeded by Nehemiah, B. C. 446; and, by virtue of the commission he had from the king, he reformed the whole state of the Jewish church, according to the law of Moses, in which he was excellently learned, and settled it upon that foundation, on which it afterwards stood till the time of our Saviour. But, after his government ceased, his labour to serve the church of God did not also cease, for he still went on, as a preacher of righteousness, and a skilful scribe of the law of God, to perfect the reformation which he had begun, both in preparing for the people correct editions of the Scriptures, and also in bringing all things in church and state to a conformity with the rules therein contained. This he continued to do as long as he lived, and herein he was thoroughly assisted and supported by the next governour, who, coming to Jerusalem with the same intention, and the same zeal for promoting the honour of God and the welfare of His people in Judah and Jerusalem, as Ezra did, concurred with him heartily in the work, so that Ezra continued still to pursue the same measures by the authority of the new government, which he before did by his own. And by their thus joining together in the same holy undertaking, and their mutual assisting of each other therein, it exceedingly prospered in their hands, till at length, notwithstanding all oppositions both from within and from without, it was brought to full perfection forty-nine years after it had been begun by Ezra.

The great business effected by Ezra was his collecting and setting forth a correct edition of the Holy Scriptures, in which he laboured much, and which he brought to considerable perfection. Of this, both Jews and Christians allow him the honour. The principal services, which he performed in this important work, were these: 1. He corrected all the errours which had crept into these copies, through the negligence or mistakes of transcribers. 2. He collected together all the books, of which the Holy Scriptures then consisted, and disposed them in their proper order, thus settling the canon of Scripture. 3. He added in several places throughout the books of this edition, what appeared necessary for their illustration, connexion, or completion, in which he was assisted by the same Spirit, by which they were at first written. 4. He changed the old names of several places, that were grown out of use, putting in their stead the new names by which the places were then known, that the people might the better understand them. In conducting this great work, and in restoring the observance of the Jewish law according to the ancient usages before the captivity, he had the assistance of the principal elders who lived in his time: but the main conduct of the work, and the glory of accomplishing it, was by the Jews chiefly attributed to him, under whose presidency, as they inform us, it was done. Dean Prideaux.

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE book of Nehemiah being subjoined in the Hebrew canon to that of Ezra as a continuation of his history, was often considered as his work: and in the Latin and Greek Bibles it is called the second book of Ezra; but it undoubtedly was written by Nehemiah, for he professes himself the author of it in the beginning, and uniformly speaks in the first person.

Ezra appears to have continued near ten years in the government of Judea, after the reform which he mentions in the last chapter of his book; persisting probably in his endeavours to restore religion, and to promote the prosperity of his country. Circumstances were however so unfavourable and adverse to his designs, that in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, about the year of the world 3558, we find, from Nehemiah, that representations were made to him at Babylon of the afflicted state of the Jews, and of the ruinous condition of their city, of which the walls were yet unrepaired.

This book begins with an account of Nehemiah's grief at this report; of his application to Artaxerxes for permission to visit and rebuild Jerusalem, "the place of his fathers' sepulchres." Nehemiah then relates his departure and arrival at Jerusalem with authority; feelingly describes the desolate state of Jerusalem, and his exertions to repair its dismantled walls. He records the names of those patriotick men who assisted him on this occasion; the conspiracy of the Ammonites, and other enemies, against the work, and the defeat of their designs. After the finishing of the walls and fortifications, Nehemiah applied himself to other publick objects. The scarcity of the inhabitants in the large city of Jerusalem first excited his attention. He fortunately at this time found a register of those persons who returned from the captivity under Zerubbabel; which he repeats in the 7th chapter, in order to complete the restoration of their possessions to the respective tribes, and to provide that none but the Levites and descendants of Aaron might officiate in the service of the temple, and of the priesthood. Nehemiah then describes the publick reading of the law to the people; the celebration of the feast of tabernacles, and other religious appointments, observed with a pathetick commemoration and thanksgiving for God's former mercies, as described in preceding books of Scripture. Then follows an account of the renewal of the covenant of obedience and respect to God's law, recorded as a memorial, with the names of those who signed it; also a catalogue of those who were appointed by lot, or consented to live at Jerusalem, which was surrounded by hostile neighbours; and the book concludes with a description of the reformation both civil and religious, which Nehemiah effected. Dr. Gray.

It hath been commonly said, that virtues are better taught, and better enforced, by example than by precept. If so, we have in the person of Nehemiah an instance of publick spirit, or the love of our country, which may be set against any thing that history can produce, and which will suffer by no comparison: nor can Greece or Rome boast of a hero superiour to him in this great and good quality. Dr. Jortin.

THE words of Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. And it came to pass in the month Chisleu, in the twentieth year, as I was in Shushan the palace, Before CHRIST about 446.

Chap. I. ver. 1. — Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah.] We are no where told of what tribe or family Nehemiah was. His father Hachaliah seems to have been one of those Jews who, having obtained a good settlement in the land of their captivity, chose rather to remain there, than to return to their own country when leave was given. It is probable that he was an inhabitant of the city of Shushan, which circumstance gave him the opportunity of procuring the advancement of his son to the office of king's cupbearer, ver. 11. Dean Prideaux.

The name Nehemiah signifies "consolation." Dr. Gray.

—— in Shushan the palace,] Shushan, Susan, or Suses was the capital city of Susiana, or of the country of Elam, that is, of Persia. The kings of Persia had a royal palace here; and from the time of Cyrus they adopted the custom of passing the winter here, and the summer at Ecbatana. It was in this city that Daniel had his vision, Dan. viii. 1, 2, and that the events related in the history of 9 But if ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them; [d] though there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there.

[d] Deut. 30. 4.

10 Now these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand.

11 O LORD, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name: and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man. For I was the king's cupbearer.

Esther took place. It is known in profane history by the name of Susa. At this day it goes among the Persians by the name of Sousther or Schouster, and is the capital of Kusistan. Calmet. The outward gate of the eastern wall of the temple at Jerusalem was called the gate of Shushan, and on this gate was carved the figure of the city of Shushan, in acknowledgment of the decree granted there by Darius, permitting the rebuilding of the temple. Dr. Lightfoot.

3.—in the province] So Judea had been before called, Ezra v. 8.

——the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down,] They mean, that the walls and gates of the city lay as the Chaldeans had left them when they destroyed the city, and had not been repaired, although the temple was rebuilt. Bp. Patrick. They inform him that, the walls being still in many instances broken down, and the gates in the same demolished state as when burnt by the Chaldeans, those children of the captivity who dwelt there lay open, not only to the incursions and insults of their enemies, but also to the reproach and contempt of their neighbours, as a weak and despicable people, and that, on both these accounts, they were in great affliction and grief of heart. Dean Prideaux.

It is supposed that the commissions hitherto given to the Jews extended no farther than to the rebuilding of the temple, and their own private houses; and therefore the walls and gates of the city continued in their ruinous condition. Stackhouse.

4.—I sat down and wept,] How many had seen these ruins and were little affected! Nehemiah hears of them afar off, and is thus deeply afflicted. How many were upon this sight affected with a fruitless sorrow! Nehemiah's mourning is joined with the endeavours at redress. In vain is that grief which has no other end than itself. Bp. Hall.

——and prayed before the God of heaven,] From the very beginning of the book of Nehemiah, we meet with marks of the ardent piety of this holy man. This appears in his grief, to hear of the deplorable state which the city of Jerusalem and all the Jews were in; and in that excellent and fervent prayer which he made, to implore the mercy of God on their behalf, to obtain pardon for their sins, and their complete restoration. All those who fear God, and especially those who are in an exalted station, should, like Nehemiah, be more concerned for the church of God than for any other thing; should sympathize in the evils that befall it, pray continually for it, and labour as much as possible to promote its happiness and prosperity. Ostervald.

8.—the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses,] See Deut. iv. 25, &c.; xxx. 1—4. It is observable that Nehemiah here frames his prayer to God, and directs his enterprise for the restoration of Jerusalem according to the rule delivered by Moses. He saw the truth of that prediction confirmed by the king's disposition to grant his petition, and the speedy restoration of Jerusalem, although one who professed to be a prophet, chap. vi. 10, 11, dissuaded him from the enterprise, as likely to prove dangerous to his person. Dr. Jackson.

Nehemiah is resolved to kneel to the king his master for the repair of his Jerusalem; but he dares not attempt his suit, till he has begun with God. This good courtier knew well that the hearts of these earthly kings are in the overruling hand of the King of heaven, to incline whithersoever He pleaseth. Our prayers are the only true means of making way for our success. Bp. Hall.

11.—For I was the king's cupbearer.] This was a place of great honour and advantage in the Persian court, on account of the privilege it afforded of being daily in the king's presence, and the opportunity it thereby gave of preferring a petition, and obtaining a favour. It was no doubt from the emoluments connected with this place that he gained those immense riches, which enabled him (see chap. v. 14, &c.) to live in his government with great splendour and expense, without burdening the people. Dean Prideaux.

Nehemiah was cupbearer to the Persian king, which was a place of great honour, and of no less profit. He was highly in the favour of that prince, and very rich, and, as to this world, had all that he could hope and wish. It was scarcely to be expected, that one in his situation would bestow a thought upon his remote, and poor, and desolate country; and not one of ten thousand in his circumstances would have concerned himself about it. If at

AND it came to pass in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and I took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been beforetime sad in his presence.

2 Wherefore the king said unto me, Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid,

3 And said unto the king, Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

4 Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven.

5 And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it. Before CHRIST about 445.

6 And the king said unto me, (the † queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him a time. † Heb. wife.

7 Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 ¶ Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me. 445.

10 When Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly that there that distance he had sent a generous relief to his brethren in Judea, and performed such kind offices towards them, as he conveniently could, even this would have been a friendly and liberal behaviour; but he proposed to himself to do much more than this. Dr. Jortin.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — in the month Nisan,] Four months after he had heard of the desolate state in which Jerusalem lay; probably, during this interval, his turn of waiting did not come, or he had no favourable opportunity of speaking to the king. Bp. Patrick.

2. — Why is thy countenance sad,] When we see a heathen master so tender of his servant's grief, how sensible, do we think, the great Father of mercies must be of our sorrowful thoughts; and how ready should our tongues be, to lay open our cares to the God of all comfort, when we see Nehemiah so quick in the expressions of his sorrow to an uncertain ear. Bp. Hall.

3. — Let the king live for ever:] A common form of wishing the king long life and happiness. Bp. Patrick. See the note on Dan. ii. 4.

—— why should not my countenance be sad,] There is a pious affection due to one's country, which cannot be extinguished by the pleasure or plenty of any other. It is no weakness to be deeply affected with the misfortunes, or for the death of our nearest friends or relations, by whatever distance we may be separated from them. Nor can any prosperity in another country hinder or excuse a man for not being deeply afflicted for any calamity that befalls his own. Nehemiah was in no mean station when he was cupbearer to Artaxerxes, and probably had the honours and preferments of that great empire at his command; yet, when the king discerned that there was sorrow of heart expressed in his countenance, and demanded the reason of it, he made no other excuse than "the place of my fathers' sepulchres lieth waste:" and, when the king so graciously invited him to ask some favour worthy of his royal bounty, he would ask nothing further than "Send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it." A generous spirit can think of nothing but relieving his country, while it is under a general misery or calamity. Lord Clarendon.

4. — So I prayed to the God of heaven.] Meaning, that he paused for a short time, so as to put up a short ejaculation to heaven for a favourable answer. Pyle.

6. — (the queen also sitting by] Probably, the queen Esther. As it is here particularly remarked, that the queen was sitting by the king when Nehemiah obtained the grant, it is sufficiently implied that her favour assisted him in the business. Dean Prideaux.

8. — of the king's forest,] Perhaps of the forest of Lebanon, from which the materials for publick buildings at Jerusalem were brought. Bp. Patrick.

—— which appertained to the house,] Which appertained to the house of the Lord. Houbigant.

—— and for the house that I shall enter into.] For the building of a house, which might be the residence of himself and of future governours.

10. — Sanballat the Horonite, &c.] Horonaim was an eminent city in the country of Moab, (Is. xv. 5; Jer. xlviii. 3, 5, 34,) so that Sanballat was probably a petty prince in that country. From the mention of this person and Tobiah the Ammonite, it is shewn that the nations of Moab and Ammon were restored, as well as the Jews, according to the Divine oracles, and were well known; to the end that their destruction by the people of God might be more observable, which was in the time of the Maccabees, who subdued those nations, according to the predictions of the several Prophets. Tobiah is called "the servant, the Ammonite." It is probable that he had been a slave from that country, but was now advanced to some authority in these parts. Bp. Patrick.

—— it grieved them exceedingly] The people of these neighbouring nations were excited to their opposition, not only by the ancient and bitter enmity which they bore to the whole Jewish nation, on account of their difference in manners and religion, but, more especially, at this time, on account of their lands. It is related by Josephus, that these nations, having seized the lands of the Jews during their captivity, had been forced to restore them on their return: thus they naturally endeavoured by all

Before CHRIST 445. was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well, and to the dung port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach.

18 Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work. Before CHRIST 445.

19 But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? will ye rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

14. — the gate of the fountain,] The fountain either of Siloah or of Gihon. Though the wall was broken down, the places where the gates were, were probably known, and the names retained. Bp. Patrick. The position of the other places here mentioned is only known by conjecture.

20. — The God of heaven, he will prosper us;] Professing his confidence in the God of heaven, in whose work he was now engaged, he shakes off the impotent malice of his adversaries, and goes on cheerfully to build. Bp. Hall.

Nehemiah's whole behaviour on this occasion shews his sincere piety, joined with great prudence and courage; and the success which he obtained teaches us that God blesses designs which are formed for good ends, and that those who labour to promote His glory, should never be discouraged when they are opposed by the wicked. Ostervald.

—— ye have no portion, &c.] You have no property, no right of any kind, your names are not even registered, in Jerusalem; you have therefore no right to interfere in a concern exclusively our's.

Chap. III. ver. 1. Then Eliashib the high priest &c.] The names of the persons and families, who repaired and finished the different gates and parts of the wall mentioned in this chapter, are here especially detailed, to the end that they, whose zeal for their country and for the true honour and worship of God was so eminent and commendable, might have their names transmitted to posterity, for honourable examples to all generations. Pyle.

—— and they builded the sheep gate;] The sheep gate is thought to have been on the south side of the city, in that part of the valley which looked towards the city of David and the temple; and to have been named from the circumstance of the sheep which were intended for the sacrifices being led in at this gate, on which account, it may be presumed, the priests undertook this part of the work, as most proper for them. We read that after they had completed it, "they sanctified it," that is, blessed it with solemn prayers, and perhaps with sacrifices. This is the only part of the work which is said to have been thus "sanctified," probably on account of its being the priests' work, and of the relation which it had to sacred uses. Bp. Patrick.

6 Moreover the old gate repaired Jehoiada the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of Mizpah, unto the throne of the governor on this side the river.

CHAP. IV.

1 While the enemies scoff, Nehemiah prayeth and continueth the work. 7 Understanding the wrath and secrets of the enemy, he setteth a watch. 13 He armeth the labourers, 19 and giveth military precepts.

BUT it came to pass, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews.

2 And he spake before his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble Jews? will they † fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?

3 Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall.

4 Hear, O our God; for we are † despised: and turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

5 And cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders.

Before CHRIST 445.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.

7 ¶ But it came to pass, that when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem † were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth,

8 And conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and † to hinder it.

† Heb. to make an error to it.

9 Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.

10 And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11 And our adversaries said, They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, ‖ From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

‖ Or, That from all places ye must return to us.

13 ¶ Therefore set I † in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

† Heb. from the lower parts of the place, &c.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to 32.—the going up of the corner unto the sheep gate] This account had begun from the sheep gate, ver. 1. Thus the relation respecting the whole circuit of the walls is now completed. Dr. Wells.

Chap. IV. ver. 2.—will they revive the stones &c.] In his expressions of derision, he represents it to be impossible that they should repair the wall, unless they could make the broken pieces of stone which had mouldered become whole stones again. Bp. Patrick.

3.—if a fox go up, &c.] If a fox (jackall) should endeavour to force his way through, he would break down their stone wall, designed to defend their capital city; a sarcastick expression, implying that it was not so strong as the wall of a vineyard or garden. Harmer.

5. And cover not their iniquity,] There is a seeming harshness in this prayer; but Nehemiah should rather be considered, as speaking by the spirit of prophecy, as David did in the 109th Psalm; and we should understand that, on account of the malicious and implacable spirit which they shewed towards God and His people, he foresaw they would never be capable of God's mercy, but would be utterly destroyed by Him. There are several prophecies on which this prayer was founded; and it was confirmed by the destruction of these nations under the Maccabees and their successors. Bp. Patrick.

9.—we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch] We are here supplied with a striking example that in all our dangers we should have recourse to the Lord, without neglecting our own labours and application, and all lawful means of warding off the evils which threaten us. Nehemiah, in the instance before us, made his prayer to God, exhorted the people to fear nothing, and shewed by all he said that he put his whole confidence in God; but at the same time he gave necessary orders to prevent being surprised by his enemies, and used every precaution which prudence required. Ostervald.

Nehemiah did not order the people to go to prayers only, and to confess their sins, and to commit their cause to Heaven; but, like a pious and brave man, he exhorted them to join with him in supplication to God, and at the same time to put themselves in a posture of defence. Dr. Jortin.

10. And Judah said,] That is, some of the Jews represented to him, that, from the length and severity of the work, the labourers were quite exhausted; and that, from the quantity of rubbish remaining, more than they were able to remove, it would be necessary to desist, for the present at least, from building the wall: they professed besides to have intelligence that their enemies were meditating a secret attack, so that there would be no notice of their approach till they were actually in the midst of them. Bp. Patrick.

the rest of the people, Be not ye afraid of them: remember the LORD, which is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with "those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded † by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 ¶ And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: our God shall fight for us.

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

Before CHRIST 445.

23 So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, ‖ saving that every one put them off for washing.

‖ Or, every one went with his weapon for water.

1 The Jews complain of their debt, mortgage, and bondage. 6 Nehemiah rebuketh the usurers, and causeth them to make a covenant of restitution. 14 He forbeareth his own allowance, and keepeth hospitality.

AND there was a great cry of the people and of their wives against their brethren the Jews.

2 For there were that said, We, our sons, and our daughters, are many: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.

3 Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

23. — none of us put off our clothes, &c.] The description here given affords a striking picture of the calamitous and unsettled state of the country, and of their continual apprehension of immediate attack, arising from the ill will of their neighbours.

Chap. V. ver. 1. — there was a great cry of the people] That is, of the poor people and their wives, against their rich brethren, the Jews. It appears that they were by no means cured of all their sins by their long captivity; for they married strange women, as we read in the book of Ezra, chap. ix, x, and, as is here related, they oppressed the poor and needy, and that at a time when their enemies were threatening the destruction of them all. Bp. Patrick.

5. Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren,] There is no difference in nature, in flesh or blood, between us and the rest of Israel; why then should we, without any fault on our part, be placed in a condition so much worse than they? Bp. Hall. They represent very pathetically that no difference subsisted between them and their brethren, except that the one were poor, the other rich; for all were Jews of the same stock, the same by nature and the favour of God, and therefore entitled to the enjoyment of the same freedom. Bp. Patrick.

—— we bring into bondage our sons &c.] It was lawful so to do in cases of extreme necessity, Exod. xxi. 1, &c. but those persons were very destitute of compassion who forced their brethren to do what was so much against nature. Thus the condition of these poor Jews was truly lamentable: none would lend them money freely; and to pay their usury they were forced to sell their children, whom they had not power to redeem because their lands were mortgaged to their oppressors. Bp. Patrick.

7. — and I rebuked the nobles, &c.] Good Nehemiah could not but be moved at the barbarous extortion practised on the people: and now, like an impartial governour, he rebukes the rulers and nobles, whose hands were thus bloody with oppression. It is indeed an ill use of power when the weight of it serves only to crush the weak; but, when nobility does debase itself by any foul act, it is so much more worthy of rebuke, as the person is of higher mark, and more extensive example. Bp. Hall.

—— Ye exact usury,] This was a manifest breach of the law of God, given by Moses, which forbade all the race of Israel to take usury of their brethren, Exod. xxii. 25; Levit. xxv. 36, 37; Deut. xxiii. 19. Dean Prideaux.

—— I set a great assembly against them.] I resolved to shame them out of their scandalous proceeding in an open assembly of magistrates and people, which I immediately called for that purpose. Pyle.

8. — We after our ability &c.] He speaks either of himself in the plural number, which is a form often used by governours and great men, or of himself together with Ezra and other lovers of their country, and says, that they had redeemed their brethren the Jews; that is, had done their utmost to deliver them out of the captivity of Babylon, by which they were restored to their country and their liberty. Bp. Patrick.

9. — ought ye not to walk &c.] He means to say, If we had been dwelling alone on the earth, yet the fear of God ought to overawe our ways; but, now that we dwell in the midst of our enemies, whose eyes are bent on all our actions, whose tongues are as ready to blaspheme God, as we unhappily are to offend Him, how carefully should we avoid those sins which may draw shame upon our profession! Bp. Hall.

Nehemiah set the people an example of piety, and endeavoured above all things to make them religious, and thereby to secure to them the favour and protection of God. In this we should imitate him, and without this in vain do we pretend to love our country. A patriot is a religious man, who employs himself in serving the publick: and a good citizen is one, who loves God and his neighbour. Whosoever neglects his duty to God, cannot perform his duty to the publick in a complete and effectual manner. There are, as there ever have been, men who have little religion, and yet some share of what we commonly call honour and publick spirit, who would not injure their nation for private advantage, and would risk their fortunes or their lives for their country. Yet these persons often do more harm another way, by their immoralities, by setting a bad example, and corrupting the minds of men, than they can compensate by intrepidity, generosity, and honour. But in reality, a patriot without religion, and an honest man without the fear of God, is one of the most uncommon creatures upon earth; and unhappy are the people, who have nothing better to trust to, than the honour of such counsellers and magistrates. Dr. Jortin.

11. — also the hundredth part of the money,] By the "hundredth part" is meant a particular sort of usury practised in those countries, and afterwards among the Romans. It signifies, that the hundredth part of the sum lent was to be paid as interest, every month; that is, in modern expression, an interest of one per cent. every month, or of twelve per cent. every year. Bp. Patrick, Dean Prideaux.

Respecting these same countries in modern times, we are informed, that "nothing is more destructive to Syria than the shameful and excessive usury customary there. When the peasants are in want of money to purchase grain, cattle, &c. they can find none but by mortgaging the whole or part of their future crop greatly under its value. The danger of suffering money to appear, closes the hand of all by whom it is possessed; and if it be parted with, it must be from the hope of a rapid and exorbitant gain: the most moderate interest is twelve per cent.; the usual rate is twenty, and it frequently rises even as high as thirty." Volney's Travels.

13. Also I shook my lap, and said, &c.] I made use of the common ceremony of ruffling and shaking the lap of my garment, in detestation of the crimes I had been representing to them; at the same time declaring, denouncing, and even praying to God that He would in like manner punish and confound every one of them in his fortune and estate, who did not perform his word in forsaking such practices. Pyle.

14. — I and my brethren have not eaten the bread of the governor.] I and my family have not taken that allowance which was appointed for the governour: so that, though I held the office, I forbore to take the maintenance allotted to it, both of money and provision, in favour of the people, and from respect to the common good. Bp. Hall.

This conduct of Nehemiah deserves our most serious attention. During the twelve years that he was governour of Jerusalem, he would not insist upon the rights of his office, nor suffer his servants, and those that were under him, to oppress any, but gave up his own dues, that he might not bring a burden upon the people in that troublesome time; he gave even part of his own substance to supply the necessities of the publick, and relieve private persons: all which he did, as he himself observed, because he feared God. This was a noble example of equity, piety, and disinterestedness, well worthy to be imitated; and this shews, how averse we ought to be from oppression and injustice, since, in case of necessity, we ought to give of our own, and even to dispense with our right. The faithful discharge of these duties fills the mind with great confidence towards God, and enables a man to say, as Nehemiah said, with so much faith and piety, "Think upon me, my God, for good." Ostervald.

Before CHRIST 445.

15 But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beside forty shekels of silver; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people: but so did not I, because of the fear of God.

16 Yea, also I continued in the work of this wall, neither bought we any land: and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

17 Moreover there were at my table an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, beside those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

18 Now that which was prepared for me daily was one ox and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this required not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

CHAP. VI.

1 Sanballat practiseth by craft, by rumours, by hired prophecies, to terrify Nehemiah. 15 The work is finished to the terror of the enemies. 17 Secret intelligence passeth between the enemies and the nobles of Judah.

NOW it came to pass, when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates;)

Before CHRIST 445.

2 That Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of Ono. But they thought to do me mischief.

3 And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?

4 Yet they sent unto me four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me in like manner the fifth time with an open letter in his hand;

6 Wherein was written, It is reported among the heathen, and ‖ Gashmu saith it, that thou and the Jews think to rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

15. — beside forty shekels of silver;] He probably means forty shekels of silver every day, to make provision of other things at his table. Bp. Patrick. The words will admit of being translated, "And had taken from each of them, for bread and wine, forty shekels of silver." Houbigant.

19. Think upon me, my God,] There is no reason for us to think that Nehemiah extols himself and his own worthy acts too much; for what he says is nothing more than was necessary in such a state of things, that posterity might be furnished with an excellent example of extraordinary virtue. Bp. Patrick.

Nehemiah, it will be seen, frequently in this book (chap. xiii. 14, 22, 31.) prays to God not to wipe out the good deeds which he had done; this he does, rather in pious supplication to be remembered on that account, than in any arrogance of heart. To have concealed the actions of his government, would have been inconsistent with the office of a faithful historian, and would have deprived posterity of an excellent example. The sacred writers, conscious of their own dignity, are equally superiour to disguise or vanity. They record their own virtues and their own failings with equal sincerity. Dr. Gray. Nehemiah, having happily delivered his people from a domestick captivity, commends his service to the gracious remuneration of the Almighty. Had he taken a temporary recompense, both he and it would have been forgotten: now he has made a happy change for eternity, not that he pleads his merit, but sues for mercy; neither does he pray to be remembered for his work, but according to his work. Our good deeds, as they are well accepted of God, so they shall not go unrewarded; and what God will give, why may not we ask? Doubtless, as we may offer up our honest obedience to God, so we may expect and beg His promised retributions; not out of a proud conceit of the worth of our earnings, since we are at the best but unprofitable servants, but from a faithful dependence on Him, who cannot be less than His word. O God, if we do ought that is good, it is Thine act and not ours; crown Thine own work in us, and take Thou the glory of Thine own mercies! Bp. Hall.

Chap. VI. ver. 2. — in the plain of Ono.] A place in the tribe of Benjamin, chap. xi. 35; 1 Chron. viii. 12. Bp. Patrick.

5. — with an open letter in his hand;] As if the contents were known to every body, and required no sort of secrecy. Pyle. Or perhaps the circumstance of the letter being sent "open" is mentioned as having been an affront offered to Nehemiah by Sanballat; being an omission of good manners, since letters in the East are always sent carefully enclosed; having also a tendency to influence the populace against him, by attributing treason to him as governour; and being perhaps also a mode of avoiding the addressing Nehemiah as governour, and thereby acknowledging his dignity and office. Fragments to Calmet.

It appears from Norden, that it is customary in modern times in those countries to send letters to common people open: but it is not according to their usage to send them so to persons of distinction. Bishop Pococke gives us in one of his plates the figure of a Turkish letter, put into a satin bag, to be sent to a great man, with a paper tied to it directed and sealed, and an ivory button tied on the wax. Nehemiah, being a person of distinction in the Persian court, and then governour of Judea, had reason to expect this ceremony from Sanballat: and the omission of it was perhaps the greater insult, as insinuating that, though Nehemiah was, according to him, preparing to assume the royal dignity, he should be so far from acknowledging him in that character, that he would not even pay him the compliment due to every person of distinction. Sir John Chardin gives a like account of the Eastern letters. Script. illust.

to these words. Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

9 For they all made us afraid, saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands.

10 Afterward I came unto the house of Shemaiah the son of Delaiah the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up; and he said, Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple: for they will come to slay thee; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee.

11 And I said, Should such a man as I flee? and who is there, that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in.

12 And, lo, I perceived that God had not sent him; but that he pronounced this prophecy against me: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him.

13 Therefore was he hired, that I should be afraid, and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

Before CHRIST 445.

14 My God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works, and on the prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.

16 And it came to pass, that when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes: for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

17 ¶ Moreover in those days the nobles of Judah † sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

7. — Come now—, let us take counsel] "Let us take counsel how we may wipe off these suspicions, in case they should be put into the king's mind;" as according to his representation they probably would. Bp. Patrick.

10. — unto the house of Shemaiah] Shemaiah was a prophet by profession, (as appears from ver. 12,) and probably one whom Nehemiah took to be his friend; on which account he went to consult with him at his house. Bp. Patrick. I came, Nehemiah says, to Shemaiah, who was, under pretence of devout humiliation and prayer, "shut up" in his house; and he, pretending a tender care of my person, advised that we should shut ourselves up in the temple. Bp. Hall.

—— in the house of God, within the temple,] There seems to be no reason to doubt that Shemaiah means to advise Nehemiah to retreat into the sanctuary, or most holy part of the temple, for which he had good pretence, as the place was strong, being defended by a guard of Levites, and privileged from all rude approaches. But his real design appears to have been, not only to disgrace Nehemiah and dishearten the people, when they saw the cowardice of their governour, ver. 13, but also to prepare the way for an assault of the enemy on the city, when there was no leader to oppose them. Stackhouse.

11. And I said, Should such a man as I flee?] The words of Nehemiah on this occasion are very significant as well as magnanimous. "Should such a man as I flee?" I, the chief governour, upon whose presence, and counsel, and conduct, the very life and being of the whole city and nation in great measure depend; I, who have professed such resolution, courage, and confidence in God; I, who have had such eminent experience of God's gracious and powerful assistances, of His calling me to this employment, and carrying me through it, when the danger was greater than now; shall I dishonour God and religion, and betray the people and city of God by my cowardice? Stackhouse.

This steadiness of mind should be imitated by all who are engaged in good works, since God is able to protect them, or will certainly reward their good intentions. Bp. Wilson.

What if Nehemiah had hearkened to this counsel? Sin and shame would have followed. That holy place was for none but persons sacred, such as were privileged by blood and function. And now what would the people say? What would become of us while our governour hides his head for fear? Where shall we find a temple to secure us, or how shall we depend on so cowardly a leader? Well did Nehemiah forecast these circumstances; and, resolving to distrust a prophet that persuaded him to the violation of a law, reject the proposition with scorn. Bp. Hall.

14. My God, think thou &c.] Nehemiah takes not upon himself to judge them for their treacherous proceedings, but leaves them to the just judgments of God. Pyle.

15. So the wall was finished — in fifty and two days.] This short space of time, employed in the completion, eminently shews the zeal of the people employed upon it, the number of whom, however, we must suppose to have been very great. It should be remembered too, that the foundations of the wall had been left by the Chaldeans: and probably many parts of the wall itself remained standing. Bp. Patrick.

17. Moreover in those days &c.] During all this time, Nehemiah adds, the stratagems of our professed enemies were not so dangerous or so mortifying as the treachery and baseness of many of our own citizens. Some of the best quality having married into Tobiah's family, (chap. xiii. 4—9,) espoused his interests both secretly and openly, and informed him of all we said and did; so that well might that haughty heathen threaten me with his letters, when he knew there were people within our own bowels who would second him in all his designs. Pyle.

In the account which Nehemiah gives of what happened to him during his government, we may take notice, that good people, and especially those who labour for the glory of God, are exposed to many troubles, not only from their declared enemies, who attack them with open force, or by craft and calumny, but also from those whom they consider as their brethren; and that even sometimes unworthy ministers of the Lord stir up those troubles against them. It appears likewise, from the wise, steady, and pious behaviour of Nehemiah, that those who labour for the publick good should never be staggered by the threats and slanders of the wicked; and that, with the help of the Lord who watches over them, they may happily overcome all opposition. Ostervald.

Chap. VII. ver. 2. That I gave my brother Hanani, &c.] The fact of Nehemiah's appointing governours of Jerusalem as soon as the walls were built, seems evidently to imply that he went away from thence at this time; and, as a set time of absence from Persia appears to have been allowed him at his departure, (chap. ii. 6,) it is most probable that he returned to Persia at this time. Besides, as the building of the walls was all that he required in his first commission, fresh authorities were necessary to enable him to engage in other proceedings which were required for the well settling of the affairs of the country. It is probable that, on his coming to the king, and giving an account how matters stood in the province, he soon obtained permission to return there; and the shortness of his absence seems to be the reason that no notice is taken of it in the text, although the circumstances detailed sufficiently imply it. Dean Prideaux.

3. — until the sun be hot;] Till some time after sunrise, when the approach of an enemy might be clearly discerned, and all the people might be prepared in case of danger. Bp. Patrick.

6. These are the children of the province,] These are the very words which we read at Ezra ii. 1: Nehemiah seems to have transcribed them from thence. Thus the register of which he speaks, ver. 5, is the register first made in Babylon, which he now caused to be exactly revised, and in which he made such alterations as he was enabled to do by the advantage of time and new accessions of people to Judea. He took this care to settle the genealogies of the several tribes and families, now returned to Judea, in order to prevent that mixture and confusion which would have defeated one of the great purposes for which their nation was chosen to be the separate and peculiar people of God. Pyle.

In the second chapter of Ezra we have the old register made by Zerubbabel; and in the seventh of Nehemiah, we have a copy of it as settled by Nehemiah, with some additions and alterations. Dean Prideaux.

70. — The Tirshatha gave to the treasure &c.] We have a beautiful example of piety and liberality in the voluntary contribution of Nehemiah, of some of the chief men, and of several private persons, towards the temple of the Divine worship; and this example is the more instructive, as the Jews, generally speaking, were then in a state of poverty, and the number of rich men amongst them was comparatively few. Ostervald.

73. — when the seventh month came, &c.] When all the business before mentioned was finished, the people were sent back, by Nehemiah's direction, to the several cities to which they belonged, where they remained till the seventh month, which was five days after the wall was finished, chap. vi. 15. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. — Ezra the scribe] It is thought that Ezra had been at Babylon since his first coming to Judea, and was now returned, beholding with great joy the wall of Jerusalem built, as he had before seen the temple. Bp. Patrick.

——to bring the book of the law of Moses,] The people, it appears, called to mind that passage in Deut. xxxi. 10, 11, &c. where God requires the law to be publickly read every seventh year at the feast of tabernacles, which was appointed to be kept in this month. This, no doubt, Ezra was ready to perform; but such was the forward zeal of the people at this time, that they anticipated him by their pious entreaties. This took place on the first day of the seventh month, which was not indeed the time of the feast of tabernacles; but this whole month was in a manner devoted to holy exercises. Bp. Patrick.

2. — upon the first day of the seventh month.] The seventh month of the ecclesiastical year, which was the first month of the civil year used by the Hebrews. The ecclesiastical year began in the month Nisan, answering to the time of the vernal equinox; and the seventh month of this, which was the first of the civil year, took place about the time of the autumnal equinox. The first day therefore of this seventh month was, in a manner, their new year's day, and was celebrated by a festival proclaimed by the sound of trumpets, and thence called the feast of trumpets, Levit. xxv. 9. It was when the people were assembled for this festival that the events now related took place. Dean Prideaux.

6. And Ezra blessed the Lord,] Ezra first began with offering up praises to God for the blessing of His revealed word, and for all His mercies to the Israelite nation, in which the whole assembly joined with strong expressions of devotion and reverence. Pyle.

10 Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the LORD is your strength.

11 So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

9. — For all the people wept, &c.] The people bewailed the ignorance in which they had lived, and the many violations of the law of which they had been guilty; just as Josiah did when he heard the words of the law read out of a book which he found unexpectedly, 2 Kings xxii. Bp. Patrick.

The tears which the Jews shed, and their being sensibly affected at the hearing of the law, shew the effect which the word of God produces on well-disposed minds. Ostervald.

It is impossible for any person to read this remarkable passage concerning the bringing out of the book of the law, and reading it in the ears of all the people, without being greatly moved and affected by it; as it shews us the religious affection and regard, which the Jews had for the Holy Scriptures. The devout manner of reading it, and the religious attention and becoming reverence with which it was heard, are excellently described in the following words: "And Ezra the scribe &c." ver. 4, 5, &c. But the most moving circumstance of all is that which follows, that "all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law." Happy were it for us, if we could persuade the generality of Christians to have the same pious regard for the book of God; that they would be often mindful to take it up, and read therein with all devout attention, and lay up the words thereof in their hearts and in their souls! And may we not only lay up the word of God in our memories, but labour to bring forth the happy fruits thereof in our lives and conversation; that so that sacred Book, which was given to make us wise unto salvation, may never rise up against us, and condemn us at the last day; when "the books shall be opened, and the dead, both small and great, shall be judged out of those things, which are written in the books, according to their works," Rev. xx. 12. Peters.

10. Then he said unto them, Go your way, &c.] It appears, ver. 3, that the holy scribe with his assistants continued from morning till midday to read and explain to the people the law of God in such a manner, as might best make them know and understand it; but at midday they dismissed them to eat and drink and rejoice before the Lord during the remainder of the day, because, being a festival, it was consecrated to be thus kept holy to Him. Dean Prideaux. He desires them to "eat the fat, and drink the sweet;" that is, to make a feast, and provide as good cheer as they were able, according to their manner on festival days, and to "send portions, &c." that is, as became religious people, to give of their abundance to feast their poorer brethren, that they also might rejoice. Bp. Patrick.

14. And they found written in the law &c.] Ezra and his associates proceeding further to read and explain to the people the law of God, came to the twenty-third chapter of Leviticus, in which is written the law of the feast of tabernacles; and having explained to them from thence the obligation under which they were to observe this festival, and shewn that the fifteenth day of the month was the day appointed for the beginning of it, an eager desire was excited in all the people to fulfil the law of God in this particular. Dean Prideaux.

15. — fetch olive branches, &c.] Josephus calls the feast of tabernacles "the most holy of all." In Lev. xxiii. 40, are mentioned "boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook." We see by comparing these passages, that, though the general purport of them is the same, yet the particulars differ. Nehemiah was more attentive to the spirit and meaning of the precept, than to its strict verbal construction. Script illust. Expos. Ind.

—— branches of thick trees,] These words seem to include all handsome-looking trees, capable of forming a cool recess, or of casting a salutary and grateful shade. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

16. — made themselves booths, every one upon the roof of his house, &c.] Dr. Russell, speaking of the religious ceremonies of the Jews at Aleppo, gives a description of the feast of tabernacles, which illustrates the narrative in the text. "The tabernacles are variously constructed, and disposed in different situations, according to the size and other circumstances of the house. They are placed sometimes upon the small terraces in front of the upper rooms; most commonly in the court yards; and, where several families live in the same house, after every other place is occupied below, they erect the tabernacles on the flat tops of the houses: for each family, however poor, must have its own tabernacle. The ordinary method of building them is, by fastening to the corners of a wooden divan four slender erect posts, which serve to support on all sides a reticulated work of green reeds, a space only in front being left for the entrance. This on the outside is covered with fresh myrtle, and is hung on the inside with chintz hangings; the roof is thatched with reeds not stripped of their leaves, and their best cushions and carpets are employed to dress the divan.....In some of the principal houses a permanent wooden kiosk, built upon a stone mustaby or platform in the middle of the court, is made to serve the purpose, which, being already latticed, is easily covered with reeds and myrtle branches. The divan and hangings are here richer.....This festival in the eyes of strangers appears more splendid than any of the others kept by the Jews. They entertain hospitably at their houses; send presents of various sorts of sweetmeats to their friends; and all business is suspended." Dr. Russell.

17. —for since the days of Jeshua &c.] It can hardly be thought that the feast of tabernacles had never been observed since the time of Joshua, because, in fact, we read in the book of Ezra that it was kept at the return of the Jews from Babylon; but the meaning is, that the joy with which it was celebrated had never since that time been so great as upon this occasion: for which the Jews assign this reason, that, in the days of Joshua, they rejoiced because they had got possession of the land of Canaan, and now they equally rejoiced, because they were restored and quietly settled in it, after they had been so long cast out. Bp. Patrick. We should remark, that the long captivity of the Jews, and the afflictions which attended it, did more towards effecting their reformation than all which their Prophets and priests could do for a long series of years. Bp. Wilson.

18. Also day by day, &c.] Although the law did not expressly appoint that the book of the law should be openly read on every day of this festival, Deut. xxxi. 10—12, yet now their zeal was so warm, that they did it every day during the whole week's celebration. Pyle.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Now in the twenty and fourth day &c.] As the people, on perceiving in how many things they had transgressed the commands of God, expressed great trouble and grief of heart, chap. viii. 9, 12, Nehemiah and Ezra, finding them in so good a temper, applied themselves to make the best improvement of it they could, for the honour of God and the interest of religion. Accordingly, they proclaimed a fast to be held the next day but one after the close of the festival, that is, on the 24th of the month, to which, having called all the people, while the sense of these things was fresh and warm in their minds, they excited them to make a publick and solemn confession before God of all their sins, and also to enter into a solemn vow and covenant to avoid them for the future, and to hold themselves to a strict observance of all the Divine laws. Dean Prideaux.

2. And the seed of Israel separated themselves &c.] Those who had been guilty of taking strange women to be their wives, and who in some instances seem to have taken them back, although they had been forced by Ezra to put them away, now in token of their true repentance "separated themselves" from them, that is, stood or remained at a distance from them, to shew that they renounced them. Bp. Patrick.

5. Then the Levites, &c.] After the Levites before mentioned had cried to God for mercy, the people, as is probable, suing for it on their knees, another company of Levites commanded them to stand up and praise the Lord and give thanks. Bp. Patrick.

6. Thou, even thou, art Lord alone;] The whole succeeding part of this chapter contains a beautiful epitome of the history of the Jews, raised and animated by a spirit of devotion, which appears in all that moving eloquence so well suited to the occasion, and, at the same time, with all that chasteness and correctness of thought and expression which so eminently distinguishes the sacred writings of this sort. Peters.

The prayer which here follows is one of the finest in all the Scriptures. What is chiefly to be observed in this prayer is as follows: The Jews adore the power and majesty of the most high God; solemnly acknowledge the mercies their nation had received from Him in Egypt, in the wilderness, and in the land of Canaan, and His forbearance and longsuffering towards them; they confess their sins and rebellions, and their abuse of His favours; they own too that God had justly chastised them, by sending them into captivity, and subjecting them to strange princes. Lastly, they enter into a solemn engagement never more to return to their old sins, but to keep inviolably the covenant which they then renewed with the Lord. We should make a useful application to ourselves of all the parts of this excellent prayer; we should frequently read it, and learn from it to praise and adore God, to acknowledge the favours He bestows upon us all in general, and upon every one in particular: they especially whose circumstances somewhat resemble those of the Jews at that time, and who have been made to pass through divers trials and afflictions, ought from hence to learn to confess their sins and ingratitude, to celebrate His forbearance, to be more faithful to Him for the time to come, and religiously to perform the conditions of His covenant. Osterwald.

30. — testifiedst against them by thy spirit in thy prophets:] "Prophecy," as St. Peter observes, "came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," 2 Peter i. 21. Accordingly we find in multitudes of places, from the earliest book of Scripture to the latest, supernatural impulses and illuminations ascribed to the Spirit of God: Gen. vi. 3; xli. 38; Numb. xi. 25, 26; xxiv. 2; 1 Sam. x. 10; 2 Kings ii. 9, &c.; 1 Chron. xii. 18; 2 Chron. xv. 1; Nehem. ix. 30; Ezek. ii. 2; Zech. vii. 12; Rev. i. 10; ii. 7; iv. 2, &c.: nor can we doubt, therefore, but they proceeded from Him always, though sometimes it is not expressly affirmed. So that we are to honour the third Person as the immediate inward instructor of men from the foundation of the world; as Him, who hath admonished, reproved, and striven with the wicked; who hath warmed and cheered the hearts of the pious in all times with manifestations of God's will, with declarations of His favour, with precautions against unseen dangers, with promises of deliverance from the heaviest afflictions, with His presence and guidance in the most intricate difficulties. Abp. Secker.

37. — they have dominion over our bodies, &c.] Though the Jews were permitted to live by their own laws, as we read in the book of Ezra, which was a great privilege, yet they lay under heavy publick burdens, and were compelled to bear them; in particular, their persons were liable to be pressed to serve in the king's wars, or in his works, and their cattle to be employed on his business, whenever he had occasion. Bp. Patrick.

38. — we make a sure covenant, and write it;] In consideration of all which they had stated, they resolved to renew their covenant of better obedience, which they promised under their hands and seals, as the only remedy to procure perfect deliverance; and this they declare in the presence of God at the close of the foregoing confession and prayer. Bp. Patrick. This renewal of the covenant was a very interesting and important transaction. It was in fact the solemn assent of the whole nation to the covenant which made them the chosen people of God, and secured to them the possession of the promised land. And it was their observance, however imperfect, of this covenant, which maintained them in possession, till their outrageous violence rejected the Messiah their lawful king.

29. They clave to their brethren, &c.] They, the bulk of the people, took a solemn oath to do the same as those who had written their names had agreed to do, that is, to live in careful obedience to the laws of Moses, and particularly not to intermarry with any heathen families, promising to oblige all that belonged to them, that were of age of discretion, to do the same; and entering into "a curse," that is, wishing that all the curses written in the law might fall upon them, if they did not perform all that the law required in these matters. Pyle, Bp. Patrick.

The observances to which they chiefly obliged themselves in this covenant were, first, Not to make intermarriages with the Gentiles, either by giving their daughters to them, or by taking any of their daughters to themselves; secondly, to observe the sabbaths and sabbatical years; thirdly, to pay their annual tribute to the temple for the reparation of it, and for the procurement of all the necessaries for its publick service; and, fourthly, to pay the tithes and firstfruits to the priests and Levites. As these particulars are specially named in the covenant, we hence learn what those divine laws are, of which they had been most neglectful since their return from captivity. Dean Prideaux.

Nehemiah was ruler of a nation; and, as such, can be no example to private persons, though he be an excellent one to princes and governours, who, if they would be esteemed as he was, must act as he did. For, though wealth and power may be obtained by many ways, yet respect and reputation can only be acquired by deserving them. But the submission, which the sober and religious part of the Jews paid to Nehemiah, is an example to us how we should behave ourselves to good kings and rulers, and indeed to all who have authority over us. We should willingly obey and assist them, shew them the respect due to their station, neither say nor do any thing that may lessen their character and weaken their authority, and pray for their peace and prosperity, upon which indeed our own depends, and with which it is connected. Dr. Jortin.

34. — for the wood offering,] It seems that till this time, or at least till the time of the Babylonish captivity, it was the office of the Nethinim, or the servants of the temple, to furnish the wood necessary for maintaining the sacred fire on the altar, and generally for the uses of the temple. But, since the return from the captivity, the number of servants being small, the priests, Levites, and rest of the people cast lots for supplying and preparing the wood. The people, divided into portions, provided it and brought it every year by lot. The Nethinim, aided by the Levites, received it, placed it in the temple, and prepared it for use. The priests put it on the altar, and took care to maintain the perpetual fire, according to the law, Levit. vi. 9. All these different functions were regulated by lot. In later times the Jews had a festival, called Xylophoria, or "carrying of wood," because on it they carried with some solemnity the wood for the use of the temple. It appears from Josephus, that the time of celebrating it was the month of August. Calmet.

gave a tithe of the tithes to the priests. And when the people brought them to the Levites, one of the priests was appointed to be present to inspect them, and to see that they justly allotted to the priest the tenth of what they had received: this portion belonging to the priests was brought and deposited in the chambers of the temple. *Bp. Chap. XI. ver. 1. And the rulers of the people &c.] Although the city was now fortified by a wall, yet it was very thinly inhabited; and the neighbouring nations continuing restless in their designs of demolishing the works again, so as to terrify many of the Jews from residing there, it was necessary to take measures for the better security of the place. Accordingly the chief magistrates of the other towns, who were eminent for valour and discretion, agreed to come and dwell at Jerusalem, and the common people consented to send one out of ten for the same purpose. But, besides those whose lot it was to remove thither, there were others (ver. 2.) who "willingly offered themselves;" whom "the people blessed," that is, highly commended and favoured with their good wishes, for their seasonable zeal for the safety of the chief city and the temple of God. Pyle.

21. — dwelt in Ophel:] See note at 2 Chron. xxvii. 3.

23. For it was the king's commandment] Some suppose this to refer to king David, who first appointed the singers to attend in a settled course. But it is more probable the king of Persia is meant, who munificently made them a daily allowance for their better support. Bp. Patrick.

24. — was at the king's hand — concerning the people.] Or, "was on the king's part concerning him and the people." The expression is ambiguous. The plainest meaning seems to be, that he was appointed to see justice done to the interests of the crown, and the rights of the people. Pyle.

Chap. XII. ver. 1. Now these are the priests &c.] As the writer is now about to give an account of the solemn procession, by way of religious dedication of the city wall, or thanksgiving for the happiness of seeing it rebuilt; and as the tribe of Levi, being the ministers of the temple, bore the principal part of the service of this solemnity, he thinks proper to insert a fresh register of that tribe, comprising the chief heads of their several courses who returned from captivity with Zerubbabel. At the first return, these persons, to the number of twenty-three, were the chief heads of the priests, Jeshua being at that time high priest in succession. Pyle.

8. — which was over the thanksgiving,] Was appointed to see the psalm of thanksgiving sung every morning and evening at the burnt sacrifice. Bp. Patrick.

9. — were over against them in the watches.] That is, ministered in their courses, as did the others, and kept their stations over against them in their turns of attendance, which are called their watches or wards. Bp. Patrick.

10, 11. — Joiakim — Jaddua.] In these two verses is an account of the succession of the high priests, from the return from captivity, till the time when they began to bear the greatest sway in the Jewish nation.

11. — Jaddua.] It is commonly supposed that this is the same person as Jaddus the high priest mentioned in profane history, who went out in his pontifical habit to meet Alexander the Great when he came from the conquest of Tyre and Gaza, and who procured from him great privileges for the Jewish nation. Bp. Patrick. If this be the case, that Jaddua is the same as Jaddus in the time of Alexander, then what is related here and at verse 22, must have been added to this book by some later hand than that of Nehemiah, as it is highly improbable that Nehemiah can have lived so long as the time of Alexander's coming into Asia. Dr. Wells.

Before CHRIST about 536.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, the chief of the fathers: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

13 Of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;

14 Of Melicu, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph;

15 Of Harim, Adna; of Meraioth, Helkai;

16 Of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam;

17 Of Abijah, Zichri; of Miniamin, of Moadiah, Piltai;

18 Of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan;

19 And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi;

20 Of Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber;

21 Of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethaneel.

22 ¶ The Levites in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the [b] chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

[b] 1 Chron. 9. 14, &c.

24 And the chief of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, according to the commandment of David the man of God, ward over against ward.

25 Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters keeping the ward at the ‖ thresholds of the gates.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

445.

27 ¶ And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

Before CHRIST 445.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Netophathi;

29 Also from the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

31 Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the dung gate:

32 And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the princes of Judah,

33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam,

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons with trumpets; namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph:

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David the man of God, and Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the fountain gate, which was over against them, they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water gate eastward.

38 And the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people

22. — also the priests, to the reign of Darius] This is understood to mean Darius Codomannus; and this verse, together with ver. 11, affords a proof that Nehemiah did not put a finishing hand to this book; for, to be able to speak of this Darius, he must have lived at least 131 years, and at that age must have written or enlarged this book, which is highly improbable. Le Clerc. Or the Darius meant may be Darius Nothus, who reigned B. C. 423, much earlier than Darius Codomannus, who began to reign B. C. 335. It is probable, that the whole, or at least the latter part of the register contained in the twenty-six first verses of this chapter, was a subsequent addition to the book, made by those who superintended the forming of the canon of the Scriptures. Dr. Gray.

24. — with their brethren over against them, &c.] Though we are somewhat at a loss for information respecting the usual manner and ceremony of chanting the Hebrew poems, and though the subject of the Hebrew sacred musick in general is involved in doubt and obscurity, thus far at least is evident from many examples, that the sacred hymns were alternately sung by opposite choirs, and that the one choir usually performed the hymn itself, while the other sang a particular distich, which interposed regularly at stated intervals: see Exod. xv. 20, 21; Ezra iii. 11; 1 Sam. xviii. 7. Bp. Lowth.

27. And at the dedication of the wall &c.] As Solomon and all Israel dedicated the house of God when it was built, (see 1 Kings viii; 2 Chron. vii,) so now Nehemiah, having set things in good order, thought fit to dedicate the city, whose wall was rebuilt and gates set up, as a place in which God had chosen to place His name. Accordingly he assembled the people to beseech His blessing and protection on the city, in which, being now provided with proper defences, they hoped to be permitted long to serve Him in quiet and security. Bp. Patrick.

By this ceremony of dedicating of the walls, they acknowledged that their hope and confidence were placed in God, and not in the strength of their walls and bulwarks. Bishop Wilson.

39 And from above the gate of Ephraim, and above the old gate, and above the fish gate, and the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the sheep gate: and they stood still in the prison gate.

40 So stood the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

43. Also that day they offered great sacrifices,] The dedication of the walls of Jerusalem was an instance of the piety of Nehemiah, and of the rest of the Jews. By this ceremony, by the sacrifices they offered, and by the hymns of praise which they sung upon the occasion, they meant to ascribe to God's mercy the restoration of their city and nation, and to secure His protection for the future. Zealous persons take occasion from every thing to express their piety and gratitude, to render homage to the Lord for all the temporal advantages they enjoy; and wise and pious magistrates look upon His protection as the fountain of all the happiness, and of all the security both of cities and states. Christians ought to imitate the zeal of Nehemiah and his people, and like them promote the good of religion, provide for the support of the Divine service, and the advancement of God's glory, every one according to his power and abilities. Ostervald.

——the joy of Jerusalem &c.] The emperour Augustus boasted, that he had found Rome built with bricks, and left it built with marble. Nehemiah found Jerusalem a heap of rubbish, and left it so well inhabited, adorned, and fortified, that it soon became a city of note, and recovered in a great measure its former lustre. Dr. Jortin.

45. And both the singers &c.] That is, the singers sung orderly in their courses to the praise of God, and the porters "kept the ward of purification;" that is, duly observed the orders about purification, in not suffering any unclean person or thing to come into the sacred house. Thus they did "according to the commandment of David, &c." who had regulated all things belonging to the duties of these persons; see 1 Chron. xxv, xxvi. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XIII. ver. 1. On that day] It seems not on the day of the dedication of the city wall, related in the last chapter, but on some day after Nehemiah had returned to Jerusalem from Persia, where, as is related at ver. 6, he had gone to wait upon the king: as soon as he returned, all the abuses which had crept in were corrected. It is probable, that he continued the publick reading of the law at stated times, on the great festivals especially; and, on one of these days that portion of Scripture was read at Deut. xxiii. 3, which forbids the admission of the Ammonites and Moabites into "the congregation of God." Bp. Patrick.

——into the congregation of God] See note at Deut xxiii. 3. The expression there is to be understood as a prohibition of intermarriages with these nations; and so all the Jewish doctors expound it. It did not exclude any one, of any nation whatever, from entering into the congregation as a proselyte, nor did the Jews so interpret it, for they freely admitted into their religion all that would embrace it, and treated them in all respects as true Israelites, except in the case of marriage. Dean Prideaux.

3.——they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.] They separated from the true Israelites those who were born of strangers, whom the law would not allow to partake of the rites of marriage with Israelites. Bp. Patrick.

4.——Eliashib the priest, having the oversight of the chamber] It has been doubted, whether he was only a common priest, or whether the high priest of this name is meant, mentioned at chap. iii. 1. It is most probable, that the high priest is meant, and that the expression, "having the oversight of the chamber," (or chambers, the singular put for the plural,) implies his having the whole government of the temple, especially since it is not to be conceived how any one, less than the chief governour of the temple, could make so great an innovation as that here described. Dean Prideaux.

8 And it grieved me sore: therefore I cast forth all the houshold stuff of Tobiah out of the chamber.

9 Then I commanded, and they cleansed the chambers: and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat offering and the frankincense.

10 ¶ And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to his field.

15 ¶ In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine presses on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath day?

18 Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath day.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye † about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

† Heb. before the wall?

—— was allied unto Tobiah:] He had married his grandson to the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, who was the firm friend of this Tobiah, chief of the Ammonites, ver. 28. Pyle.

5. And he had prepared for him a great chamber, &c.] It seems he had pulled down the partitions of several of the temple chambers, where the tithes, offerings, and other sacred things used to be laid up, to make large and spacious lodgings for this heathen, to the scandal of his religion, and the great damage of the country. Pyle.

6. — and after certain days] In the Hebrew the words are, "at the end of days," meaning perhaps "the end of the year." It has been the prevailing opinion, that Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem in the same year, and this is adopted in the dates given in the margin of our Bible, according to Archbishop Usher. On the other hand, Dean Prideaux is of opinion, that he was absent for not less a space than five years: he grounds his opinion principally on the idea, that a considerable time was required for those great abuses to grow to such a height, as is described in this chapter; and he observes, that the word translated "days," very frequently signifies a number of years in Scripture.

10. — the portions of the Levites had not been given] The tithes which had been assigned to maintain the ministers of the temple in their offices and stations, had been either embezzled by the high priest and other rulers of the temple under him, or else withdrawn by the people, and not paid at all; and, for want of these, the Levites and singers were driven from the temple, each to his home, to seek subsistence in some other way; a circumstance which had occasioned the neglect of the daily service in the house of God. Dean Prideaux.

15. In those days &c.] Although these things are all related in one chapter, yet it does not follow that all the reformations took place at one time; but Nehemiah probably brought them about as occasions called for them, and as he saw opportunities for effecting them with success. Dean Prideaux.

—— and I testified against them] Some translate these words, "and I contested with them that they should sell provisions on those days when they might be sold," (and not on the sabbath.) Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST about 434.

22 And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the sabbath day. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the ‖ greatness of thy mercy.

23 ¶ In those days also saw I Jews that † had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab:

24 And their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and † could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language † of each people.

† Heb. they discerned not to speak.

25 And I contended with them, and ‖ cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

26 Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: [d] nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin.

Before CHRIST about 434.

[d] 1 Kings 11. 1, &c.

27 Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?

28 And one of the sons of Joiada, the son of Eliashib the high priest, was son in law to Sanballat the Horonite: therefore I chased him from me.

29 Remember them, O my God, † because they have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites.

30 Thus cleansed I them from all strangers, and appointed the wards of the priests and the Levites, every one in his business;

31 And for the wood offering, at times appointed, and for the firstfruits. Remember me, O my God, for good.

22. — I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves,] He desired the Levites to attend at the gates instead of his own servants, and commanded them to cleanse themselves by some known purification, which might procure for them the greater reverence. Bp. Patrick.

—— and spare me according to &c.] He had before besought God to remember his good deeds, ver. 14; but, to shew that he did not think there was any proper merit or worthiness in them, which required a reward, as a debt of justice due to them, he here explains himself, and prays to be rewarded, or rather pardoned, out of God's free goodness, according to the greatness or multitude of His mercies. Bp. Patrick.

25. — and cursed them,] Denounced the curses of God which would fall upon them if they did not reform. Dr. Wells.

—— and smote certain of them, &c.] Ordered the publick officers to beat some of the most notorious offenders with rods or scourges, according to Deut. xxv. 2; "and plucked off their hair." This punishment was esteemed a peculiar disgrace in Eastern countries; Isai. l. 6; Jerem. xlviii. 37. The hair was reckoned a great ornament, and a distinction of a free man; thus to pluck it off was to brand a person with shame, and to give him the appearance of a slave. Bp. Patrick.

The proper meaning of the Hebrew word is, that they tore off the hair with violence; which punishment was painful as well as disgraceful. This kind of punishment was common in Persia. Calmet.

26. — who was beloved of his God,] See the name given him at his birth, 2 Sam. xii. 25, and the several marks of Divine favour bestowed upon him, 1 Kings ii. 9.

29. Remember them, O my God, &c.] He prays to God to remember to punish them according to their deserts if they remained impenitent, because they had hereby defiled the order of the priests, in whom he had required greater purity than in other Israelites. Dr. Wells.

31. — Remember me — for good.] Magistrates and persons in authority would do well seriously to attend to these words which this prudent and religious governour of Jerusalem several times repeats in this book, and which are so full of piety and trust in God. Upright pastors, and in general all who have a true zeal for the house of God, and who labour heartily, and with a sincere affection, in the edification of the church, may use the same words, and be assured, that God will remember them for their good, and be the rewarder of their piety. Nehemiah in all his conduct shewed great zeal for God's glory, and at the same time much prudence, resolution, and confidence in the Divine support. Magistrates and governours should read and meditate in this book with great attention, and derive improvement from the noble examples of piety and wisdom contained in it. Ostervald. Nehemiah probably continued in his government to the time of his death, which seems to have been in a very old age, when he was full of years and honour. If he had lived in some polite age and country, he would have had statues erected in the publick places, and all the regard paid to him, which a generous and ingenious people can bestow upon true merit. But, as he performed his good works principally for the service of God and of religion, he desired to have his reward rather from God than from men; and therefore he breaks out, once and again, in these words, "Think upon me, my God, for good, and spare me according to the greatness of Thy mercy." He prays that God would accept his good intentions, and forgive his imperfections. He had his recompense in both worlds; happy in the love of his people, happy in seeing his honest labours blest with great success: and his own history, written by himself, and being part of the Holy Scriptures, transmits his name and his reputation to all generations, while statues, and pillars, and other frail monuments of human grandeur, moulder away and fall into oblivion.

In the character of Nehemiah we see liberality, disinterestedness, courage, industry, uniformity of conduct, and every social accomplishment. Though our situation and circumstances permit us not to do what he did, yet we may shew the same temper, by acting boldly and honourably in our station, by discountenancing profaneness and immorality, by encouraging virtue, knowledge, learning, and useful arts and sciences, by rejecting all unlawful gain, all private profit which is detrimental to society, by relieving the wants of our brethren, by submitting to the inconveniences and hardships which the publick good may at any time require, by loving our religion and liberties better than the wages of slavery and iniquity, and by acting thus constantly and steadily, whether it be fashionable or unfashionable, whether it be safe or dangerous. This is the general duty of subjects: and, as to the ministers of the Gospel, they are more particularly obliged both to teach and to practise obedience to the government in all things lawful; not for fear of punishment, which is servile; nor for lucre, which is sordid; but, from obedience to the will of God, and for the sake of a good conscience, of their own solemn engagements, and of the publick tranquillity and welfare. Dr. Jortin.

Nehemiah was probably the last governour delegated by the Persian kings; who possibly, after his death, left the government of Judea to the high priest of the Jews, till the Persian empire was destroyed by Alexander the Great. Dr. Gray.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS book is in the Hebrew styled "the Volume of Esther:" it was received into the Jewish canon with particular veneration; and esteemed above many of the prophetick books, probably because therein are described the origin and ceremonies of the feast of Purim. It is called the Book of Esther, because it contains the history of this Jewish captive, who, by her remarkable accomplishments, gained the affections of Ahasuerus; and by a marriage with him was raised to the throne of Persia. The author of the book is not certainly known. Some of the Fathers suppose it to have been written by Ezra; others contend that it was composed by Joachim, high priest of the Jews, and grandson of Josedech. The Talmudists attribute it to the joint labours of the great synagogue, which succeeded Ezra in the superintendence of the canon of Scripture. The 20th verse of the 9th chapter of the book has led others to believe that Mordecai was the author; but what is there related to have been written by him, seems only to refer to the circular letter which he distributed. There are, lastly, other writers, who maintain that the book was the production of Esther's and Mordecai's united industry; and probably they may have communicated an account of events so interesting to the whole nation to the great synagogue at Jerusalem, some of the members of which may with great reason be supposed to have digested the information thus received into its present form. We have, however, no sufficient evidence to determine, nor is it, perhaps, of much importance to ascertain precisely, who was the author: but that the book contains a genuine and faithful description of what did actually happen, is certain, not only from its admission into the canon, but also from the institution of the feast of Purim, which from its first establishment has been regularly observed as an annual solemnity, on the 14th and 15th of the month Adar, in commemoration of the great deliverance which Esther, by her interest, had procured; and which is even now celebrated among the Jews with many peculiar ceremonies, and with rejoicings even to intoxication. This festival was called Purim, or the feast of lots, (Pur in the Persian language signifying a lot,) from the events mentioned in chap. iii. 7; ix. 24.

The book describes the advancement of Esther; who, by the interest which she conciliated with Ahasuerus, delivered the Jews from a great destruction which had been contrived for them by Haman, an insolent favourite of the king. It presents an interesting description of mortified pride, and of malice baffled to the destruction of its contrivers. It likewise exhibits a very lively representation of the vexations and troubles, of the anxieties, treachery, and dissimulation of a corrupt court. The manners are painted with great force and fidelity; and the vicissitudes and characters are displayed with dramatick effect. The author seems to have been so intimately acquainted with the Persian customs, that some have conceived a notion that he transcribed his work from the Persian chronicles. It has been remarked, that the name of God is not mentioned throughout the book; His superintendent Providence is however frequently illustrated; it is shewn, indeed, in every part of the work, disconcerting evil designs, and producing great events by means seemingly inadequate. Dr. Gray.

Respecting the time when the events recorded in this history took place, there has been great difference of opinion among learned men. We are told, chap. i. 1, that the events happened in the reign of Ahasuerus king of Persia, who "reigned from India even to Ethiopia, over 127 provinces:" and this extent of dominion plainly proves that he was one of the successors of Cyrus; but it is by no means agreed who is the person here meant by Ahasuerus, a name which does not occur in profane history. Archbishop Usher supposes that by Ahasuerus is meant Darius Hystaspes, who began to reign B. C. 521; and agreeably to this supposition, the dates of the several events are given in the margin of our Bibles. Scaliger contends that Xerxes is meant; and various authors of high authority maintain that Artaxerxes Longimanus, who began to reign B. C. 464, is the Ahasuerus here mentioned. "In my judgment Dean Prideaux has very satisfactorily shewn that by Ahasuerus we are to understand Artaxerxes Longimanus. Josephus also considered Ahasuerus and Artaxerxes to be the same person; and we may observe that Ahasuerus is always translated Artaxerxes in the Greek version, and he is called by that name in the Apocryphal part of the book of Esther. Upon these authorities, I place the commencement of this history about the year B. C. 460, and it continues through a space not exceeding twenty years." Bp. Tomline.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 521.

1 Ahasuerus maketh royal feasts. 10 Vashti, sent for, refuseth to come. 13 Ahasuerus, by the counsel of Memucan, maketh the decree of men's sovereignty.

NOW it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus, (this is Ahasuerus which reigned, from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces:) Before CHRIST about 521.

2 That in those days, when the king Ahasuerus sat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in Shushan the palace, Chap. I. ver. 1.—of Ahasuerus,] See the Introduction.

—— which reigned, from India even unto Ethiopia,] We are informed by Herodotus, that Darius conquered India; and there might be the number of provinces here mentioned between that country and "Ethiopia," whether we understand by Ethiopia the country near Arabia, or that beyond Egypt. Bp. Patrick. See note at Numb. xii. 1.

2.—sat on the throne of his kingdom,] These words imply that he enjoyed peace and quietness throughout his kingdom. Bp. Patrick.

—— in Shushan the palace,] See note at Neh. i. 1.

Before CHRIST about 519.

3 In the third year of his reign, he made a feast unto all his princes and his servants; the power of Persia and Media, the nobles and princes of the provinces, being before him:

4 When he shewed the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his excellent majesty many days, even an hundred and fourscore days.

5 And when these days were expired, the king made a feast unto all the people that were † present in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

6 Where were white, green, and ‖ blue, hangings, fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: the beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement ‖ of red, and blue, and white, and black, marble.

‖ Or, violet.

‖ Or, of porphyre, and marble, and alabaster, and stone of blue colour.

7 And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and † royal wine in abundance, † according to the state of the king.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

Before CHRIST about 519.

9 Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven ‖ chamberlains that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king,

11 To bring Vashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to shew the people and the princes her beauty: for she was † fair to look on.

† Heb. good of countenance.

12 But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's commandment † by his chamberlains: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.

† Heb. which was by the hand of his eunuchs.

13 ¶ Then the king said to the wise men, which knew the times, (for so was the king's manner toward all that knew law and judgment:

14 And the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the [a] seven princes of Persia and Media, which saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom;)

[a] Ezra 7. 14.

15 † What shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

† Heb. What to do.

3. — the power of Persia and Media,] The men in power (as we now speak) of Persia and Media "being before him."

6. Where were white, green, and blue, hangings,] At Aleppo, at present, hangings are never employed, except in the winter on some occasions, to cover the side of a room, when the windows are too much exposed to the cold winds. The hangings mentioned in this passage were probably not the hangings above, but curtains dividing the court of the garden into different booths; for the guests entertained were of different ranks. Harmer.

—— upon a pavement of red, and blue, &c. — marble.] Dr. Russell says, that they pave their courts at Aleppo with marble, and oftentimes with a mixture of yellow and white, red and black, by way of ornament. In the middle of the court there is very commonly a fountain, and a kind of little garden about it, which in that climate must be peculiarly agreeable. This may be explanatory of the words "court of the garden" at ver. 5. Harmer.

8. And the drinking was according to the law; &c.] The word "was" is not in the Hebrew; but the true translation seems to be, "The drinking according to custom none did compel," that is, the law or custom was to compel, but this was now superseded. It seems that, whereas it was customary amongst the Persians to urge one another to hard drinking, the emperour, the better to preserve the peace and decorum of this solemnity, ordered that every one should have his full liberty and drink as he pleased. Pyle.

9. — a feast for the women] The women do not eat with the men in the Eastern feasts: it is however usual for them to feast at the same time by themselves. Thus Maillet, after having given an account of the extraordinary feasting at the castle of Grand Cairo, upon the circumcision of the son of the bashaw of Egypt, tells us, that he was assured that the expense which was incurred at the same time in the apartments of the women of the bashaw, was not much less considerable than what appeared in publick; there being there the same liberalities, the same pleasures, the same abundance, and the same magnificence, that appeared out of those apartments. Harmer.

As in former ages, so at present, it is the custom in the Eastern countries, at all their festivals and entertainments, for the men to be entertained in apartments separate from the women; not the least intercourse or communication being allowed on these occasions between the two sexes. Dr. Shaw.

11. To bring Vashti the queen &c.] We are assured by Herodotus, that the Persians did, on festival occasions, produce their women in publick: he relates a story of seven Persians being sent to Amyntas, a Grecian prince, who received them hospitably, and gave them a splendid entertainment: when after the entertainment they began to drink, one of the Persians thus addressed Amyntas, "Prince of Macedonia, it is a custom with us Persians, whenever we have a publick entertainment, to introduce our concubines and young wives." On this principle Ahasuerus gave command to bring his queen Vashti into the publick assembly. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

13. — wise men, which knew the times,] Men of judgment and knowledge in affairs, able to give advice for the fittest times and manner of performance of all actions. Bp. Hall.

—— (for so was the king's manner &c.] It was his usual practice to consult with his counsellers who were skilled in the laws of their country, before he resolved on any measure. Dr. Wells.

14. — which saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom;)] Who were his principal ministers, and were admitted into his presence, which was allowed only to the great men of the kingdom. In rank they were the first of all his subjects.

The seven counsellers of the king are spoken of in Ezra vii. 14, as being his advisers in granting Ezra his authority. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST about 519.

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall despise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

† Heb. If it be good with the king. † Heb. from before him. † Heb. that it pass not away. † Heb. unto her companion.

19 † If it please the king, let there go a royal commandment † from him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, † that it be not altered, That Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate † unto another that is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) all the wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying † pleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan:

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, into every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, that every man should bear rule in his own house, and † that it should be published according to the language of every people.

† Heb. that one should publish it according to the language of his people.

CHAP. II.

1 Out of the choice of virgins a queen is to be chosen. 5 Mordecai the nursing father of Esther. 8 Esther is preferred by Hegai before the rest. 12 The manner of purification, and going in to the king. 15 Esther best pleasing the king is made queen. 21 Mordecai discovering a treason is recorded in the chronicles.

Before CHRIST 518.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and what was decreed against her. 518.

2 Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king:

3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, † unto the custody of ‖ Hege the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let their things for purification be given them:

† Heb. unto the hand. ‖ Or, Hegai, ver. 8.

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And the thing pleased the king; and he did so.

5 ¶ Now in Shushan the palace there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite;

8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were gathered

18. — Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.] Too much contempt in the wives, and wrath in their husbands, which would cause great divisions and contentions in the several families of the kingdom. Bp. Patrick.

21. — and the king did according to the word of Memucan:] The conduct of Ahasuerus with respect to queen Vashti, it must be recollected, was that of an heathen, acting under the influence of anger and intemperance. It is recorded in Scripture, not that it may be imitated or alleged as a pretence for sin, but that we may derive improvement by observing the events to which it led: his violent will, although apparently ungoverned, being nevertheless so directed by Providence, that it brought forward the remarkable preservation of the Jews, which forms the chief subject of this book. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — he remembered Vashti,] His former affection for her revived: he nevertheless remembered her undutiful conduct, and the decree irrevocably passed against her, so that he was greatly perplexed. Wherefore his counsellers sought to divert his mind toward a new object of attachment. Bp. Patrick.

2. — that ministered unto him,] That ministered unto him in chief; that is, his seven chief counsellers mentioned in chap. i. 14. Dr. Wells.

6. Who had been carried away] Meaning that Kish, the ancestor of Mordecai, had been carried away. Bp. Patrick.

—— with the captivity which had been carried away with Jeconiah] Mordecai was a Jew descended from one of those who had been carried away captive with their king Jeconiah. At this time a multitude of Jews were living in the Eastern countries: a number comparatively small had returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel. See Ezra ii. Pyle, Bp. Hall.

7. — Hadassah, that is, Esther,] Hadassah was her Jewish name; Esther her Persian name. Pyle. Zerubbabel, Daniel, and other Jews of the captivity, in like manner bore two names. See the note on Ezra i. 8. The derivation of the Persian name Esther, and its meaning, are unknown. Dean Prideaux.

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that she were called by name.

Before CHRIST about 515.

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

about 515.

19 And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, then Mordecai sat in the king's gate.

---

10. Esther had not shewed her people nor her kindred:] Esther took care, by the advice of Mordecai, to conceal her country and parentage, that she might not be subject to contempt on that account. Pyle.

11. And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, &c.] It is evident to every reader that the anxiety of Mordecai for Esther was extreme. But we cannot fully enter into the circumstance of his walking day after day, for a long period of time, probably upwards of a year, without recollecting the extreme vigilance, with which the harems of the East are guarded. Sir J. Chardin says, "The place, where the women are shut up, is sacred, especially among persons of condition; and it is a crime for any person whatever to be inquiring what passes within those walls." "A man may walk an hundred days one after another by the house where the women are, and yet know no more what is done therein, than at the farther end of Tartary." This may account for the conduct of Mordecai, who "walked every day before the court of the women's house," to pick up any intelligence that might chance to come within his cognizance, respecting his niece. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

17. And the king loved Esther above all &c.] Providence determined the choice of Ahasuerus in favour of one who should be afterward an instrument of preserving His people in a time of imminent danger. The same Divine wisdom had formerly provided for the welfare of his chosen race, by sending Joseph before them into Egypt, and making him lord of all Egypt, that he might save the lives of his brethren in a season of famine, Gen. xlv. 7. Bp. Hall, Collyer.

—— so that he set the royal crown upon her head, &c.] It always has been, and still is, the custom of the kings of Abyssinia to marry what number of wives they choose: these are not therefore all queens; but among them there is one, who is considered particularly as queen, and upon her head is placed the crown, and she is called the Iteghe. Thus, in Persia, we read that Ahasuerus loved Esther, who had found grace in his sight more than the other virgins, and he placed a golden crown upon her head. And Josephus informs us, that when Esther was brought before the king, he was exceedingly delighted with her, and made her his lawful wife, and, when she came into the palace, he put a crown upon her head. Bruce.

18. Then the king made a great feast &c.] The royal marriage was celebrated with magnificent entertainments; all the provinces were released from a certain portion of their taxes, in honour of the new empress, and vast presents were made to her, and to the court favourites. Pyle.

19. —when the virgins were gathered together the second time,] That is, at the time of this present marriage of Ahasuerus with Esther: Vashti having been also before chosen in the same manner from among the virgins gathered together out of different parts of his empire. Pyle, Dr. Wells.

—— Mordecai sat in the king's gate.] Mordecai was an officer in the court of Ahasuerus; his service called him daily to attend in the king's gate. Bp. Hall. It appears from several passages of Scripture, that the king's gate was the place in which publick affairs were transacted. Bp. Patrick. The Scripture says of Daniel, (after having stated that Nebuchadnezzar made him a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the governours over all the wise men of Babylon,) that he "sat in the gate of the king," Dan. ii. 48, 49. Of the meaning of these words we have the following illustrations: "If we quit then the streets of these cities, and enter into any of the principal houses, we shall first pass through a porch or

CHAP. III.

1 Haman, advanced by the king, and despised by Mordecai, seeketh revenge upon all the Jews. 7 He casteth lots. 8 He obtaineth by calumniation a decree of the king to put the Jews to death.

Before CHRIST about 510.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus promote Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes that were with him.

2 And all the king's servants, that were in the king's gate, bowed, and reverenced Haman: for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman

20.—for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him.] That mind is truly great and noble that is not changed with the highest prosperity: and such was the disposition of queen Esther, whom even the splendour of royalty could not induce to disregard her kinsman and friend, or to depart from a dutiful observance of his directions. Bp. Hall.

22. And the thing was known to Mordecai, who told it unto Esther] Mordecai sets before us the example of a faithful subject, in counteracting the treasonable designs of these men: and it may be remarked, that he shewed this loyalty toward an heathen sovereign, and one under whom he lived as a captive, true religion and loyalty being inseparable; and that herein he exemplified the injunction of the Lord by the Prophet Jeremiah, "Seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives," Jer. xxix. 7. Bp. Andrewes, Dr Isaac Barrow.

Mordecai discreetly communicated his discovery, not to indifferent persons, but to the queen: Esther, in laying it before the king, dutifully remembered Mordecai, and commended him to the royal favour, by mentioning him as the author of her information. Bp. Andrewes.

23.—and it was written in the book of the chronicles before the king.] Mordecai was thus registered in the publick annals, as the author of this service done to the crown: the circumstance of his name being so recorded, became afterward the occasion of his advancement, and of great events treated of in the sequel of this book. Pyle.

Chap. III. ver. 1.—the Agagite,] Haman was by descent an Amalekite, of the posterity of Agag, who was king of Amalek in the time of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. Dean Prideaux.

2.—nor did him reverence.] It is probable that he denied Haman this honour on account of the curse under which he lay, as being an Amalekite, Exod. xvii. 14; 1 Sam. xv. 1, 2. It is probable also that all the Jews did the same; otherwise there would have been no ground, even in the most malicious mind, for such a design of destroying the entire people. Bp. Wilson. Or perhaps the reverence, which it was commanded should be paid to this great man, was a kind of divine honour, such as was sometimes addressed to the Persian monarchs themselves. And this, being a species of idolatry, Mordecai refused to pay on conscientious principles. Perhaps too, it was Haman's understanding that his refusal was the result of his Jewish principles, which was the very thing that determined him to attempt the destruction of the Jews in general, knowing they were all of the same mind. Dr. Jennings.

To bow to all great persons was a common mark of respect: and for this a particular command was not necessary, nor would Mordecai have refused it at the peril of his countrymen as well as himself. In the reverence therefore here commanded, something more than common respect, and bordering on adoration, appears to have been intended. The author of the Apocryphal additions to the book of Esther has thus interpreted the conduct of Mordecai, and represented him as praying in these words: "Thou knowest all things, and Thou knowest, Lord, that it was neither in contempt nor pride, nor for any desire of glory, that I did not bow down to proud Haman. For I could have been content with good will for the salvation of Israel to kiss the soles of his feet. But I did this, that I might not prefer the glory of man above the glory of God: neither will I worship any but Thee, O God," Apocr. Esth. xiii. 12—14. Bp. Patrick.

4.—whether Mordecai's matters would stand:] Whether Mordecai would persist in his conduct, and what would be the event of it. Bp. Patrick.

——for he had told them that he was a Jew.] He had probably been much pressed to give his reason, and he wished to shew that it was not pride, or humour, which made him unwilling to comply with the king's order, but that he was influenced by his religion, which required those of his nation to destroy the Amalekites, and to pay worship to none but God alone. Dr. Wells.

6.—for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai:] That is, Haman had been informed that Mordecai was a Jew. Dr. Wells.

——wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews] Mordecai alone had offended him; yet such was his pride or malice, or both, that I know not how many thousands, men, women, and children, must die all, for no other cause but that Mordecai happened to be their countryman. Bp. Andrewes.

Before CHRIST about 510. sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

From hence we may take occasion to consider the miserable influence of pride and ambition; which intoxicate the mind, making men insolent and outrageous, willing to burst all the bonds of humanity on the slightest and most trivial occasions, and unable to endure any thing which stands in their way, or tends to shew them the falsehood of those arrogant notions which they entertain of themselves. Hence too we may observe the pernicious effects of ungoverned anger, which being once kindled, quickly rises into a raging fire, and spreads destruction far and wide. Dr. J. Balguy.

7. — they cast Pur, that is, the lot,] It was the superstitious manner of the Eastern countries to inquire, by casting lots, what time would be fortunate or unfortunate for the execution of any considerable design. Accordingly Haman gathered together his magicians, and lots were cast before him: and it being first inquired what month would be most favourable, by their rules of divination, they supposed that the month Adar, the last month of the year, would be such; and afterward, by the same rules, the thirteenth day of that month was chosen for Haman's purpose. Pyle, Dr. Wells. This day being full eleven months after the time when the lots were cast, the lot which pointed it out seems to have been directed by the especial providence of God, that, by so long an interval occurring, there might be time enough to take the measures requisite to prevent the intended mischief. Dean Prideaux. And this remarkably exemplifies the words of Solomon in Prov. xvi. 33, "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Bp. Andrewes.

8. And Haman said &c.] Haman's accusation of the Jewish people abounds with malicious insinuations, accompanied by pretences of regard for the publick welfare. Haman conceals his private resentment against Mordecai, as if fearful of exposing the evil motive which actuated him in his application to the king. Bp. Hall.

—— dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom;] A great number of Jews remained settled in the countries whither they had been carried captive, not accepting the grant of permission to return, offered them by Cyrus. Bp. Patrick. In the midst of idolatry they preserved their religion, and transmitted it to their posterity. And in aftertimes there were Jews so generally dispersed over the habitable world, that in Acts ii. 5, we read, that at the feast of Pentecost "there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Bp. Newton.

—— and their laws are diverse from all people;] One great purpose of many peculiar rights and customs enjoined to the Jews evidently was, that they might be kept separate from other nations, and not adopt the manners and practices connected with idolatry. The peculiarity of their customs frequently drew on them the reproaches of heathens: Haman here makes it a ground of accusation against them: Tacitus represents them as a people whose religious rites were contrary to all the world beside; that they accounted profane what to others was most sacred, and, on the contrary, allowed and observed what by others was forbidden. Collyer. Cicero said of the Jewish religion, that it was wholly inconsistent with the splendour and ancient institutions of the Roman empire, and with the dignity of the Roman name. Dr. Jackson.

9. — and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver] A sum of more than two millions one hundred thousand pounds sterling of our money. Dean Prideaux. To compensate for the loss of the tribute paid by the Jews. Bp. Patrick.

If revenge were not very sweet to the malicious man, he could not be content to purchase it at so high a rate. How do we see daily that the thirst hereof carries men to a ruinous prodigality of estate, body, and soul! Bp. Hall.

10. — and gave it unto Haman] Thus placing the royal seal under Haman's discretion. Dr. Wells.

11. — The silver is given to thee,] "I do not require thee to pay the ten thousand talents of silver which thou offerest." See ver. 9. Dr. Wells.

So great was at this time the king's favour towards Haman, that he remitted all the sum which he engaged to give by way of compensation, and granted to him all that he desired without it. Dean Prideaux.

—— the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.] Thus, without any examination into the real state of things, Ahasuerus consented to the destruction of the whole Jewish race: so unwilling are men that love their pleasure to take any pains in distinguishing between truth and falsehood. Bp. Patrick.

In all this behaviour of Ahasuerus, who sees not too much vehemence of headstrong passion? Vashti is cast off for a trifle; the Jews are given to slaughter for nothing: his rage in the one, his favour in the other, is too impotent: as he was a bad husband, so he is an equally bad king. Bp. Hall. Hence also we may take warning not to lend our ear to detractors, or to credit evil reports and unfavourable representations, till we have examined their foundation, and know them to be true. Osterwald.

12. — of every province according to the writing thereof, &c.] That is, it was written in the language of every people, and in the character which they could read. Bp. Patrick. See Apocryphal Esther, chap. xiii, where this decree is given at length.

after their language; in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

13 And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

14 The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was published unto all people, that they should be ready against that day.

15 The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed.

CHAP. IV.

1 The great mourning of Mordecai and the Jews. 4 Esther, understanding it, sendeth to Mordecai, who sheweth the cause, and adviseth her to undertake the suit. 10 She excusing herself is threatened by Mordecai. 15 She appointing a fast undertaketh the suit.

Before CHRIST about 510.

WHEN Mordecai perceived all that was done, Mordecai rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and cried with a loud and a bitter cry;

2 And came even before the king's gate: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth.

3 And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and † many lay in sackcloth and ashes.

† Heb. sackcloth and ashes were laid under many.

4 So Esther's maids and her † chamberlains came and told it her. Then was the queen exceedingly grieved; and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him: but he received it not.

5 Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, † whom he had appointed to attend upon her, and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, to know what it was, and why it was.

† Heb. whom he had set before her.

—— sealed with the king's ring.] The very ancient custom of sealing despatches with a seal or signet set in a ring is still retained in the East. Thus in Egypt, Dr. Pococke says, they make the impression of their name with their seal, generally of cornelian, which they wear on their finger, and which is blacked when they have occasion to seal with it. And Mr. Hanway remarks, that the Persian ink serves not only for writing, but for subscribing with a seal: indeed, many of the Persians in high office could not write. In their rings they wear agates, which serve for seals, on which is frequently engraved their name, and some verse from the Koran. So also Dr. Shaw: As few or none of the Arab Shekhs, or of Turkish and Eastern kings, princes, or bashaws know to write their own names, all their letters and decrees are stamped with their proper rings, seals, or signets, (see 1 Kings xxi. 8; chap. iii. 12,) which are usually of silver or cornelian, with their respective names engraved upon them on one side, and the name of their kingdom or principality, or else some sentence of the Koran, on the other. The art and practice of engraving names on a signet is as old as Moses. See Exod. xxxix. 14, 30. Parkhurst.

13. And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces,] Herodotus thus describes these posts which were in use among the Persians. There is no method of conveyance more expeditious than these messengers. They are ordered in the following way. Men with horses are kept in readiness at stations distant one day's journey from each other. Intelligence is forwarded by the first of these messengers to the second, and by him to the third, and so on to the last. Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor darkness, prevent them from performing their course with the greatest speed. Bp. Patrick.

Xenophon also says of them: I find that Cyrus set on foot another contrivance beneficial to his vast empire, by means of which he gained early information of what was doing in remote parts of his dominions. He formed establishments of stables, horses, and attendants, as far distant from each other as an horse could travel with ease in one day; and at each of these stations he appointed a person to receive and transmit the letters brought by the messengers, and to see that the men and horses were taken care of after their journey, and that fresh ones were sent forward. Sometimes these journeys were not intermitted during the night; the messenger to whose turn it fell to travel at night proceeding as he who had travelled during the day. Parkhurst.

—— and to take the spoil of them for a prey.] This permission would act as a strong motive for putting the decree in execution. Bp. Patrick.

15. — And the king and Haman sat down to drink;] They sat down to enjoy themselves after having given orders for the execution of the plan, and despatched the posts. Herodotus assures us, that the Persians were great drinkers of wine, and that, when filled with wine, they were wont to deliberate on the most important affairs of state. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

—— the city Shushan was perplexed.] The Jews at Shushan, getting intelligence of the matter, were reduced to a great degree of perplexity; and the people of other nations, who had been conquered and taken captive as well as they, fell into great apprehensions, not knowing but that they in their turn might experience the same barbarous treatment. Pyle.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — and went out into the midst of the city, &c.] We may admire the courage of Mordecai in standing forward at this critical juncture, and so strenuously asserting the interest of his countrymen and of his religion, endangered by a sanguinary project for their utter destruction. Dr. Coney.

The Targum states, that when Mordecai had cried aloud in the midst of the city, the Jews gathered round him, and that he caused the book of the law to be brought to the gate of Shushan, and read therein these words of Moses, in Deut. iv. 30, 31, "When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto His voice; (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God;) He will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which He sware unto them." After which he exhorted them to fasting, humiliation, and repentance, according to the example of the Ninevites. Bp. Patrick.

5. — and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, &c.] And gave

Before CHRIST about 510.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, and of the sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them.

8 Also he gave him the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to shew it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

9 And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 ¶ Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into the inner court, who is not called, there is one law of his to put him to death, except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live: but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

Before CHRIST about 510.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there † enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews that are † present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: and if I perish, I perish.

him a commandment to go to Mordecai, and "to know what it was" for which he thus grieved. Dr. Wells.

11. — there is one law of his to put him to death,] One law extending to all that were so presumptuous, whatever might be their rank. This seems to be an ancient law of the country, for it is mentioned by Herodotus; although, according to some, it was procured by Haman, in order that none might come into the king's presence without introduction from him. Bp. Patrick.

—— but I have not been called &c.] This might justly make her fearful that the king's affection toward her was diminished, and that her petition would not be favourably received. Bp. Patrick.

14. — from another place;] He knew not whence, but he confided in God, that by some means or other He would preserve them. Bp. Patrick.

Mordecai tells her, that the decree extended universally to all of her nation, and that, if it came to execution, she must not expect to escape more than any other of the people; that Providence seemed to have advanced her on purpose for this work; but that, if she refused to act her part in it, then deliverance would come in some other way, and she and her father's house would perish. Dean Prideaux.

The faith of Mordecai descries amid all these clouds a cheerful prospect of deliverance. He saw the day of their common destruction fixed, he knew the Persian decrees to be unalterable; but withal he knew there was a Messias to come. Supported by the remembrance of God's covenant to His church, he can foresee Israel's safety, in spite of the sanguinary purposes of its adversaries; trusting the promises of God rather than the threatenings of men. Bp. Hall.

—— but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed:] Deliverance shall certainly come to the people of God; but if thou refuse to act thy part as an instrument of their preservation, thou shalt surely perish, and thy father's house with thee, for thy self-love and want of zeal for thy country and religion. Dean Prideaux, Pyle.

—— and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?] Which is as if he had said, Consider the wonderful and gracious providence of God, in raising thee from among a despised people to be the consort of the greatest monarch upon earth. Think not but the Lord therein certainly intended that some great work should be accomplished by thy hand in favour of His afflicted church. And now the hour is come for thee to make use of the advancement given thee by the Lord; and to try, by that power and interest which thou hast with the king, to reverse the decree of our adversary, and effect the deliverance of our whole nation.

The argument used by Mordecai to Esther is one of general application and use, namely, that one great purpose for which men are entrusted by Providence with power or riches, is that they may therewith do good, and succour those who require their assistance; that they may help those to right who suffer wrong, may stand by their poorer brethren in the day of calamity and distress, and may minister to the comfort of the afflicted; and that it is their sin, if they neglect to make these uses of their superiour advantages. Bp. Sanderson.

16. — neither eat nor drink three days,] The usual way of observing such a fast, was to eat nothing until the evening, and then sparingly. Bp. Wilson.

—— which is not according to the law:] Being thus recommended to God, she resolved not so much to regard the law as the preservation of her people; for there are some cases in which, to observe the laws of man, would be to offend against the laws of God. Bp. Patrick.

—— and if I perish, I perish.] Her meaning is, I will put my life in hazard; I cannot venture it in a better cause; I will do the act, let God give what issue He pleases. Heroical thoughts do well befit great actions. Life can never be better adventured, than where it shall be gain to lose it. Where the necessity of God's church calls for us, no danger should withhold us from all honest means of relief. Bp. Hall. This is a mode of expression resembling the words of Jacob in Gen. xliii. 14, "If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved;" and signifying, If it please God that I perish in my undertaking, His will be done; I am content to die in my duty. These words therefore are uttered, not in despondence, or in presumptuous hardihood, but in genuine and virtuous courage, grounded in the fear of God, and strengthened by the means of those religious exercises in which

Before CHRIST about 510.

17 So Mordecai † went his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

† Heb. passed.

CHAP. V.

1 Esther, adventuring on the king's favour, obtaineth the grace of the golden sceptre, and inviteth the king and Haman to a banquet. 6 She, being encouraged by the king in her suit, inviteth them to another banquet the next day. 9 Haman, proud of his advancement, repineth at the contempt of Mordecai. 14 By the counsel of Zeresh he buildeth for him a pair of gallows.

NOW it came to pass on the third day, that Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in the inner court of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king sat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that she obtained favour in his sight: and the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, If it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

Before CHRIST about 510.

6 ¶ And the king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is;

8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and † to perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do to morrow as the king hath said.

9 ¶ Then went Haman forth that day joyful and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai.

10 Nevertheless Haman refrained himself: and when he came home, he sent and † called for his friends, and Zeresh his wife.

† Heb. caused to come.

11 And Haman told them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and how he had advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and to morrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

13 Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.

Esther had commended herself to His disposal. Bps. Kidder and Patrick.

Esther is the pattern of a truly great character; of love to her country, of compassion, of generous resolution, courage, and patience. Pyle.

See, in the 14th chapter of the Apocryphal book of Esther, the prayer attributed to Esther on this occasion.

Chap. V. ver. 8. — and I will do to morrow as the king hath said.] That is, I will then make known my request. Dr. Wells. Her intention in thus desiring to entertain the king twice at her banquets before she made known her petition to him, was, that she might thereby the more endear herself to him, and dispose him the better to grant the request which she had to make to him. Dean Prideaux.

There was also a singular providence of God in so disposing her mind, that the high honour, which the king bestowed on Mordecai the next day, might in the mean while fall out, and so make way for her petition; as also that Haman might in the mean while make his preparations for the execution of Mordecai. Dr. Wells.

13. Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.] These words of Haman, spoken thus deliberately after he had called together his friends, are evidently the expressions of a real and painful feeling, and shew that vexation and resentment troubled him to an excessive degree, and had gained entire possession of his mind. Ahab, under the tyranny of similar passions, when he could not have his will concerning Naboth's vineyard, "came into his house heavy and displeased—and laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread:" nor could all his worldly magnificence give him relief.

Those things which availed nothing to the happiness of Haman, under his vexation of spirit, are enumerated by him in his complaint uttered in the presence of his friends. They consist of the greatest distinctions and favours that he could desire from the king, and the most alluring objects of human wishes. Nevertheless his enjoyment of all this prosperity is alloyed by the single circumstance of Mordecai's disrespect, which was made a source of misery by his own passions and imagination.

We may hence take occasion to observe, that the proud, the revengeful, the discontented, the unthankful and impatient, are their own tormentors; whether God immediately execute His judgments on them or not, their own temper of mind is their punishment: that, on the other hand, the various natural passions and affections of the heart work together for good, through the Divine grace, to those who govern them rightly; that humility is a great source of happiness; that it is a joyful and pleasant thing to be thankful; and that it is for our benefit to receive cheerfully our appointed portion, having our desires and purposes

14 ¶ Then said Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a †gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and to morrow speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. resigned to the disposal of God, and ever praying that His will be done.

We may hence observe farther, that man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he possesseth; that happiness does not depend upon the outward appearance and condition of any person, and that the greatest earthly prosperity is not proof against vexation of spirit, since a small accident, and even an imaginary misfortune, may spoil the enjoyment of it; and that we can have no solid comfort in any state of life, if our mind be out of order, and if our heart be not right with God. For the foundation of all happiness is a wise and understanding heart, endued with the faith and fear of God. With this, through His grace, we shall know both "how to be abased, and how to abound;" and shall learn "in whatsoever state we are, therewith to be content," Phil. iv. 11, 12. Theed, Dr. J. Balguy.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. On that night &c.] The revengeful projects of Haman were no sooner concerted, than they were followed by a wonderful turn of affairs, in which several instances of providential interference concurred towards the rescue of the innocent, and the mortification of this haughty and injurious man. Pyle.

The Scriptures relate many events brought to pass by means which seem disproportionate, unsuitable, and even contrary to the effect. Such events speak God to be their cause, His invisible power supplying the apparent defects in the means. Thus plots contrived in darkness, with all possible caution and secrecy, are by improbable means and unaccountable accidents disclosed and brought to light; "a bird of the air," as the wise man speaks, "telling the matter," or "the stone," according to the expression of the Prophet, "crying out of the wall." In the book of Esther we read, The king cannot sleep; to divert him, the chronicle is called for; Mordecai's service is there pitched upon, and inquiry made concerning his recompense; honour is decreed him; so the cruel device of Haman comes out, and he himself suffers. Whence can such events proceed but from the ever watchful care of Him, whose eyes are upon the ways of man, and He seeth all his goings? Dr. Isaac Barrow, Bp. Horne.

2. And it was found written, that Mordecai &c.] It was a singular interposition of Divine Providence, that among the voluminous registers of occurrences, afforded by the affairs of so many provinces, the reader should turn to that part in which Mordecai's service was recorded. Bps. Hall and Patrick.

8. —the crown royal which is set upon his head:] That is, upon the head of the horse, as is commonly understood: the Hebrew word signifies any ornament about the head or neck. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

9. —and bring him on horseback through the street &c.] Pitts gives an account of a person, who had turned Mahometan, having honours paid to him, very similar to those here described as paid to Mordecai. Strange as the custom may seem of paying honour to a person by putting vestments on him above his degree, and which it is not designed that he should keep, together with the carrying him thus equipped about a large town on horseback, attended by a cryer; we perceive from this instance that it has prevailed no less with Africans, than anciently with Asiaticks. Harmer.

10. —Make haste,—and do even so to Mordecai] A marvellous concurrence of circumstances drawn together by the infinite wisdom and power of the Almighty. Who but Haman should be called by the king? And when should Haman be called to advise of Mordecai's honour, but in the very instant when he came to petition for Mordecai's destruction? Bp. Hall. Thus Haman's thirst of revenge caused him to minister to his own grief and humiliation. Bp. Patrick.

12 ¶ And Mordecai came again to the king's gate. But Haman hasted to his house mourning, and having his head covered.

13 And Haman told Zeresh his wife and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then said his wise men and Zeresh his wife unto him, If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him.

—— having his head covered.] This was a token of sorrow. See 2 Sam. xv. 30; xix. 4; Jerem. xiv. 3, 4. The same was customary with other nations. Thus Panthea, the wife of Abradatas, when taken captive by Cyrus, is described by Xenophon as sitting covered with a vail, and looking upon the ground; and, among the Greeks, vailing the head is spoken of as a sign of grief. Parkhurst.

13. — If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, &c.] They consider the favour shewn to Mordecai to be a certain prelude of Haman's fall; because the new favourite, being a Jew, would shew no mercy to the irreconcilable enemy of the Jewish nation. They had probably observed too the wonderful interpositions of Providence in favour of the Jews during the captivity, and thence concluded that they were especial objects of the Divine protection. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VII. ver. 4. — although the enemy could not countervail the king's damage.] Although the enemy of our nation, who thus designed our destruction, could not countervail the king's damage; forasmuch as the king would have lost more than he had gained, had we been sold. Dr. Wells.

6. — this wicked Haman.] Never till now did Haman bear his true title. Before, some had styled him noble, others great; some magnificent, and some perhaps virtuous; only Esther gives him his own, Wicked Haman. Ill-deserving popularity doth in vain promise to itself a perpetuity of applause; if our ways be really evil, the time shall come when, after all vain flattery, after all our short-lived glory, our sins shall be drawn forth to light, and our iniquities laid before us, to our utter confusion. Bp. Hall.

8. — Haman was fallen upon the bed] It was the custom in those times to sit or lay upon beds, as they ate and drank, and Haman was now in the posture of a person who had fallen as a suppliant at the feet of Esther.

—— Then said the king, &c.] The king, finding him in this posture, interpreted his conduct as if he were so impudent as to take liberties with the queen's person in his own palace. Not that he could believe this was really the case, but, in his furious passion, he turned every thing to the worst sense, and made use of it to aggravate Haman's crime. Bp. Patrick.

among the ancient Romans, both in their punishment of a parricide, who, when convicted, was immediately hooded, as unworthy of the common light; and in that form of pronouncing sentence on a criminal ascribed by Livy to Tullus Hostilius: "Go, officer, bind his hands, veil his head, hang him on the fatal tree." This custom was noticed in Egypt by Dr. Pococke, who speaks of a man brought before the Bey, like a malefactor, with his hands behind him as if tied, and a napkin put over his head, as malefactors commonly have. Parkhurst, Harmer.

9. — the gallows] In the margin, "the tree." Crucifixion appears to have been the punishment inflicted by Ahasuerus upon Haman. Polycrates of Samos, Cicero tells us, was crucified by order of Oroetes, prætor of Darius. One of the capital punishments in Abyssinia is the cross. Bruce.

—— Hang him thereon.] Thus, within the compass of a day, Haman's fortune was completely reversed: but a few hours after he imagined his success most certain, this sentence of condemnation was pronounced upon him. Thus also we find many instances in Holy Scripture in which the security of the wicked is suddenly disturbed by the Divine summons: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," Luke xii. 20. Bp. Andrewes.

When iniquitous enterprises, managed by subtilty or violence, are suddenly and seasonably defeated, then the ever-vigilant Eye, and the all-powerful Hand, are concerned. God doth ever see the deceitful workers of iniquity, though they devise their wickedness in secret. He often doth suffer it to grow on to a pitch of maturity, till it be thoroughly formed, till it be ready to break forth in fearful effects; then in a moment He crusheth it to nothing. God beholdeth unjust men setting out in their designs; He letteth them proceed in full career till they are reaching the object of their wishes; then instantly He checketh, He turneth them back, He overthroweth them. Thus was Haman's plot confounded, when he had procured a royal decree, when he had fixed a time, when he had issued forth letters to destroy the people of God. Thus was Pharaoh overwhelmed when he had just overtaken the children of Israel. Thus perished the designs of Abimelech, of Absalom, of Adonijah, of Sanballat. Thus, when Sennacherib had encamped against Jerusalem with a mighty host, and to all appearance had the city in his power, the Lord did put a hook in his nose, and turned him back into his own land. Almighty God could prevent the very beginning of wicked designs, or could subvert them in any stage of their progress; but He rather winketh for a time at their success, and suffereth the designers to go on till they are elevated to the height of confidence, and till the good are on the brink of ruin: then surprisingly He striketh in with effectual succour: thus declaring how vain is the presumption of the ungodly, how needful and how certain is His protection over His good and faithful servants; how much reason the one hath to dread Him, and the other to confide in Him. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

10. — on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai.] That same instrument, which he had reared on high for Mordecai's destruction, is appointed by Providence for his own; and his shame and punishment are rendered as conspicuous as his former honour and prosperity. Dr. J. Balguy, Bp. Hall.

In Abyssinia, when the prisoner is condemned in capital cases, he is not again remitted to prison, but is immediately carried away, and the sentence executed upon him. Among other instances of this, Abba Salama was condemned by the king the morning he entered Gondar, on his return from Tigre, and immediately hanged, in the garment of a priest, on a tree at the door of the king's palace. The same was the practice in Persia, as we learn from Xenophon, and more plainly from Diodorus. Bruce.

In that deliverance of the Jews from Haman's conspiracy, there is no extraordinary manifestation of God's power; no particular cause or agent was in its working advanced above the ordinary pitch of nature; and yet the contrivance or suiting of these ordinary agents appointed by God, is more admirable than if the same end had been effected by means truly miraculous. For a king not to take kindly rest by night, though in a bed of ease, is not unusual: for a king again to seek to solace his waking thoughts by hearing the annals of his kingdom, is more commendable than rare: but that king Ahasuerus should lie awake at that time, specially when Haman did watch and plot the destruction of the Jews; that, causing the chronicles of his kingdom to be read, the reader should light on the place wherein was recorded Mordecai's unrewarded good service, in discovering the treason intended against the king's person; this was from the Keeper of Israel, who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, and who was marvellous in His people's sight.

It was His doing, likewise, that Esther, by Mordecai's advice, should conceal her nation and parentage until she came in such high favour with the king; that queen Vashti should be displaced, and Esther preferred, about the same time wherein Haman was advanced, and by his advancement enabled to do a remediless mischief to the Jewish nation, if the Lord had not, as the wise man speaks, "made one thing against another." Dr. Jackson.

As miracles display the infinite power of God, so His direction of human affairs exhibits His infinite wisdom, and proves the subordination of all the several ranks of creatures, with whatsoever strength or efficacy they be endowed, to His providence. In wisdom He made them all: in wisdom He marshalleth, He ordereth them all. Dr. Jackson.

The succession of events which led to the deliverance of the Jews from Haman, shew that the providence of God may be at work where men least suppose it; that He in His infinite wisdom makes unlikely accidents subservient to His ends; and that the minute parts of His dispensations may not always afford sufficient ground for our limited faculties to estimate the great purposes of His will. Bp. Hall.

succession or deputation. Thus in Gen. xli. 42, Pharaoh, setting Joseph over the whole land of Egypt, gives him his ring; that is, his seal, as Josephus the historian explains it. Antiochus, declaring his son successor in his kingdom, sends him "the crown, and his robe, and his signet," 1 Mac. vi. 14, 15. Thus in Aristophanes, the taking away of the ring signifies the discharging of a chief magistrate: and a little after, the giving of a ring to another is the making another steward or chief magistrate, by delivering to him the badge of his office. To these instances it may be added, that, in our own nation, the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and other high officers of state, are appointed by the King delivering to them the seals of their respective offices. Parkhurst.

about 509. NOW in the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar, on the thirteenth day of the same, when the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, (though it was turned to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them;)

2 The Jews gathered themselves together in their cities throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as sought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for the fear of them fell upon all people.

17. — And many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.] When Haman's conspiracy was defeated, and the destruction designed against the Jews was, by a wonderful chain of providences, turned upon their enemies, it is said that "many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them." Their enemies, though heathens, saw plainly, from what had happened, that the Jews had more than ordinary favour shewed them from heaven, and from thence inferred that their laws and religion must needs be more acceptable there than any other; and therefore left their own for theirs, and became Jews themselves that they might partake of the same privileges and favours with them. Bp. Beveridge.

The dispersion of the Jews throughout the numerous provinces of the Babylonian and Persian empires, became providentially the means of publishing the true religion among the people with whom they were intermixed. Being often eminently distinguished by the royal favour, they were enabled to convey a knowledge of the truth with greater advantage: the evident interpositions of God in the cause of His people also raising exalted sentiments of His religion. Dr. Owen.

Chap. IX. ver. 14. — they hanged Haman's ten sons.] A farther instance of the retribution awaiting guilt. Haman had flattered his malicious and sanguinary spirit with the cruel hope of destroying the whole Jewish kindred: now his own sons (of the number of whom he had before boasted) are all cut off, and on the gallows share the reproach of their father. Bp. Hall.

16. — and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand,] It is probable that these persons were destroyed in consequence of their having obstinately persevered in measures of active hostility against the Jews, notwithstanding the change in the disposition of the king. On this occasion was displayed the mischievous effect of that absurd law of the Medes and Persians, that the king's decree, when signed by him and sealed with his seal, could not be changed or repealed. For the king was obliged to issue a counter-decree, empowering the Jews to take up arms in self-defence; and in consequence of this, eight hundred men were slain in Shushan, and in the provinces seventy-five thousand. Such was the calamitous result of a rash and unjust decree, ratified at a banquet; when "the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed." Dr. Hales.

same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

25. —should return upon his own head,] For while he sought direction from the false gods of Persia, his whole undertaking was overruled by the God of Israel. Bp. Patrick.

When such men as Haman are not only supplanted in their wicked contrivances, but dismally chastised for them, these occurrences do more than insinuate Divine wisdom to intervene, countermining and confounding such devices. For He it is who, as the Scripture telleth us, maketh the diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish; disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise; taketh the wise in their own craftiness, and turneth down the counsels of the froward headlong. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

28. — and that these days of Purim should not fail] Josephus bears testimony to the observance of this festival in his time, in the following words: "Hence even now all the Jews that are in the habitable earth keep these days festival, and send presents to one another." It has also been regularly observed by the Jews to this day as an annual solemnity: and it forms a standing monument of the events recorded in this book. Dr. Gray.

The following accounts are found of the ceremonies used at this festival in different ages: some savouring the superstition of the apostate Jews; others, the piety of their forefathers.

The festival has been generally observed by a total rest from labour, by attendance in the synagogues, by sending presents to one another, by giving portions of food and gifts to the poor, and by great rejoicing and festivity. In the synagogue, the book of Esther is solemnly read from beginning to end; all Jews, whether men, women, children, or servants, being required to attend, because they all had a share in the deliverance obtained by Esther. Before the reading begins, three thanksgivings are briefly offered up; in the first, they praise God for counting them worthy to attend this sacred solemnity; in the second, for His wonderful preservation of their forefathers; and in the third, for their having lived to keep another festival in memory of it. The history of Esther is always read on this occasion from a copy written on a roll of parchment, and never from a printed book, it bearing peculiarly the title of the Megillah, or roll of Esther. (See the Introduction.) As often as the name of Haman is read, they beat upon the seats and floors, uttering such exclamations as this, "Let his memory perish:" the very children joining in this outcry.

The book of Esther is read over twice at this festival: first in the evening of the 13th day of Adar, which with the Jews is reckoned the beginning of the 14th; and secondly, on the morning of the 14th. When the reading is ended, they praise God, who pleadeth the cause of His people; and afterward pronounce alternately with loud voices, Cursed be Haman, Blessed be Mordecai: Cursed be Zeresh, (the wife of Haman,) Blessed be Esther; Cursed be all the wicked, Blessed be all the Jews. They also read in the synagogue some passages of the Pentateuch relating to the perpetual enmity between Israel and Amalek. The synagogue is not open after the morning of the 14th, and the remainder of the festival is spent in rest and mirth.

Their feasting on this occasion has among degenerate and unbelieving Israelites been accompanied by intemperance and licentious diversions; their doctors, as blind and hypocritical guides, forging various excuses and pretences to justify the transgressions of the law which were at these times wantonly committed. Bp. Patrick, Dean Prideaux, Lewis.

At one time they used to erect a gibbet, and upon it to burn the effigy of Haman. In this however it was thought that they had an intention of insulting Christians, by turning into ridicule the death of Christ; and therefore the emperours forbad this part of their ceremonies, under the penalty of forfeiting all their privileges. Calmet.

Esther and Mordecai appear to have ordained only a feast on the 14th and 15th days of the month Adar: but the Jews observe, as they profess long to have done, a fast on the 13th day of Adar, the day destined by Haman for their extirpation. The month Adar corresponds with parts of our February and March. Dr. Gray.

29. — to confirm this second letter of Purim.] The Jews every where cheerfully agreed to the injunction of Mordecai: but, for fear of any neglect, and to give the greater authority to it, and prevent the memorial of so remarkable a blessing from decaying in after generations, a second injunction was sent by the queen to confirm it, and exhort all to the careful observance of it. Pyle.

31. To confirm these days of Purim &c.] The former Targum thus paraphrases this verse: "To confirm these days of Purim as Mordecai the Jew and Esther the queen appointed concerning them; and as the Jews ordained for themselves and for their posterity to keep in memory the matter of their fastings and their prayers." Bp. Patrick.

32. And the decree of Esther &c.] Thus the forementioned decree, which confirmed the days of Purim, was recorded and made a publick act. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. X. ver. 1. — the isles of the sea.] Perhaps the isles of the Egean sea, conquered by Darius Hystaspes. Abp. Usher.

3. — Mordecai — was next unto king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews, &c.] Such were the temporal rewards of Mordecai's exertions in behalf of his countrymen, and dutiful regard for the safety of his sovereign. This may afford us encouragement to be zealously affected in every good thing; to stand to our principles with cheerfulness and courage, to own the doctrines of our church, and to be true to our king, in the most perilous times. Wicked persons act but by a limited commission in this world; and in spite of all their rancour and malice, success will some time or other crown the righteous: and though the followers of Mordecai's virtues may not be made like him in his earthly advancement, yet they shall enjoy peace of conscience and the favour of God. Bp. Andrewes, Dr. Coney.

—— seeking the wealth of his people,] Under all revolutions, the Jews of the captivity had the comfort to see that some persons of their own body were surprisingly advanced into power and authority to patronise and defend their cause: which as it shewed the concern of the Almighty for the welfare of the Jews, must also have excited in their minds a regard for His honour and glory: and must have confirmed their dependence upon His great and precious promises. Dr. Owen.

After the events here related, no man dares frown upon a Jew. They are now become lords in the midst of their captivity: no marvel, if they ordain and celebrate their joyful Purim, for a perpetual memory to all posterities of their happy deliverance. It were pity that the church of God should not have seasons of sunshine, as well as of storm; and should not meet with interchanges of joy in their warfare, before they enter upon the unchangeable joy of their endless triumph. Bp. Hall.

The Jews from the time of the captivity are no more to be looked upon as that free, rich, and glorious people, which they had been either under their former theocracy, as Josephus rightly terms it, or under their opulent and warlike monarchs, and the direction of their Prophets. Their condition, government, manners, their very name, and every thing but their religion, are now entirely changed. And indeed it could hardly be expected otherwise, when we consider, that those that had been carried away into Babylon, were sold for slaves, and dispersed far and wide through that vast empire, according to the custom of those conquerors; and though some of them we find to have attained to very considerable posts, or grown exceeding rich in the land of their captivity, yet these are but few in comparison of those who groaned under the heavy hand of their oppressors; neither were they the former, but the latter, that is, the poorer sort, that came back into Judea; and even of these the whole number that came, either with Zerubbabel, Ezra, or Nehemiah, scarcely amounted to 70,000; among whom a multitude of strangers was likewise intermixed, either by marriages, or otherwise, most of them so indigent, that they were forced to be supported in their journey by the charitable contributions of those that stayed behind.

They were indeed to be governed by their own laws; but, as they still continued in subjection to other nations, to the Persians, Syrians, and Romans, that privilege, as well as the exercise of their religion, very much depended on the arbitrary will of their conquerors, and was often curtailed, and sometimes wholly taken away. Even whilst they were under the Persians, the lives and estates of the whole nation were on the brink of being sacrificed to the ambition of a favourite Haman, had not Esther's interest miraculously prevented the execution of that bloody edict; and so weak did they continue under them, that they were a long time exposed to the injuries of even the neighbouring Samaritans. They seem however to have recovered themselves by degrees, and to have lived in more peace and plenty during the two following centuries; and this is perhaps the reason of that vast chasm of near 250 years in their history, between the death of Nehemiah and the times of the Maccabees, when those illustrious heroes not only shook off the foreign yoke, but raised the glory of their nation by their victories and conquests, and by obliging other nations to embrace the Jewish religion.

But this epocha was but short-lived, and eighty years were hardly expired, before the ungovernable ambition of some of their unworthy successors introduced a general apostasy, and brought them under subjection to the Romans, which they could never more shake off. Herod indeed, whom the Romans raised to the royal dignity, greatly increased the glory and opulence of the Jewish nation; but as he was an Idumean who had gained the crown by the destruction of the Asmonean race, as he was a vassal to the Romans, and a tyrant of the Jews, they could not be said to be either free or happy during his hateful reign, much less under the reigns of his successors, when the government of Judea was split into so many toparchies: so that the nation went from thenceforward from bad to worse, till their total destruction. They were changed in their very name, the title of Israelites being quite lost, and the names of all the other tribes being absorbed in that of Judah; so that, from the period of their return, the whole people were chiefly known by the name of Jews, in opposition to the Samaritans, who were a mixture partly of the ten tribes, partly of revolted Jews, and of other nations. Religion was the thing that received the least change from their re-establishment; and, if we except some apostasies occasioned by persecutions, or the ambition of some of their high priests, we shall find them in the sequel more averse to idolatry, and to all heathenish superstitions, than ever their forefathers had been prone to them before the captivity; such strict observers of the sabbath, as to suffer themselves to be murdered by whole armies, rather than violate it by standing on their defence; in a word, so zealous for their religion, and such strict observers of their oaths, whether of allegiance or confederacy, as to suffer the most bloody persecutions, and horrid butcheries, with the utmost courage and constancy, rather than violate their fidelity to their laws. This was indeed a virtue, which, as Josephus rightly observes, was peculiar to the Jews, and to which no other nation or religion could ever lay any claim, till the sufferings, number, and constancy of the Christian martyrs, did in a great measure eclipse the glory of the Jewish ones. Universal History.

The Jews had many revolutions of peace and war, and some changes in the mode of their government, from the time of their return from the Babylonian captivity, to their complete subjection to the Romans; but their sacerdotal government, as it is sometimes called, continued with but little interruption through this whole space of about 600 years. Having returned into their own country under the sanction and authority of Cyrus, they acknowledged the sovereignty of the kings of Persia till that empire was overturned by Alexander the Great, (according to Dean Prideaux, B.C. 330:) they then became subject to his successors, first in Egypt, afterwards in Syria, till, having been deprived of their civil and religious liberties for three years and a half by Antiochus Epiphanes, (B. C. 168,) they were restored, both to the exercise of their religion, and to their ancient independence, by the piety and bravery of Mattathias and his descendants, (B. C. 165.) Under these Maccabean princes, they became an entirely free state, supported by good troops, strong garrisons, and alliances, not only with neighbouring powers, but with remote kingdoms, even Rome itself. This glory of the Jews was but of short duration: for, though the decline of the kingdoms of Egypt and Syria prevented their interference in the affairs of other states, yet the entire ruin of these two kingdoms, by the great accession of power which it brought to the Romans, paved the way for the destruction of the Jewish commonwealth. Pompey compelled the Jews to submit to the arms of Rome, (B. C. 63,) and from that time their country was tributary to the Romans, although it was still governed by Maccabean princes. The last of that family was conquered and deposed by Herod the Great, an Idumean by birth, but of the Jewish religion, (B. C. 37,) who had been appointed king of the Jews by the Romans, and enjoyed a long reign over the whole of Palestine, in the course of which he greatly diminished the civil power of the high priests. He was succeeded in the government of the greater part of Palestine by his son Archelaus, (B. C. 3,) whose misconduct caused Augustus to banish him, and to reduce his dominions into the form of a Roman province, (A. C. 8.) And thus it appears, that, with the exception of the short predicted period of Antiochus Epiphanes, the kingdom of Judah, for some time independent, but generally tributary, continued to enjoy its own religion, and the form of its civil government, till after the birth of the Messiah. Bp. Tomline.

In the periods which succeed, we find the Jews placed in a different situation from any preceding part of their history. While a sufficient portion of the nation had been restored to Judea, and there settled, to answer the primary purpose of forming a separate people, in order to preserve the Law and the Prophets, rebuild the temple, and prepare the scene where the Messiah was personally to appear, where He was to verify the prophecies, particularly with respect to His descent, the place of His birth, and the minutest circumstances of His personal character and sufferings; where He was to promulgate His religion, and lay down His life for man; another great body of the nation, as we are informed by Josephus, retired into Egypt, built a temple there, publickly exercised their religion, and flourished in such multitudes, under the protection of Alexander and his successors, that the Jews in Egypt nearly, if not entirely, equalled those of Judea in number, wealth, and influence; and at the same time adopted the Grecian language so universally, that it became necessary to translate the Scriptures into Greek for their use, and thus make them accessible to the learned and inquisitive in every country, whenever their attention should be excited to this study. It should be remarked too, that so necessary was such an adjustment of circumstances to produce this salutary effect, in opposition to the exclusive temper of the Jews settled in Judea, that this translation, which must have been received with such joy by the Jewish colonies, was regarded as the subject of national mourning by the Jews at Jerusalem.

The importance of this translation was extremely great. By it the grand truths of religion, the history of Divine providence, and the prophecies announcing the Messiah, became accessible to the learned and inquisitive in every part of the then civilized world. All possibility of either questioning the existence, or falsifying the contents of those prophecies was thus precluded, and the stability of this signal proof of revelation secured; though the rulers, doctors, and priests of that nation, with whom they had been originally deposited, rejected that Divine Personage whom these prophecies announced; and must therefore have wished, had it been in their power, to alter their contents in order to disprove their application.

About the time when this translation was completed, we see the Ptolemies collecting the celebrated library at Alexandria, which for such a length of time formed the greatest depository of learning in the world, and which was so much admired and imitated by other princes. And the circumstance of its being formed in the very same city with the most numerous colony of the Jews in Egypt, while it must have attracted thither all foreigners who were solicitous to acquire learning, must also have given them an opportunity of observing a form of religion so singular as that which the Jews maintained, and of enquiring into its principles and origin; an enquiry which the translation of the Scriptures into Greek rendered practicable: while the cessation of prophecy amongst the Jews, soon after their restoration from captivity, closed the canon of the Jewish Scriptures, and proved that the knowledge which that translation could supply was perfect and complete.

The same providential system of preparation for the introduction of a pure and universal religion was equally conspicuous in many other gradual movements in the world, all concurring to promote the same effect. The inquisitive and vainglorious turn of the Grecian character multiplied philosophick sects, which by their perpetual disputations directed the attention of mankind to religious and moral speculations; gradually undermined the influence, by exposing the absurdity, of Pagan superstition and idolatry; and, though they did not substitute in their room any perfect system of natural religion, yet many of its great truths were occasionally debated upon with spirit and subtlety; and, though they were not clearly proved or practically inculcated, they yet became the objects of general interest and curiosity: so that the want of further information, and, above all, of Divine instruction, which might remove men's doubts and errours on these most awful subjects, was felt and acknowledged by the most sagacious and reflecting minds; and therefore such instruction would be more attentively listened to, and more thankfully and joyfully received.

Connected with the same system, and tending to promote the same effect, was the great and permanent extension of the Roman empire, which broke down all the barriers of separation between the eastern and western worlds, united the Euphrates and the Thames under the same masters, and blended all the civilized states of Greece and Asia, of Africa and Europe, in one great community: in every part of which the Grecian language, now the language of the sacred records, became as it were the common tongue of the learned and polite; while a perpetual intercourse between the various parts of this mighty empire, the establishment of a firm and regular police through its whole extent, and, above all, that universal peace, which its undisputed ascendency secured through the entire civilized world, when the Gospel of peace was first promulgated; all these circumstances secured to the teachers of that Gospel ready access to all the nations of the world capable of profiting by the sacred truths they taught, and gave men leisure to consider their unspeakable importance, and examine the evidence to which they appealed. Dr. Graves.

THE BOOK OF JOB.

INTRODUCTION.

THE celebrated Patriarch, whose history is recorded in the following book, has been represented by some sacred criticks as imaginary, and his book as a fictitious dramatic composition. But he was evidently considered as real by the Prophet Ezekiel, who ranks Noah, Daniel, and Job together, as powerful intercessors with God; the first for his family, the second for the wise men of Babylon, and the third for his friends, Ezek. xiv. 14. And the Apostle James celebrates the exemplary "patience of Job," James v. 11. And the book itself, the early admission of which into the Sacred Canon is strongly in favour of its veracity, describes the residence of Job and his friends with all the geographical precision of true history. Dr. Hales.

The Book of Job was certainly written as a literal relation of actual events; for this is evident from the style of the author, from his mode of introducing the subject, and also from the circumstantial detail of habitation, kindred, and condition, as well as from the names of the persons therein mentioned, which correspond with other accounts of the age and country, in which Job is generally supposed to have existed.

It must be observed, that the veracity of the book is not invalidated by the allegorical manner in which some things are related. Human events are literally described; but the proceedings of Providence, of which we are unable to form any apprehension, unless from figurative illustration, are perhaps here, as in other parts of Scripture, parabolically represented under familiar allusions. Dr. Gray.

When Job lived, seems deducible from his being contemporary with Eliphaz the Temanite; thus:

		Abraham
1.		Isaac		1.
2.	Esau	Jacob		2.
3.	Eliphaz	Levi		3.
4.	Teman	Kohath		4.
5.	Eliphaz, Temanite	Amram	Job	5.

Dr. Kennicott.

It appears probable that Job himself was the writer of his own story: of whose inspiration we seem to have very clear evidence in this book: namely, from those remarkable words of his to God, chap. xlii. 5, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth Thee."

It is plain, that here is some privilege intended which he never had enjoyed before, and which he calls the sight of God. He had "heard of Him by the hearing of the ear," or the tradition delivered down from his forefathers: but he had now a clear and sensible perception of His being and Divine perfections: some light thrown in upon his mind, which carried its own evidence, and of which perhaps we can form no notion, because we never felt it; but which to him had all the certainty and clearness even of sight itself; in short, some manifestations of the Deity made to him, in vision, such as the Prophets had, and from whence they derived their very name of Seers.

If we allow Job himself to have been the writer of the book, there will be evidently two advantages hereby gained to it: as first, that all objections to the historical truth of it will vanish at once.

None could tell us his own story so well as Job; nor have we any reason to question his veracity. The dialogue too will then appear to have been the substance of a real conversation, as no dialogue was ever more natural. If the story be told us in verse, or in the prophetick style and language; as the first of these was a practice of the highest antiquity, the other adds the most sacred and unquestionable authority to it: so that neither truth nor ornament is here wanting, any more than the dignity of the subject, to render this a book of inestimable value.

The other advantage is this: that if Job himself were the writer of the book, then every point of history, and every doctrine of religion here treated of, which coincide with those delivered in the books of Moses, are an additional proof and confirmation of these latter: as being evidently derived from some other source, not borrowed from the Pentateuch. Peters.

But whether we suppose Job the author of the book or not, its great antiquity, and even its priority to the age of Moses, seems to stand on strong grounds. And, upon the whole, perhaps we may not unreasonably conjecture the history of the book to be this.—The poem being originally written either by Job, or some contemporary of his, and existing in the time of Moses, might fall into his hands, whilst residing in the land of Midian, or afterwards when in the neighbourhood of Idumea; and might naturally be made use of by him, to represent to the Hebrews, either whilst repining under their Egyptian bondage, or murmuring at their long wanderings in the wilderness, the great duty of submission to the will of God. The encouragement which the book holds out, that every good man, suffering patiently, will finally be rewarded, rendered it a work peculiarly calculated to minister mingled comfort and rebuke to the distressed and discontented Israelites, and which might therefore well have been employed by Moses for this purpose. We may also suppose that Moses, in transcribing, might have made some small and unimportant alterations, which will sufficiently account for occasional and partial resemblances of expression between it and the Pentateuch, if any such there be.

This hypothesis both furnishes a reasonable compromise between the opinions of the great criticks, who are divided upon the point of Moses being the author; and supplies an answer to a question of no small difficulty, which hangs upon almost every other solution; namely, when, and wherefore, a book, treating manifestly of the concerns of a stranger, and in no way connected with their affairs, was received by the Jews into their sacred canon? For Moses having thus applied the book to their use, and sanctioned it by his authority, it would naturally have been enrolled among their sacred writings: and, from the antiquity of that enrolment, no record would consequently appear of its introduction. Dr. Magee.

External happiness and misery are not always in this life the consequences of virtue and vice; this world is not the theatre of Divine retribution; but there is a life beyond the grave, where the good will receive their reward, and the wicked be punished: this is the moral of the book of Job. Michaelis.

The general conduct of this book, as a poem, is of the most interesting kind. It opens with a preface, which describes the person, and advantageous situation of a most worthy and excellent man, called by some a king: see note at chap. i. 3. Then it relates by what means he was deprived of these blessings, and reduced to distresses proportionate to his former prosperity: it describes certain of his former friends as visiting him, and endeavouring to excite his repentance for some secret sins, as they suppose, committed by him; while he protests his innocence of any such guilt. After many charges and vindications between the elder and perhaps more dignified friends of Job, and the Patriarch himself, a person, younger than those friends who had already spoken, then assumes the discourse, and gradually prepares the way for an appearance of the Deity Himself, who reasons on the various works of His creating hand, and the various course of His Providence in respect to them, all of which exceed the ability, conception, or direction, of the human mind: leaving the inference, that He, who thus wisely, though diversely, directs the course of nature, does equally wisely, though equally diversely, direct the ways of good men, who trust in Him. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

The poem consists of five parts: the first part, containing the first dialogue, or debate between Job and his three friends, occupies chap. iii—xiv; the second, chap. xv—xxi; the third, chap. xxii—xxxi; the fourth part contains the speech of Elihu, chap. xxxii—xxxvii; and the fifth, the answer of God, and Job's submission, chap. xxxviii—xlii. Dr. Hales.

The whole Book of Job, with regard both to sublimity of thought and morality, exceeds beyond all comparison the most noble parts of Homer. Pope.

The style of the book, and the customs incidentally described in it, bear the marks of Patriarchal antiquity. The books contains most sublime descriptions of the power and other attributes of God; and is expressly cited by St. Paul as sacred Scripture, 1 Cor. iii. 19. Gisborne.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 1520.

1 The holiness, riches, and religious care of Job for his children. 6 Satan, appearing before God, by calumniation obtaineth leave to tempt Job. 13 Understanding of the loss of his goods and children, in his mourning he blesseth God.

THERE was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man [a] was [a] perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

[a] Chap. 2. 3.

2 And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters.

3 His ‖ substance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she asses, and a very great ‖ houshold; so that this man was the greatest of all the † men of the east.

Before CHRIST about 1520.

‖ Or, cattle.

4 And his sons went and feasted in their houses, every one his day; and sent and called for their three sisters to eat and to drink with them.

Chap. I. ver. 1. — in the land of Uz,] Concerning the situation of this country of Job, different opinions are entertained. It was most probably on the confines of Idumea, if not a part of it. The daughter of Edom is said to dwell in the land of Uz, Lam. iv. 21. Uz was the son of Nahor, Abraham's brother, Gen. xxii. 21. Dr. Blayney. See its supposed situation in the Map of the World, east of the Dead sea.

3. His substance also was seven thousand sheep, &c.] The principal riches of the Bedoween Arabs, no less than of the princes and patriarchs of old, continue to be estimated from the number and quality of their cattle.—Several Arabian tribes can bring into the field only three or four hundred horses, at the same time that they are possessed of more than so many thousand camels, and triple again that number of sheep and black cattle. They rarely kill any of their flocks, living chiefly upon their milk or butter, or else upon what they get in exchange for their wool. Dr. Shaw.

—— so that this man was the greatest of all the men of the east.] That Job was certainly a magistrate, a judge at the least, is evident from chap. xxii. 7; and not improbably he was a king; not such as the kings of the earth now are, whose dominions are wider, and power more absolute, yet possibly such as were called kings in those ancient times, and in those eastern parts of the world: that is, a kind of petty monarch and supreme governour within his own territories, though perhaps but of one single city with the suburbs, and some few neighbouring villages. It is here said, that he was "the greatest of all the men of the East;" and in the twenty-ninth chapter he saith of himself, that when he came in presence "the princes and the nobles held their peace," and that he "sat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army." Bp. Sanderson. Perhaps we may be not far from right in contemplating the modern sheiks in Arabia, as bearing considerable resemblance to this holy personage. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

4. — every one his day;] His birthday, as was the custom among those nations. See Gen. xl. 20. Grotius.

Before CHRIST about 1520.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and [b] cursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job † continually.

6 ¶ Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and † Satan came also †among them.

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From [c] going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, † Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

9 Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought?

[b] 1 Kings 21. 10, 13.
[c] 1 Pet. 5. 8.
† Heb. hast thou set thy heart on.

To celebrate a birthday with great tokens of rejoicing and triumph, was the custom of former ages. Herodotus says, "of all days the Persians shew the highest regard to their birthday:" and he gives us an account of the particular ceremonies which were appropriated to that festival. Chappelow.

5.—sanctified them,] Required them, by messengers, to prepare themselves by washing, and such rites as were then in use; as also by prayer, repentance, &c. to join with him in offering sacrifices for them. Clark.

——It may be that my sons have sinned,] This was a suspicion in Job concerning his children. Hence we may observe, that it is no breach of charity to suspect ill of others, while we intend their good. Indeed, upon a surmise to accuse and charge another, is very uncharitable; but upon a surmise that such an one, my child, or my friend, or my brother, hath sinned, to be induced to pray for him—this is very charitable. A good heart turns its suspicions of others' sinnings and failings into prayers and intercessions, that they may be pardoned; not into accusations and slanders, that they may be defamed. The use which Job made here of his suspicion of his sons' sinning, was to turn it into prayer and supplication for the pardon of their sin. Caryl.

Unfavourable suspicions are not unlawful, if they proceed, not from any corrupt affections, but only from a charitable jealousy of those, over whom we have special interest, so that it may engage us to admonish, reprove, or correct them, when they do amiss: so was Job suspicious of his sons, for sinning and cursing God in their hearts. Bp. Sanderson.

——cursed God in their hearts.] Some way dishonoured God by neglecting to give Him the praise and glory of His mercies. Clark.

Let slip some irreverent words of God. Bp. Wilson.

It is hardly to be imagined, that they, whose lives had been formed by the example of so good and religious a father, could ever be guilty of so aggravating a crime, as, strictly speaking, to curse God. We may suppose, that their elegant and sumptuous entertainments might raise such an excess of mirth, as to occasion an absence of mind, and make them think of God less reverently than they ought. Chappelow.

Job was only apprehensive, lest, in the gaiety of a festival, his children had let loose their minds from the restraints of religion. Scott.

6.—the sons of God] The good angels, chap. xxxviii. 7; Dan. iii. 25, 28. Clark.

——came to present themselves before the Lord,] Appeared before God in a special manner, for some special end. A parabolical representation of God's providence in the government of the world. Clark.

The decrees of God, the ministry of good, and the machinations of evil angels, are usually expressed in the form of the judgments or counsels of a king; 1 Kings xxii. 19; Zechar. iii. 1. Grotius.

——Satan] Foe to God and man, and the accuser of the brethren. The Greek version in this passage of Job, and in Zechar. iii. 1, renders "Satan" by a word signifying the accuser. Parkhurst.

The grand spiritual "adversary" of mankind is here first introduced in Scripture, under his proper name "Satan," and under the character assigned to him from hence in the New Testament, of "walking about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour," 1 Pet. v. 8, with allusion to Job i. 7, and ii. 3; and as "the accuser of the brethren, who accused them before God night and day," Rev. xii. 10. Dr. Hales.

The name "Satan," as denoting an enemy, frequently occurs in the Old Testament: see 2 Sam. xix. 22; 1 Kings v. 4; where the word for "adversary" is in the original "Satan." It is extremely probable to me, that the root Satan was introduced into the Hebrew and other Eastern languages, to denote an adversary, from its having been the proper name of the great enemy of mankind. Bp. Watson. See the note on chap. ii. 10.

——and Satan came also among them.] It is not said, that the sons of God and Satan came and presented themselves before the Lord: Satan did not join himself in with them; Satan did not offer himself for any good service; but thither he came, being so ordered by the overruling power of God. Caryl.

7. And the Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou?] The Lord, to make him sensible that he was not an absolute prince, but His subject, called to him and demanded an account of him, where he had been, and from whence he came. To which he gave an answer, which expressed, as the restlessness of his mind, and his unwearied diligence, so the limitation of his power, which extends only to this lower world; for he told Him, that he came "from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it." Bp. Patrick.

God employs Satan as His instrument, either to inflict punishment, or to bring evils on man, for whatever cause may seem good to the Divine will. But Satan, though hostile to man, and desirous of doing him injury, is bound as it were with a chain, and can never even touch the righteous unless when let loose by God. While "going to and fro, and walking up and down in the earth," Satan might watch Job, but he could not hurt him without permission from God. Rosenmüller.

God decreed to give power to Satan, for the proof of Job's fidelity and patience; and permitted the several calamities which were brought upon Job to make trial of him. Bp. Hall.

——From going to and fro in the earth,] To find advantage to tempt men, 1 Pet. v. 8. Clark.

The most important truths, as we are framed at present, can make but a slight impression on the mind, unless they enter first, like a picture, into the imagination, and from thence are stamped upon the memory.

The Scripture speaks of God after the manner of men; for there is a necessity of condescending to our capacities, and of suiting the revelation to our apprehensions, and to the ideas we are furnished with. As kings therefore transact their most important affairs in a solemn council or assembly, so God is pleased to represent Himself as having His council likewise, and as passing the decrees of His providence, in an assembly of His holy angels. Peters.

9.—Doth Job fear God for nought?] It is an argument of a most malignant spirit, when a man's actions are fair, then to accuse his intentions. The devil had nothing to say against the actions of Job, but goes down into his heart, and accuses his intentions. Malice misinterprets the fairest actions, but love puts the fairest interpretation it can upon foul actions. Caryl.

10. Hast not thou made an hedge about him, &c.] A figurative expression, signifying, Hast not Thou secured him from injury? See the notes on Hos. ii. 6; Mic. vii. 4.

11. — he will curse thee to thy face.] The phrase is stronger than that used at ver. 5. It imports here an utter and publick renunciation of religion as a vain thing. Scott.

12. — all that he hath is in thy power;] It is here observable, that the devil could have no power over Job, (nor consequently can have over any other of God's servants,) without having first obtained it from God. Collyer.

—— only upon himself put not forth thine hand.] Hence we may remark, that God Himself sets bounds to the afflictions of His people. He limits how far every affliction shall go, and how far every instrument shall prevail. Caryl.

15. And the Sabeans fell upon them,] The Sabeans were a people (as is concluded by most interpreters) inhabiting Arabia Felix, near the country where Job dwelt: they were famous only for robberies, and lived by pillage and plundering their neighbours. Caryl.

17. — The Chaldeans] Chaldea, a country lying between Mesopotamia to the north, Susiana to the east, the Persian bay to the south, and Arabia Deserta to the west. Dr. Wells.

Chaldea was at a vast distance from the land of Edom. But these were a set of profligates, who followed the pilfering life of the wild Arabs; and, like them, it is probable they made excursions through the Arabian deserts, to any distance where there was any hope of plunder. The Arabs deemed it heroism to make long journeys over pathless solitudes in quest of daring adventures. Scott.

19. — a great wind] A whirlwind. Clark.

—— from the wilderness,] It is conceived, that this was either the wilderness of Edom, spoken of 2 Kings iii. 8; or else it was Arabia the Desert, which is by way of eminency called the Wilderness. Caryl.

—— smote the four corners of the house, and it fell] The following account of a whirlwind is given by Mr. Bruce: "we had scarcely advanced two miles into the plain, when we were inclosed by a violent whirlwind, or what is called at sea the waterspout.—The unfortunate camel, that had been taken by the Cohala, seemed to be nearly in the centre of its vortex. It was lifted, and thrown down at a considerable distance, and several of its ribs broken. Although, as far as I could guess, I was not near its centre, it whirled me off my feet, and threw me down on my face, so as to make my nose gush out with blood. Two of the servants likewise had the same fate.—It demolished one half of a small hut, as if it had been cut through with a knife, and dispersed the materials all over the plain, leaving the other half standing." Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

20. Then Job arose, &c.] Job, who had heard all the rest without disturbance, was overcome with grief at this last word. Bp. Patrick.

—— and shaved his head,] Michaelis remarks, that this was done in token of great grief; and cites Curtius in proof, that the Persians did the same on the death of Alexander the Great, according to their custom in mourning; and refers to Lucian, that thus likewise the Egyptians lamented the funeral of their Apis, and the Syrians the death of Adonis. Parkhurst.

Herodotus speaks of it as a general practice among all people, except the Egyptians, to cut off their hair as a token of mourning. At the Friendly Isles in the South Sea, "cutting off the hair is one of their mourning ceremonies;" Cook's and Clarke's Voyage: and at Otaheite, Forster says, "the hair was cut off and thrown upon the bier." Dr. Hales.

—— fell down upon the ground, and worshipped,] Whence we may observe, that it becometh us to worship God in a humble manner: and farther, that afflictions send the people of God home to God: afflictions draw a godly man nearer unto God. Caryl. This behaviour was truly sublime: the noblest homage that could be paid by a reasonable being to his great Creator. Scott.

21. — naked shall I return thither:] Into the earth, the common womb or receptacle and repository for all the dead. Clark.

—— the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; &c.] Job overlooks all secondary causes, and owns God in all; acknowledging Him to be both just and good in all His ways, and blessing Him for all, whether giving or taking away. Clark.

7 ¶ So went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

8 And he took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal; and he sat down among the ashes.

9 ¶ Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? curse God, and die.

10 But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand

God lent us the use of them, He did not mean to forego the property too: and therefore they are His goods still, and He may require them at our hands, or take them from us when He will, and dispose of them when He pleases: see Hos. ii. 9. What we have, we hold of Him as our creditor: whensoever therefore He shall think good to call in His debts, it is our parts to return them, not with patience only, but with thankfulness, that He hath suffered us to enjoy them so long; and certainly without the least grudging or repining (as too often we do) that we may not hold them any longer. Thus did Job: when all was taken from him, he still "blessed the name of the Lord." Bp. Sanderson.

Chap. II. ver. 3. — without cause.] Without his desert, according to the usual way of speaking, or without any signal guilt to draw upon him so signal a calamity: not but that there might be other very weighty causes or reasons for it; for the Divine wisdom neither does nor suffers any thing "without cause," that is, without a sufficient reason. Peters.

4. — Skin for skin, &c.] The meaning is, "Who is there that will not give another skin to save his own; nay part with his children, as well as his goods, to save his life?" Bp. Patrick.

Rather, "skin after skin." The expression alludes to the well-known fact of the renovation of the skin on any part of the body that has been excoriated, and is plainly proverbial, importing that a man may bear to part with all that he has, and even to have his skin, as it were, stripped off, again and again, provided only that his life be safe. All other losses and calamities may be well borne, as external and superficial, and not coming home to the man's self. Parkhurst.

7. — smote Job with sore boils &c.] Or with a loathsome and universal leprosy; a scrophulous disease common in the East and in hot countries. It is of two kinds, the white and the black. This latter is commonly called elephantiasis, because it renders the skin, like that of the elephant, uneven and wrinkled, with many furrows. Dr. Hales.

The Hebrew words describe Job's disease as a grievous inflammatory ulcer: how long it might last, is unknown; some have conjectured many months; others some years. The name, used in the text for the disease, is rendered in Deut. xxviii. 27, "the botch," or ulcer, "of Egypt:" whence we conclude, that it was no new disease. It has usually been thought to be the elephantiasis. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

Job is struck with the elephantiasis, a disorder, which, when it attains a certain height, (as it appears to have done in this instance,) is incurable, and therefore affords the patient no prospect but that of long continued misery. The reader, who is thus apprised of the Divine motives for allowing this model of human excellence to undergo so hard a trial, anticipates the result; but Job and his friends, we must remember, were ignorant of them, and therefore had no reason to look for the Divine interference. Michaelis.

8. And he took him a potsherd &c.] At the beginning of this disorder (the elephantiasis) an intolerable itching is felt. Hence Job is said to have taken "a potsherd" (or earthen vessel) "to scrape himself withal." Rosenmüller.

—— and he sat down among the ashes.] Sprinkling or covering themselves with, rolling or sitting in ashes, &c. were emblematical acknowledgments, as of being obnoxious to the wrath of God, so of grief and contrition: see 2 Sam. xiii. 19; Esth. iv. 1; Jer. vi. 26. We find the Greeks likewise, in violent grief, sprinkling ashes on their head, and lying in ashes. Parkhurst.

9. — Dost thou still retain &c.] Dost thou still retain thy integrity towards God, though thou reapest no advantage from it? It were better to be at once freed from thy misery. Curse God; and He will, by His judgment, make a speedy way for thee out of this torment. Bp. Hall.

—— curse God, and die.] Cast off thy reverence of the Divine Majesty, and spare not to reproach that God who has dealt so hardly with thee, though thou die for it. Clark.

10. — the foolish women] So the Hebrews styled idolaters, Psal. lxxiv. 18. The heathens, when any misfortune befell them, were wont to revile their gods. Scott.

—— shall we receive good &c.] This return Job made, when tempted to "curse God, and die." He remembered the several prosperous years which had passed over his head, and he knew by whose providence they had been prosperous. Surely there was a debt of gratitude owing on this account, which it became him, as far as possible, to answer. This he considered thoroughly; and therefore, instead of any impatient murmuring at his present sufferings, he resigned himself up entirely to God, and blessed the very hand under which he suffered. If the example of this great man, who is so highly celebrated in holy writ, be of any moment, we may apply it in some measure to every other person who labours under affliction. For though it may not be frequent to be so highly favoured by Providence, as this great man had been in his more early years; yet, who is there that of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips.

11 ¶ Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place; Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment together to come to mourn with him and to comfort him.

12 And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, and knew him not, they lifted up their voice, and wept; and they rent every one his mantle, and sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.

13 So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great.

hath enjoyed nothing, and received no advantage from the influence of Heaven? Bp. Conybeare.

—— and shall we not receive evil?] As all sin is supposed in Scripture to be from the devil, so whenever any number of natural causes conspire to produce any very remarkable ill effect upon men, especially upon good and virtuous persons, this is generally ascribed to the devil. But as God Himself is the supreme Governour of the world, nothing can be done but by His permission and consent. Satan is only a mere instrument, and can go no farther than he is allowed; and so we find represented in this book. Dr. John Clarke. The patience of Job is much talked of, and we seldom look farther for any use of this book. But probably it was written in opposition also to the very ancient opinion, which introduced two independent principles; one, good, the other, evil: for this reason, Satan, the author of Job's misfortunes, appears to be brought in with permission from God to afflict Job; and one moral of the history is in Job's reflection, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away;" and again, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? Bp. Sherlock.

—— In all this did not Job sin with his lips.] We should here notice, on the one hand, the behaviour of Job's wife, who, instead of encouraging and comforting him, tempted him to murmur against God, and curse Him: and on the other, the wonderful constancy of Job, who always preserved his integrity, and said to his wife, "What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Persons, united by marriage or otherwise, are guilty of a great sin when they do not endeavour to comfort one another, and mutually exhort each other to holiness. Hence also we may learn, that when it pleases God to afflict us, it behoves us humbly to submit to His will, and acquiesce in all His dispensations; knowing that evil, as well as good, proceeds from Him, and that afflictions are not less useful to us, than prosperity and success. Ostervald.

11. — Eliphaz &c.] Teman was a city of Edom, Jer. xlix. 7, 20; Ezek. xxv. 12, 13; Amos i. 11, 12. Shuah was a district in the "east country" of Arabia Petrea, where Abraham's sons by Keturah were settled, Gen. xxv. 2, 6. Naamah was a city of Edom, Josh. xv. 21, 41. Dr. Hales.

12. — and sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.] This place would be more intelligible were it rendered, And threw dust through the air upon their heads; see Acts xxii. 23, where this custom is alluded to. Dr. Durell.

13. So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days &c.] "Sitting on the ground" is an Oriental phrase, to express their passing the time in the deepest mourning: this, according to the Eastern manner, was for seven days; see Gen. l. 10. Heath.

Chap. III. The two first chapters of this book are written in prose. In the third chapter the poem opens with that kind of tragical distress, which is lofty in its conceptions, and highly figurative in its language; which labours for the strongest images, and most energetick words, to express its feelings, and to spread over all objects around it its own gloominess and horrour. A paroxysm of such violent grief vents itself in the following imprecations. The passion however subsides a little in the latter part of the speech, and flows in the soft complaining strain of elegy. This impotence of mind in Job, so inconsistent with his former firmness, may probably be accounted for in part from the influence of his disease: to which must be added, his not having obtained any abatement of his affliction, notwithstanding his submission; and his suspicion, from the silence of his friends, that he was to expect no consolation from them. Scott.

Those, who have been affected with Job's disorder, are said to have been weary of life, and to have wished for nothing so much as death: it made them impatient, passionate, discontented with every thing, wild, and desperate. Michaelis.

Ver. 1. — cursed his day.] Job wishes he had never been born, or, at least, that he had died immediately after his birth; and describes the happiness of the dead. He then ventures to ask, why God has given existence to the miserable, and why He does not rather put an end to their unhappiness by death, which they long for. Michaelis.

Job is neither rigidly to be taxed with blasphemy or profaneness, nor totally to be excused, especially not flatteringly commended, for this high complaint. It must, as it appears, be granted, that Job discovered much frailty and infirmity, some passion and distemper, in this complaint and curse: yet notwithstanding we must assert him to be a patient man, yea, a mirror of patience; for consider the greatness of his suffering, the multiplicity of his troubles; that his complainings and acts of impatience were but few, but his submissions and acts of meekness under the hand of God were very many: take also into consideration, that, though he did complain, and complain bitterly, yet he recovered out of these complainings; he recalls what he had spoken, and repents of what he had done. Caryl.

These are infirmities proceeding from excessive grief, and are not to be brought forward to excuse our repining against God's providence. All that follows the second verse is expressed in the style of poetry. Bp. Wilson. See the note on Jer. xx. 14.

3. Let the day perish] "The day," namely, his birthday. "Let the day perish," by being deprived of the light of the sun; "the night," by losing the light of the moon and stars: to which he adds other circumstances, to aggravate the horrour. Scott.

—— There is a man child conceived.] The bearing of a son was a matter of great consequence among the Arabians: the form of their appreciation of happiness to a new married woman being, "May you live happily, and bring forth male children." Schultens, Heath.

4. — let not God regard it from above,] In Deut. xi. 12, the word, here rendered "regard," is translated "care for." God is here represented, sitting on His throne in heaven, and surveying the universe, to see that all its movements be carried on according to the laws which He has established. Job wishes that the day of his nativity may be rejected from the care of that Providence, by which the constant vicissitudes of day and night are preserved. Scott.

5. — shadow of death] Such a dismal darkness as is in the place of the dead. Clark.

—— let the blackness of the day terrify it.] Let a continued darkness make it terrible to all beholders. Bp. Hall.

Whatever can be imagined most dismal to make a day terrible and abhorred, such as destructive storms, lightnings, thunderings, portents, and the like, I conceive to be comprehended in this phrase. Scott.

7. Lo, let that night be solitary,] In that night let none assemble to converse, or to rejoice. The Arabs had their meetings for conversation in the night; and among the Eastern nations in general, the night was devoted to festivity, Matt. xxv. 1, &c. It is so still among the Moors in Barbary, as Dr. Shaw says. Scott.

8. Let them curse it that curse the day, &c.] Let those men be hired, whose business and employment it is to "curse the days" that are esteemed ominous and inauspicious: let them apply all their skill in "raising" their mournful voices to the highest pitch. Chappelow.

According to the marginal reading, the verse may be thus translated; "Let them execrate it, who curse the (natal) day (compare ver. 1.) of those who are about to, or who shall, rouse the "Leviathan;" which was almost sure to be attended with immediate and horrid destruction. See chap. xli. 8—10. "The crocodile," says Hasselquist, "does inexpressible mischief to the people of upper Egypt, often killing and devouring women, who come to the river to fetch water, and children playing on the shore, or swimming in the river." Parkhurst.

It was natural to mention such a terrible casualty in the strongest terms of abhorrence; and to lament those, who so miserably perished, with most bitter imprecations on the disastrous day. Job here calls for the assistance of such language, to execrate the fatal night of his nativity. Scott.

11. Why died I not from the womb?] As soon as I had life in the womb. Clark.

12. Why did the knees prevent me?] Why did the knees of the midwife assist at my birth in preserving my life? Dr. Durell.

14. With kings and counsellers of the earth,] This beautiful description of the grave contains a fine oblique satire on ambition and avarice. Scott.

—— which built desolate places for themselves;] By "desolate places," we may understand tombs and sepulchres, which kings and counsellers build for themselves: and the word, which we have here for "desolate places," is in Scripture clearly applied to the grave, or place of burial. We have it in Ezek. xxvi. 20. Caryl.

"Desolate places," those dreary sepulchral mansions, where the body is wasted or consumed. Such for instance as the pyramids of Egypt, some of which were probably older than the times of Job. Parkhurst.

18. — they hear not the voice of the oppressor.] Of the taskmaster, or driver, chap. xxxix. 7. The account given us of the treatment of the Christian slaves in Mequinez, is a lively comment on this passage: "Their respective guardians, or taskmasters, deliver them over at night, as so many sheep, to another, who is appointed to take charge of all; who secures them in one house till next morning, and then they hear the doleful echo of Come out to work." Scott.

19. The small and great are there;] Rather, "there the small and the great are the same;" for that seems to be the precise meaning of the passage. Dr. Durell.

21. — dig for it more than for hid treasures;] Compare Prov. ii. 4; Is. xlv. 3, &c. These expressions of Scripture, which refer to hidden treasures, will perhaps derive a spirit from knowing, that a custom prevails among the Eastern people of burying their riches, by which means vast sums have been lost; that the great as well as the small are persuaded of all the ancient monuments containing some hidden treasures; and that in fact a number of men make a kind of business of going about pretending to discover such treasures. Fragments to Calmet.

23. — to a man whose way is hid, &c.] Why is light cast upon a man whom God hath made so miserable, that there is no way to be hoped of his deliverance from this calamity; whom God hath shut up in this distress, without the possibility of escape? Bp. Hall.

"Whose way is hid," so that he cannot see how to get out of his miseries. Bp. Wilson.

24. —my sighing cometh before I eat,] So that I eat only to prolong my misery. All these are no more than the natural ways of expressing great affliction in the Eastern countries, and would at this very day be so understood. Bp. Wilson.

It is in the Hebrew, as the margin notices, "before," that is, in the presence of, "my meat." The sight of his food renewed his distress, because it was the means of prolonging a miserable life; or because, as Peters ingeniously conjectures, it brought to his remembrance those happy hours, when "his children were about him," chap. xxix. 5. Scott.

25. For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me,] The thing which Job meant here as the greatest of his fears, and which was now come upon him, was probably the loss of his children; for whom an over-tender parent is in continual solicitude. And that Job was such, appears plain from that remarkable circumstance in his story, his constant sacrificing upon occasion of his children's feasting, lest any impiety might have been committed by them in those unguarded hours, that might provoke the Deity to punish them, chap. i. 5. Peters.

26. I was not in safety, &c.] I did not lull myself into security, (chap. i. 5,) and yet that did not prevent me from being miserable. Bp. Patrick.

I never confided in my power, or wisdom, or holiness. The thought of his innocence was the only comfort which Job had: the devil had deprived him of all else, and his friends strive to deprive him of this. Bp. Wilson.

Chap. IV, V. Eliphaz, the first of Job's friends, reproves him for grieving so excessively himself, who had formerly preached patience to others in affliction. He represents God as afflicting the wicked, but not good men. He relates a vision which he had seen, wherein God had convinced him of His justice, and of the meanness and corruption of human nature. He enlarges upon God's judgments on the wicked and their posterity. And he speaks of the usefulness of God's corrections; exhorts Job to improve by those, with which he was visited, and to acknowledge his sins: giving him hopes that he would then be delivered from his misfortunes, and restored to his former condition. Ostervald.

This address of Eliphaz has the appearance of friendship. But several strokes, and the tenour of the whole, too plainly shew, that he supposed the afflictions of his friend to be the punishment of preceding guilt. Scott.

Chap. IV. ver. 5. But now it is come upon thee, &c.] But now thou canst not learn the same lesson thou didst teach others; for now that affliction is come, thou canst not bear it patiently. Clark.

6. Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, &c.] That is, thy fear of God should be thy confidence: and thy hope and thy integrity should go together. Peters.

The original is a period, divided into two members, and may be translated thus: "Should not thy piety be thy confidence? and the uprightness of thy ways, thy hope?" The words may be construed as a friendly admonition to recollect his religious principles, and to support himself by the clearness of his conscience. On the other hand they may import, that no good man would fall into despair under affliction, as he had done. Scott.

—— thy fear,] Michaelis remarks, that the word "fear," reverence, is used for piety, or the fear of God, though the name of God is omitted. See also chap. xv. 4. Parkhurst.

7, 8. —who ever perished, being innocent? &c.] The strong terms which Eliphaz here uses, "who ever perished, being innocent?" and his adding what he had observed himself of the punishment that sometimes remarkably befalls wicked men, contain a shrewd insinuation that he believed Job to have been guilty of some secret sins, for which the hand of God was thus heavy upon him. What follows (ver. 16—19.) more and more confirms this notion; for, by the recital of a vision which he had, he intimates to him what a folly it would be to presume to justify himself before God, in whose sight the angels themselves were not pure or perfect. Peters.

Although it be true in general that the innocent never perish, and that God afflicts men for their sins, yet Eliphaz was to blame for concluding from thence, that Job's virtue had not been sincere; since God does also send misfortunes upon the virtuous. It would be a rash and hasty judgment, to believe that men are wicked, or hypocrites, only because they are afflicted; on the contrary, justice and piety require us to judge charitably of them, especially when their lives have been innocent, as Job's had been. Ostervald.

10. The roaring of the lion, &c.] And not only such wicked men as are weak, but the strongest, stoutest, and fiercest, with all their dependents, are destroyed by God. Clark.

By the lions are meant the wicked: they roar over their prey; their roaring being silenced is equivalent to the failure of their schemes. Michaelis.

11. The old lion — the stout lion's whelps] Tyrants and their children soon perish. Bp. Wilson. We have here in the original no less than five different words to express a lion. This animal was esteemed by the Eastern people a creature of so much strength and courage, so far superiour to other beasts, that the Arabians put their invention to the utmost stretch to find out names suitable to his qualities. There are, it is said, more than five hundred appropriated to him. Chappelow.

12. Now a thing was secretly brought to me,] If these observations be not sufficient to convince thee, hear what God Himself secretly whispered to me. Bp. Patrick.

There are different opinions concerning this "thing," word, or oracle, as it may be interpreted; and whether it was real or imaginary only. The circumstances attending it, though it was misapplied by Eliphaz, would incline one to think it was more than a speculative imagination. Revelation by dreams was, we are assured, one of the means that God vouchsafed to make use of to signify His will and pleasure. As to revelations, they were not always made to the best of men: witness the corrupt and deceitful heart of Balaam. And if this was a true revelation, Eliphaz's great fault was in not applying it to a right purpose, but rather to vex and disquiet a good man. Chappelow.

15. —the hair of my flesh stood up:] Thus Homer, speaking of Priam, when terrified at the appearance of Mercury, "His hairs stood upright on his bending limbs." Parkhurst.

17. Shall mortal man be more just than God?] The important instructions conveyed in this Divine vision are, the absolute rectitude of God, the exceeding imperfection of human virtue, and the impiety of arraigning the justice of His moral government. The manifest design of Eliphaz in relating it was, to fix a Divine censure on the latter part of Job's speech, and to warn him against falling into such querulous language any more: since all complaint supposes, that the complainant thinks himself injured by the party of whom he complains. Scott.

18. Behold, he put no trust in his servants; &c.] The imperfection of the most exalted spirits is meant to be pointed out, in comparison with the infinite perfection of the Deity. Scott. Holiness is a communicable perfection: but no creature can partake of it in such a manner and degree, as the Divine nature possesseth it. God is eternally holy, the fountain of holiness: the creatures are derivatively and by participation holy. God is eminently and transcendently so: the creatures in a finite degree. God is immutably so; it is impossible it should be otherwise: but no creature is out of an absolute possibility of sin. In this sense it is here said, that "He putteth no trust in His servants, and His angels He charged with folly:" and chap. xv. 15, "He putteth no trust in His saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in His sight." Abp. Tillotson.

19. —in houses of clay, &c.] Frail mutable bodies, whose original is from the dust, which are crushed sooner than a moth. Clark.

"Houses of clay," or of mud. This description of our frail perishing bodies receives additional force from remarking, that one usual mode of building in the East is literally with mud dried in the sun; and that of course such mud-houses soon decay, and are of short duration. Parkhurst.

——which are crushed before the moth?] Or, more strictly, the moth-worm. Parkhurst.

This creature is usually taken for the moth, which consumes clothes and wool, by reducing them to a dust and powder. The signification of the passage may be; As the habitation of a worm is consumed by its inhabitants, so is the person of man; it is no more capable of resisting disease, than a woollen cloth is capable of resisting decay, when devoured and demolished by the worm appointed to it: otherwise, crushed as a feeble and contemptible insect is crushed; as we crush a moth-worm, without compunction or reluctance. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

20. They are destroyed from morning to evening:] They are subject or liable to destruction the whole day. Caryl. There is not a moment, wherein man is not sinking and drawing on towards death and corruption. Poole.

21. Doth not their excellency which is in them go away?] Rather, Doth not their excellency go away with them? Dr. Durell.

——they die, even without wisdom.] Though they are masters of never so much wisdom in their lifetime, yet in death it all vanishes, together with their other excellencies. Clark.

"They die, even without wisdom:" like beasts, who never think of death, which will deprive them of all that they possess. Bp. Wilson.

Chap. V. ver. 1. — To which of the saints wilt thou turn?] The voice of the spirit or apparition evidently ceases with the last verse of the foregoing chapter; so that what follows must be the words of Eliphaz. Chappelow.

"To which of the saints, &c." of the holy beings, that is, of the angels. Those exalted spirits know themselves to be fallible: which of them, therefore, will countenance thee, in justifying thyself, and complaining against God? Scott. Or, "to which of the saints wilt thou turn?" Canst thou give any instance of holy men afflicted as thou art? Bp. Wilson.

2. —wrath killeth the foolish man,] Wrath may be taken here two ways, either for the wrath of God, or for the wrath of man: in the former sense the meaning is, that the wrath of God kills foolish men; which is an undoubted truth. But the latter seems preferable, which gives the meaning thus: that the wrath of a foolish man kills himself; his own wrath is as a knife at his throat, and as a sword in his own bowels. Caryl.

Eliphaz resumes his position, that men reap what they sow: their sufferings are the fruit of their own criminal passions, Prov. i. 31, 32. He produces another example in support of this principle, and traces up the matter to its source in a fixed law of Providence, which hath ordained natural evil to be the punishment of moral. It is to be observed, by what cautious gradations this speaker opens his uncharitable judgment of the case of his friend. Scott.

—— the foolish man, — the silly one.] These are terms in Scripture for impious and wicked men, Prov. i. 7, 32; marking them as persons of a stupid understanding, and seduced by their corrupt passions. The first, "foolish," is applied by Zechariah to an oppressive ruler, chap. xi. 15, 16. The passions of "wrath" and "envy" are specified, because these are two principal sources of injustice and cruelty. Scott.

3. — I cursed his habitation.] I judged him unhappy; and saw a curse hanging over all that belonged to him. Clark.

This passage appears to be explained by Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36. Rosenmüller.

What Eliphaz says concerning the judgments of God upon the wicked, and the short duration of their happiness, is true: but his application of it to Job is wrong. Osterwald.

4. — the gate,] The court of justice held at or over the gate. Bp. Stock.

See the note on Gen. xxiii. 10. In the place of judgment, justice took hold of them. Bp. Wilson.

To Dr. Shaw's remark, quoted in the note on Gen. xxiii. 10, may be added, that the square tower, which is the present principal entrance to the Alhambra, or red palace of the Moorish kings in Grenada, from its being the place where justice was summarily administered, was styled "the gate of judgment." Parkhurst.

5. Whose harvest the hungry eateth] "The hungry," that is, a starveling, a man almost starved with hunger and thirst, a meagre wretch. There seems in this place a manifest allusion to the half-starved Arabs of the desert, who were always ready for plunder, as their descendants are to this day. Parkhurst.

—— taketh it even out of the thorns,] As a man is said to fetch a thing out of the fire, or out of the lion's mouth, when he gets it with much peril and hazard; so, what a man gets with much difficulty and labour he is said to get out of the thorns: and the reason is this; because men were wont, when they had gathered in their harvest, to secure it with a thorn hedge, or to lay bushes about their stacks, to keep off cattle or any other annoyances. Caryl.

Or, "whose harvest the hungry taketh even out of the thorns:" for, being overrun with briars, it is not worth reaping. The plunderer took the remainder. Bp. Wilson.

6, 7. Although affliction &c. &c.] The Hebrew is rather, "For iniquity cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground;" that is, as the wickedness of men does not proceed from any natural cause, but from their own free wills; so neither are their miseries to be considered as the effects of natural causes, but as the distributions of a free agent likewise, who fits men's punishment to their crimes: and hence man, being prone to sin, is necessarily born to suffer. Peters.

God, in His unbounded wisdom and power, is the disposer of all events, and especially of those that happen to men, dispensing them with perfect righteousness and goodness, insomuch that, sooner or later, the wicked are confounded, and the righteous delivered. This every day's experience confirms: and it should be a powerful motive to engage us to forsake sin, and to put our whole trust in God alone. Osterwald.

8, 9. I would seek unto God, &c.] That is, (for Eliphaz had precluded Job from all attempts to justify himself in the foregoing part of his advice,) I would apply to God by a full and free confession of those sins, which have drawn this sad calamity upon me; to God, who was able to do wonders, (as he presently adds,) and who could and would restore him to his former happy state, if He saw him truly penitent for his past transgressions: for this is the whole purport of the following part of the speech, ver. 17—27; namely, to give Job hopes of a happy turn to his condition, if he would but do, what Eliphaz thought was absolutely necessary to be done in his case; namely, make a frank confession of those secret crimes and enormities, which had pulled down this severe chastisement on his head. Peters.

10. Who giveth rain] We may note, that the common blessings of God are not dispensed without a directing Providence. Nature works not without the God of nature. Caryl.

In those hot climates the spring is of short duration. All summer the earth is without rain: every thing is burnt up, and the fields are turned into a desert. But when the autumnal rains fall, a few plentiful showers produce a sudden resurrection of vegetable nature: the pastures are clothed again with grass, the trees are covered with green leaves, and all things assume a fresh and delightful aspect. Dr. Russell. Eliphaz appears to allude in this place to such a great and beautiful operation of Providence; as a fitting emblem of its effecting a like wonderful transition from a condition of despairing affliction to a state of prosperity and joy. Scott.

11. To set up on high those that be low; &c.] From the works of nature, ver. 10, Eliphaz passes on to man, and describes at large instances of supreme power which God is wont to display in His dealings with him. This verse is to be connected with ver. 9, in the following manner: God doeth great and marvellous things by setting up on high those that be low. Rosenmüller.

13. — the counsel of the froward is carried headlong.] That is, they rush to their own ruin. Bp. Wilson.

14. They meet with darkness &c.] They trip in the plainest way; and see not their danger when it is visible to every body but themselves. Bp. Patrick.

15. from their mouth,] That is, from the reproaches of those crafty ones. Clark.

16. So the poor hath hope,] Great cause to hope in God's mercy for deliverance, by this experience of the divine goodness to him. Clark.

——iniquity stoppeth her mouth.] Such examples of the justice and goodness of Providence silence the objections of infidels, and the murmurs of all complainants. Scott.

17. Behold, happy is the man &c.] As a further motive to repentance, he represents afflictions as Divine remedies, and displays the blessings they procure to those who are reformed. Scott.

19. — in six troubles: yea, in seven] This expression "six; yea, seven," seems to be a fixed number put for an unfixed, a certain number for an uncertain. We find this kind of speaking frequently in Scripture: in the thirty-third chapter of this book, ver. 29, "Lo, all these things worketh God twice and thrice," we translate, "these things worketh God oftentimes." Caryl.

21. — destruction] Rather, ruin, by calumny or false accusation; as appears from its connexion with "the scourge of the tongue." Scott.

—— when it cometh.] Upon others. Clark.

22. — destruction and famine] "Destruction," desolation, by the incursions of lawless men and wild beasts: see Lev. xxvi. 22; Jer. v. 6; Ezek. xiv. 15; Ps. lxxx. 13. "Famine," extreme poverty, the effect of the incursions and depredations above mentioned. Accordingly it follows, "neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth." See Hos. ii. 12, 18. Scott.

23. For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field:] The stones of the field shall not hurt thee, though thou walkest with naked feet. Grotius.

This strong figure of speech may import protection in travelling. The sandals, which the ancients wore, were a very slight guard to the feet in the rough and stony ways of their mountains. Compare Ps. xci. 11, 12. In the former verse he assures security to his vineyards, &c. from the depredations of noxious animals: in the latter part of this, he engages for the security of his person, particularly from the various kinds of serpents, which infested the desert of Arabia, and rendered travelling dangerous, Deut. viii. 15. Scott.

24. — and thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not sin,] The words signify, Thou shalt superintend thy affairs with good success, and not err or fail in the administration of them. Bp. Hall. "Shalt not sin," shalt not miscarry. The original word is a metaphor from skilful slingers, who never miss the mark: Judg. xx. 16, "every one could sling stones at an hair breadth, and not miss." Scott. It signifies to miss of happiness, "our nature's end and aim." Parkhurst.

26. — like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season.] Cometh to the threshingfloor at the season of harvest. Bp. Stock.

The Eastern people used not anciently to stack their corn in the straw, to remain for a considerable time, as we do; but to carry it together in heaps, and then presently thresh it in the field: and they observe the same practice to this day. "As a heap of corn comes up" (on the threshingfloor, namely) "in its season," that is, when fully ripe. Parkhurst.

An easy death in a good old age, a worthy and respected character, and an honourable interment, are the ideas conveyed in this rural comparison. Scott.

27. Lo this, we have searched it,] They had, it seems, conferred together on the case of their friend, agreed in their judgment of it, and concerted the plan of their discourse to him. Job accordingly addresses his answer to them all. Scott.

The intent of the speech, however soft and insinuating, is very plain: it was to bring Job to a confession of some secret wickedness, some great enormity, of which his friends supposed him to be guilty. And so, we find, Job understood it; for he complains of the unkindness of the suspicion in the following reply, chap. vi. 14, 15, 25. Peters.

Chap. VI, VII. Job excuses his ebullition of impatience by the greatness of his sufferings, which his friends have not duly appreciated. He rejects in very unfriendly terms the consolation offered by Eliphaz, probably because he knows his disaster to be incurable, and feels no right to expect a miraculous interference to effect his recovery. He declares expressly that he does not expect a cure, and that a speedy death is his only desire: he complains that his friends do not sympathize with him; he laments the general lot of human nature, and his own in particular; he confesses at last, that he is not unjustly punished, but complains that God should so strictly observe and so rigidly punish, offences that cannot injure Him. Michaelis.

Chap. VI. ver. 3. — therefore my words are swallowed up.] By my grief, which drowns them that I cannot speak, and stops my mouth that I am not able to utter what I would say. Clark.

4. For the arrows of the Almighty are within me,] This is uttered by the patient man, when he would excuse his passion by the terrour and agony he was in. He had patience enough for the oppression and rapine of his enemies, for the unkindness and reproach of his friends, and for the cunning and malice of the devil; but he was so transported with the sense of God's anger, he could not bear that with temper: the apprehension that all these miseries, of so piercing and destroying a nature in themselves, fell upon him, not only by God's permission, to try and humble him, but proceeded directly from His indignation and resolution to destroy him, almost confounded him. We want this apprehension of God's anger, and the pious passion that would attend it; and find out a hundred reasons for any affliction that befalls us, in the pride, and envy, and injustice of men, before we resort to the least consideration that they flow from His displeasure towards us; and are so far from being terrified or perplexed with the sense of His anger, that we seem to be of opinion, that He cannot be angry at all, otherwise we would use the same providence to prevent it, and the same diligence and application to pacify it, as we do towards the anger of those whom we think able or willing to do us good or harm. Lord Clarendon.

—— the arrows — the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit:] This alludes to the custom that prevailed among the ancients, of dipping arrows in poison, which appears to have had the effect of producing thirst. The "poisoned arrows" of Horace are famous: and Homer speaks of "poison for smearing arrows." The Chaldee Paraphrast on Ps. lxiv. 3, alludes to this practice: for what is in Hebrew, "they bend their arrows, bitter words," he renders, "they anoint their arrows with poison." Script. illust.

—— do set themselves in array against me.] Make war against me; or, attack me in the order and disposition of a regular army. Chappelow. The thick succession of his past calamities, and his apprehension of many more sufferings still to come, seem to be painted in this high colouring. Scott.

5. Doth the wild ass bray &c.] As if he had said, Thou wonderest that my disposition and carriage are so greatly altered from what they were; see chap. iv. 3—5: but thou mayest easily learn the reason of it from the brute beasts, the ass and the ox; which, when they have convenient food, are quiet and contented, but complain when they are in want: see Jer. xiv. 6. And therefore my carriage is agreeable to those common principles of nature, which are both in men and beasts; by which their disposition and deportment is generally suited to their condition. It is no wonder that you, who live in ease and prosperity, do not complain; nor did I, when it was so with me: but if you felt what I feel, you would be as full of complaints as I am. Poole.

6. Can that which is unsavoury be eaten &c.] Can, or do, men use to eat unsavoury meats, with delight, or without complaint? That is, Men commonly complain of their meat, when it is unsavoury; how much more, when it is so bitter, as mine is? See the next note. Poole.

7. The things that my soul refused &c.] The words are to be understood metaphorically: the sense may be, Those grievous afflictions, which according to the common inclinations of human nature I dreaded the very touch and thought of, are now my daily though sorrowful bread; I am forced constantly to feed upon them. Compare Ps. lxxx. 5; cii. 9. Poole.

9. — that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off!] As God made, so doth He still "uphold all things by the word of His power," Heb. i. 3, insomuch, that, should He let go His hold of us, and not keep us up in our being, we should immediately fall down into nothing. Job was sensible of this; and it gave occasion to the present exclamation. He knew, that if God did but "let loose his hand," so as not to support him in his being, he should the same moment be "cut off," and cease to be. So necessarily do all the creatures upon earth subsist and depend upon the will and power of their Creator. Bp. Beveridge.

10. — I would harden myself in sorrow:] I would set myself to bear the pangs and agonies of death, if I had but this hope, that my misery was near expiring; for I have the testimony of a good conscience, which tells me, that I have not smothered any light which God hath sent me, but that I have been faithful to Him, His cause, and His truth. Caryl.

—— for I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.] The great Prophet, the Messiah, appeals to God for His fidelity in similar language, Ps. xl. 10. Scott. His words mean, It has been the business of my life to profess and vindicate piety and religion. So far from concealing those qualities which are peculiar to the Holy One, such as His goodness, kindness, and beneficence; so far from not publishing them to the world, I have laboured, both by precept and example, to influence mankind with becoming sentiments of such Divine excellences. Chappelow.

11. What is my strength, &c.] What evil can there be in my end? I see little hope of life, and have but little comfort in it to desire it; nor any hurt in death that I should dread it. Clark.

13. Is not my help in me? &c.] Do not think that my reason hath forsaken me, and that I do not understand myself. Bp. Patrick. This verse may be rendered, agreeably to the Hebrew, "What if I have no help in me," that is, if I cannot help myself, if my outward condition be helpless and hopeless, as I confess it is, "is wisdom driven quite from me?" Have I therefore lost my understanding and common reason? Cannot I judge whether it is more desirable for me to live or die; whether I am an hypocrite or not; whether your words have truth and weight in them, or not; whether you take the right method in dealing with me; whether you deal mercifully and sincerely with me, or not? Poole.

14. To him that is afflicted &c.] The meaning is, they who treat a friend with such cruelty, will easily cast off the fear of God. Grotius. This verse yields an excellent moral instruction, very proper to introduce the reproof that follows. Scott.

15. — as a brook,] This simile is exquisitely beautiful, considered as a description of a scene of nature in the deserts of Arabia. But its principal beauty lies in the exact correspondence of all its parts to the thing it is intended to represent. The fulness, strength, and noise of these temporary streams in winter, answer to the large professions made by a man's friends in his prosperity; the drying up of the waters at the approach of summer, to the failure of their friendship in his affliction; and the confusion of the thirsty caravans, on finding the streams vanished, strongly illustrates his feelings on being disappointed of relief from their friendly counsels. Scott.

Though the metaphor from overflowing waters is very frequent in other sacred writers, yet the author of the book of Job never touches upon it but once or twice throughout the whole poem, and that very slightly, though the subject afforded him frequent opportunity to do so. Indeed a different face of nature presented itself to him, if, according to the opinion of several learned men, the book was written in some part of Arabia: an opinion rendered more probable by this remarkable comparison, in which Job likens his three friends to a deceitful torrent, which is manifestly taken from the dry and sandy places of Arabia, and adorned with many images peculiar to that country. Bp. Lowth.

The Arabians have several proverbial sayings concerning pretended false friendship. Some are taken from a pool which is filled by sudden hasty showers, and is extremely grateful to a thirsty traveller; but so deceitful, that, when he returns, he finds it quite exhausted. In the same manner they compare a treacherous friend to a torrent, or land flood, which is soon raised, and as soon disappears. Chappelow.

—— brooks] Or torrents. The beds of those winter rivers are also called torrents: they are deep vallies between high rocks of granite. Bp. Pococke saw several of them perfectly dry in his journey to mount Sinai, in April. One in particular, which he passed through, was a quarter of a mile broad. Scott.

16. Which are blackish by reason of the ice,] These streams are first formed by the autumnal rains: the warmth and rains of the spring melting the ice and snow on the mountains increase them; they then rush down into the vallies in a large body of turbid water, and assume the appearance of deep rivers. Scott.

18. The paths of their way are turned aside;] Or, "they are shortened:" the current runs shorter and shorter, as the sun continues to beat on them, and their supplies from the mountains fail. Scott.

19. The troops of Tema looked, &c.] That is, the caravans of travellers and merchants: or the wandering Arabs, who lived in tents, may be here likewise understood, who removed with their cattle from one place to another, for the convenience of pasture and water. Chappelow. The road of the caravans, that went with merchandise from Arabia Felix to Egypt, lay through Arabia Petrea, Job's country. The yearly caravan, which goes from Grand Cairo to Mecca, in Arabia Felix, passes the same way. Scott.

The same thought is expressed, Jer. xiv. 2, 3. Peters.

21. For now ye are nothing; &c.] Job at length applies the similitude to his friends. I say this, he observes, because ye are now nothing; ye are of no service in assuaging my affliction, ye have deceived even the lowest expectation of relief, as a torrent, whose waters have passed away, frustrates the hopes of a thirsty traveller. Rosenmüller.

26. Do ye imagine to reprove words, &c.] Do you imagine that all your arguments are solid and unanswerable, and all my answers but idle and empty words? Or, do you think it sufficient to cavil and quarrel with some of my words and expressions, without giving allowance for human infirmity, or for my extreme misery, which may easily force from me some unbecoming expressions? Poole.

27. Yea, ye overwhelm the fatherless,] That is, ye overwhelm me who am a poor, destitute, helpless man, who have no friend, succour, or support. Caryl.

29. Return, I pray you, let it not be iniquity; &c.] Bethink yourselves of the wrong you have done me, and repent of it. Let me not be charged with sin and hypocrisy for what I have said. Think again, and better of it. I doubt not but upon farther consideration the righteousness of my cause and person will fully appear to you. Clark.

30. Is there iniquity in my tongue? &c.] See whether I utter any thing that is false; and whether I possess not a sound judgment to distinguish between right and wrong. Rosenmüller.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?] This question appears to mean, in general, that, whereas before the flood men lived many hundred years, and after the flood some held out a considerable time, yet now the general period of human life is determined by God to be much shorter. This passage, as well as that in chap. xiv. 5, has been applied to ill purposes, as if every particular man's time were so strictly assigned him by God, that nothing could lengthen or shorten it. But, as for particular persons, it does not hereby appear, that God has determined the time of their death by any absolute or unconditional decree; nor does such an interpretation seem consistent with the promises of long life to pious persons, where God sees best for them, and the threatenings of cutting off the lives of the wicked. See Prov. x. 27; Exod. xx. 12; Ps. lv. 23. Collyer.

—— are not his days also like the days of an hireling? Who has a set time for his painful service, and longs till night comes to put an end to it. Clark.

2. As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow,] Why may not I as passionately wish to see an end of life, as the slave in a hot day gasps for the refreshment of the shade; or the labourer longs for the evening, when he may rest and be paid for his pains? Bp. Patrick.

hath wrought all day and is weary, he can lie down at night quietly and rest himself; but alas, the night is as troublesome and laborious to me as the day: when the hireling hath laboured and taken pains, he receives his reward at evening; but my wages are months of vanity, and my rewards are nights of trouble. Caryl.

4. When I lie down, &c.] Two medical writers of antiquity, Aretæus and Celsus, mention dreams as attending on the elephantiasis, and describe them to be such as disturb the rest. Rosenmüller.

5. My flesh is clothed with worms &c.] What a tragical object is here presented to our view! a living corpse. Maundrell, in his description of the ten lepers whom he saw at Sichem in the Holy Land, remarks, "The whole distemper indeed, as it there appeared, was so noisome, that it might well pass for the corruption of the human body on this side the grave." Scott.

—— my skin is broken,] That is, cracked and peeled off. Michaelis observes from the ancient physicians, that in the elephantiasis the skin in some places laps over, in others it chaps. Parkhurst.

6. My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle,] All my happy days are run away in a moment, and there is no hope that I shall recover them. Bp. Patrick.

7. O remember that my life is wind:] The same sentiment occurs in Ps. lxxviii. 39, "For He remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again." Rosenmüller.

9, 10. As the cloud is consumed &c.] When Job saith he shall "come up no more," it is not a denial of a dying man's resurrection to life, but of his restitution to the same life; therefore he adds, ver. 10, "he shall return no more to his house:" he doth not say absolutely "he shall return no more," but "he shall return no more to his house." Caryl.

11. Therefore I will not refrain my mouth; &c.] Since there is no hope that my condition shall be better in this world, I will therefore give some vent to the extremity of my sorrow by my complaints. Clark.

12. Am I a sea, or a whale, &c.] Job exclaims against his inflictions, as having neither so fierce and intractable a spirit as to require, nor so much strength as to bear, these severe assaults. Schultens.

Am I a sea,] The Nile is probably meant, which is called a sea in Is. xxvii. 1; Ezek. xxxii. 2; and, as Michaelis observes, in the Koran. The daily increase of the Nile is made the subject of a kind of proclamation at Cairo: and should it be more or less than so many cubits, it would create a publick alarm. When it overspreads its proper limits, it does great damage, by carrying away large portions of its banks, sometimes towns and villages. The sense may be, Am I an inundation, that thou settest a watch about me? Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

—— or a whale, &c.] Probably the creature here intended is the crocodile, which is watched wherever its haunts are known; as there have been melancholy instances of its seizing dogs, cattle, and even women, who going to draw water have ventured too much into the river. In such cases, no doubt, the adjacent inhabitants would watch with great anxiety the motions of so terrible a neighbour. Am I a crocodile, that thou settest a watch for me? Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

In this view how forcible is the complaint of Job, that God had dealt with him as men do with crocodiles; watching them with great attention, falling upon them with repeated blows, and giving not over until they have destroyed them. Harmer.

13. See ver. 4.

15. So that my soul chooseth strangling, &c.] So that, if I had my free choice, my soul would wish to end my sorrow by a violent death, rather than to linger thus in continual torment. Bp. Hall.

So that my soul chooseth — death rather than my life.] Or, literally, "rather than my bones," as in the margin: that is, than life in such a skeleton-like body, so emaciated by my distemper. "Bones" denote the remains of a dead body, Gen. l. 25. Parkhurst.

16. I loathe it; I would not live alway:] My life is a burden to me, I would not live long; I would rather be cut off in the midst of my days, than live to the end of them. Caryl.

17. What is man, that thou shouldest magnify him?] Why should the great, the powerful, the glorious God, contend with weak, miserable, vain man? How unequal is this match! Caryl.

18. And that thou shouldest visit him every morning,] Why shouldest Thou send new afflictions on him every morning; nay, try his strength and courage every moment? Bp. Patrick

19. How long wilt thou not depart from me,] Must I endure fatigue and trouble to such an excess as to hope for no intermission? Shall my spirits be quite spent and exhausted without being allowed time to take my breath? Chappelow.

—— nor let me alone till I swallow down my spittle?] This is now a proverbial expression among the Arabs, and signifies the same as "give me time to breathe." Dr. Durell.

20. I have sinned; what shall I do unto thee,] Job having in the former part of this chapter contested with his friends, and expostulated the matter with God, now turns himself to another posture, even to humble his soul, and make confession of his sin. He had justified himself against the accusations of men, but now he accuses and judges himself in the presence of God. Caryl.

—— why hast thou set me as a mark against thee,] A mark to intercept Thy arrows upon my breast, so that I know not what to do, I am so burdensome to myself. Hence we may remark, that what presses and burdens the soul above all, is the apprehension that God is against us. Caryl.

21. And why dost thou not pardon my transgression,] Why dost Thou not remove the punishment of my transgression? if Thou dost not come speedily to help me, it will be too late. Clark.

—— for now shall I sleep in the dust;] For now I am dying; and when that event is past, if Thou wouldest make farther use of me, for the manifesting of Thy power and my patience, I shall not be at all. Bp. Hall.

In this chapter we are reminded of the vanity and shortness of human life, and of the numerous miseries to which man is here exposed. This truth Job teaches us, when he says, "that there is a time appointed to man upon earth," ver. 1; and when he sets before us his own example, and the greatness of his sufferings. If such is our condition in this world, and Job, a man so holy and so acceptable to God, was treated thus, we ought not to set out hearts too much upon things here below, nor be surprised if God exposes us to divers afflictions; we should rather consider, that He does all in goodness and wisdom; that He sends afflictions to make us sensible of the vanity of this life, and to wean us from the world; and therefore that it is our duty to submit with humility to His will, to acknowledge our unworthiness, and to intreat that He will consider our weakness, and pardon our sins. Ostervald.

Chap. VIII. Bildad infers, from the justice of God, that chastisement implies guilt, and that one is as surely the consequence of the other, as effects in the natural world are inseparable from their causes. This position, he says, was not a discovery of yesterday; it had been uniformly maintained by wise men through all ages past. Job therefore must have been guilty. His children had perished because they acknowledged not their sins: but Job might yet be restored, if he confessed his evil doings, and asked pardon for them. Bp. Stock.

Ver. 2. How long wilt thou speak these things?] This is the first time of Bildad's speaking. There is something peculiar in the manner of his address, which is sudden, passionate, and without preface. Chappelow.

—— a strong wind?] Boisterous and violent, swelling and furious, opposing all persons and things that stand in thy way. Poole. The meaning of the verse is, Why dost thou persist to talk in this manner, and with such vehemence expostulate with God? Bp. Patrick.

4. If thy children have sinned against him,] Though 'tis true thy children are destroyed, yet thou art still in a capacity to receive mercy, if thou seekest to God for it, and desistest from those causeless and unthankful complaints. Clark.

8—13. For enquire, I pray thee, &c.] This natural and beautiful comparison appears plainly, by the way of introducing it, to have been a proverbial saying delivered down from their forefathers, and perhaps taught them from their cradles, "Enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, &c." Have not they then transmitted to thee this wise lesson? that as the rush cannot grow up without mire, nor the flag without water, so neither can any thing flourish or prosper long without the blessing of Almighty God: and how should the ungodly or hypocrite expect His blessing? One scarcely knows which to admire most, the piety of the sentiment, or the elegance and justness of the comparison. Peters.

11. Can the rush grow up without mire?] The word rendered "rush," is probably the papyrus, which, having been anciently manufactured for the purpose of writing on, has given name to our paper. It grows in marshy grounds; formerly in great plenty in the canals of the Nile, where it is now scarce; but, according to Bruce, it abounds in the waters of Abyssinia. Script. illust. Expos. Ind. Lucan describes the papyrus by the epithet "bibulus," drinking, soaking, thirsty: which corresponds with great exactness to the nature of the plant, and to its Hebrew name, derived from its remarkably supping up the water in which it grows, according to this passage in Job. It is the same plant of which Moses's ark was made, Exod. ii. 3. The "flag," next spoken of, appears to be a sort of reed, described by Hasselquist as growing near the Nile. Parkhurst.

tables required a great deal of water: when they were not supplied with their usual moisture, they perished sooner than any other plants. What a just image is this of transient prosperity! Scott.

13. So are the paths of all that forget God; &c.] We may observe, that they who forget God shall quickly wither, how great and flourishing soever they are. Caryl.

Though this be true, yet it was wrong in its application to Job. Bp. Wilson.

14. Whose hope shall be cut off, &c.] A proverbial expression. The same occurs Isaiah lix. 5, "they weave the spider's web." Grotius.

—— a spider's web.] Wrought indeed with great labour, but so thin, that the texture of it is easily broken and dissolved. See Isai. lix. 5. In the Koran, Infidels, that is, those who do not believe in Mahomet, but particularly Christians, are compared to a spider, which prepareth a house; but verily, it is there said, "a spider's house is the weakest of all houses, did they, the Infidels, but know or consider it." Chappelow.

15. He shall lean upon his house, but it shall not stand:] He may fancy his family to be so great and potent that it will support him; but it shall fall as well as himself: he may endeavour to keep it up by strong alliances, but to no purpose. Bp. Patrick.

16—18. He is green before the sun, &c.] The hypocrite was first compared to a rush, secondly to a spider's web, but now to a goodly tree. This third similitude grants the hypocrite the best of his condition, and puts him in the fairest posture that can be imagined, and yet all proves nought: his root is but rottenness, and his blossom shall go up as the dust, or his branches shall be cut down, and his root stubbed up. Caryl.

17. His roots are wrapped about the heap,] The heap of stones; this denotes his thriving against all opposition: heaps of stones are hindrances to the growing of a tree, to the rooting of it; therefore we set or plant trees in places free from stones: but to shew that he may even overcome, conquer, and subdue those difficulties which hinder his growth, it is here said, that his roots are wrapped about the stones: he grows in places of greatest disadvantage. Or the words may signify the firmness and the seeming strength of his standing. He is rooted, not in some loose and sandy earth, or in tougher clay, but his roots are wrapped about a heap of stones. Caryl.

—— about the heap,] Or, "about a spring," so our translators render the original word in Cant. iv. 12. It seems to allude to a plant, throwing out suckers by the water side. "The place of stones" is, in the original, "the house of stones," which is a Hebrew idiom for strong ground. "Seeing the place of stones" is an animated phrase for growing in a strong soil. Scott.

—— and seeth the place of stones.] That is, he lives, abides, converses or dwells even where there seems to be the least probability of his stay; he stayeth in the place of stones. Caryl.

18. If he destroy him &c.] That is, if God shall put forth His hand, and touch him, he shall be forgotten. Bishop Wilson.

Mr. Heath justly refers this action to the sun, mentioned ver. 16. The plant endureth the sun, so long as the spring, that nourisheth its roots, continueth to flow; but when that is dried by the increasing heat, his parching beams destroy the plant. Scott.

—— it shall deny him,] His place shall deny him. Rosenmüller. This is a strong manner of expressing utter abolition. The figure is a bold personification. Scott. Compare Ps. ciii. 16.

19. Behold, this is the joy of his way,] This is that firm and secure happiness which he promised to himself in this life. Bildad, with keen irony, calls the destruction of the hypocrite "the joy of his way." Capellus.

—— others grow.] Other plants shall succeed to his place: that is, his estate shall pass into another family. Scott.

20, 21. Behold, God will not cast away &c.] The meaning is, If you are what you pretend to be, God will certainly restore you to your former happy state. Bp. Wilson.

The whole passage may be connected thus: God will not befriend the hypocrite, but will rather destroy him, and not desist till he has granted to thee such a restoration as shall cause thee to break out into shouts of joy. Rosenmüller.

21. —thy mouth] This sudden turn of the style to the second person is spirited, and catches the attention by surprise. See Bishop Lowth's note on Deut. xxxii. 5. "The mouth being filled with laughter," denotes that smile of joy which is spread over the countenance in some happy change of condition, Psal. cxxvi. 2. Scott.

It is perfectly true, as Bildad here observes, that God is just and wise in all His dispensations; that He is gracious to those who diligently seek Him; and that the wicked always feel the effects of His wrath. Still it is not to be believed that the righteous are never afflicted: and though Bildad's observations be generally true, yet he was hasty and rash in concluding that Job was not acceptable to God, because he was in adversity. God often exposes good men to very great evils, in order to try them, and to make them examples to others; though after all, according to the remark of Bildad, "He will not cast away a perfect man." Ostervald.

Chap. IX, X. The unkind speech of Bildad, the obvious charges of irreligion and hypocrisy, and the taunting irony with which it concludes, overpowered the patience of Job, and in his reply betray him into inconsistencies; at one time he acknowledges the Divine justice, and his own submission to its decrees; at another he seems to arraign it, and complains rather impatiently of his sufferings, as greater than he deserved, and wishes for a publick trial before God with his calumniators, to clear his innocence before his speedy death. Dr. Hales.

Chap. IX. ver. 2. I know it is so of a truth:] Job alludes here to the oracle urged against him by Eliphaz, chap. iv. 17, which he thinks totally irrelevant to the present question. I never thought, he says, of charging God with injustice. I was well aware that no injustice could attach to Him. And how could man be just before his Maker? Who denies that the Deity possesses the right of inflicting, if it please Him, severe sufferings on frail and corrupt man? But does it follow from hence, that I am wicked, or a crafty pretender to piety? Rosenmüller.

3. —one of a thousand.] It would be better expressed thus, "once in a thousand times." Dr. Durell.

"How should man be just with God?" How should he justify himself before God? No, not in one thing of a thousand that might be objected against him. Bp. Wilson.

Though the uncharitableness and reproaches of Job's friends transported him into some passionate and bold expressions of his own innocence and integrity; yet he no sooner perceived that they took advantage of those expressions to charge him with presumption, as if God had unjustly afflicted him, but he made haste to free himself of that imputation. "How should a man be just with God?" even he who is best prepared for an account with Him, can pay Him nothing but His own coin; and that rather laid up in a napkin, than husbanded and employed as it ought to have been. If he can offer Him a good thought, an honest purpose and intention, he had received them from Him, and, it may be, wanted courage to improve and execute them; and so the world had no more fruit of them, than if his heart had been as wicked as his neighbour's. So that, when he hath said the best he can for himself, there will be no abiding the judgment which must still be deprecated; mercy must be implored; no satisfaction or payment pretended; but an entire release and pardon begged and relied upon. Lord Clarendon.

5, 6. Which removeth the mountains, — overturneth them — shaketh the earth out of her place,] This is evidently a description of an earthquake. During the terrible earthquake at Jamaica, 1692, the mountains were split, they opened, they closed again, they leaped, they fell in heaps. The same prodigious motions attended the earthquakes during an eruption of Vesuvius. Scott, Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

7. Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars.] Or forbiddeth them to appear. Bp. Hall. This may refer to that thickness of the atmosphere, which occasionally precedes or accompanies an earthquake. Of this we have many instances. Scott, Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

8. Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, &c.] "Who boweth the heavens;" so Psalm xviii. 9, where, as Scott remarks, is a description at large of the scene, which is here drawn in miniature. Bp. Stock.

By "bowing the heavens," the Hebrew poets express the descent of those black heavy clouds, charged with thunder, lightning, rain, and wind, that are the prelude of a storm at sea. The storm itself, and the power of the Deity in conducting it, are represented in the next member of the period. Scott.

—— alone] This word is not superfluous: it asserts the unity of God, in opposition to polytheism. Scott.

—— treadeth upon the waves] In the original, as the margin notices, "the high places," or "heights." Our translators render it "high places" of the earth, Deut. xxxii. 13; that is, the mountains. "The high places," or "heights," of the sea, must therefore mean its billows, rising to a vast height in a storm. The prodigious swell, agitation, and tumult of the sea during an earthquake may be referred to here. Scott.

9. Which maketh &c.] Shepherds seem to have been the first astronomers. The pastoral life of the Arabs led them very early to observe the rising and setting of the stars, in relation to the changes of weather that ensued. The heat of their climate obliged them to feed their flocks by night; and the clearness and beauty of their nocturnal sky drew their attention and admiration. Scott.

When he saith, "which maketh Arcturus, &c." Job means, which makes them appear, or do their office: for the discourse is not about Creation, but about Providence: so that the meaning is only this, God orders the times of their rising and setting, to distinguish the seasons of the year, and to produce their several effects in every season. Caryl. He ordereth and disposeth them, as the word "maketh" is sometimes used in Scripture. Poole.

No doubt but the names Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, are of late invention in comparison with the Hebrew, Ash, Cesil, and Cimah. It must be a fruitless attempt for any one to ascertain the exact meaning of the Hebrew; it can at the best be only conjecture. After all the ingenious, studied thoughts of commentators, no more perhaps is intended by Arcturus, Orion, &c. than to point out to us, as Bishop Patrick writes, that all the constellations of heaven obey God in their several seasons; both those which we see, and those in the other hemisphere. To the same purpose is that which St. Jerome, or rather Venerable Bede, delivers in his comment on this text: "By these constellations, which are more celebrated than almost all the stars in the firmament of heaven, it is signified, that the whole system of the heavenly bodies is under the governance of God." Chappelow.

11. Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not:] A description of the inscrutable and often unobserved ways of Providence. Michaelis.

12. Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him?] Who shall say unto him, What doest thou? Whatsoever God resolveth and determineth concerning us, we must bear it, and quietly submit. Caryl.

13. —the proud helpers do stoop under him.] They who are so highly conceited of themselves, that they will undertake to defend him whom God intends to destroy, Isaiah xxx. 7. Clark.

17 For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds without cause.

18 He will not suffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterness.

19 If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong: and if of judgment, who shall set me a time to plead?

20 If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: if I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse.

Before CHRIST about 1520.

22 This is one thing, therefore I said it, He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked.

15. Whom, though I were righteous, &c.] Job here opposes this sentiment of his to the unjust charges of his friends, as if he was guilty of contumacy and perverseness against God. Schultens.

16. If I had called, &c.] Rather, "But if I should call, that He might answer me, I could not easily believe that He would hear my voice: 17. Since He hath broken me with a tempest, and inflicted many wounds upon me without cause: 18. Nor hath given me space to take my breath, so hath He killed me with bitterness." Houbigant.

17. — without cause.] Without any extraordinary guilt which should procure such punishment. Clark. "Without cause;" that is, a cause known to me. Bp. Wilson.

19. — who shall set me a time to plead?] Who will, or can, appoint me a time? namely, for trial. Who can sit as judge between God and me? Parkhurst.

The meaning of the verse is, If I think to right myself by force, it is in vain; for He is infinitely stronger than I: if I choose to decide our dispute by law, who hath authority to call us before him? Heath.

20 If I justify myself, &c.] If I should justify myself there would be something in my very plea to condemn me: it will render my cause worse to pretend I am innocent. Bp. Patrick.

Job here teaches us, that man cannot be justified before God: that if the Lord should enter into judgment with him, he could not "answer him one of a thousand;" and that sinful men, however treated, have no right to complain; but must all be condemned in God's presence, and implore His mercy. What Job here says, shews, that though he insisted he was not a wicked man, he did not pretend to be just before God. We ought all to entertain the same thoughts; continually and seriously to reflect upon these truths; and thereby animate ourselves to the fear of God, submitting to His will, and putting our trust in Him. Ostervald.

21. Though I were perfect, &c.] Although I were not conscious of any transgression, still I would not judge myself, 1 Cor. iv. 3, 4 Grotius.

I would not attempt my justification in His presence: but if He have determined my death, would willingly surrender my life into His hands. Bp. Hall.

22. This is one thing, &c.] All that I affirm is this, and I persist in the opinion, that He lets the innocent suffer sad things as well as the guilty. Bp. Patrick.

Thus in time of plague or famine all suffer. Bp. Wilson.

23. If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.] Or, it will laugh; namely, the scourge. So Schultens. The figure is bold, but not too bold for poetry. Peters. By the scourge is meant publick calamities, war, for instance, pestilence, &c.; which involved all characters in one common destruction, are said, by a noble personifying figure, to "laugh" at the sufferings of the innocent. Scott.

Or the sense may be, When a plague comes, which kills in a moment, He, namely God, regards not though it fall upon the innocent. Bp. Patrick. If some common and deadly judgment falls upon a people, so as to destroy both good and bad; or if God inflicts some grievous and unexpected stroke upon an innocent person; His outward carriage is the same both to the good and to the wicked. He neglects the innocent, and seems not to answer their prayers, and suffers them to perish with others, as if He took pleasure in their ruin also. But at the same time Job intimates the cause of God's complacency in the afflictions of the innocent, because to them they are but "trials" of their faith, and patience, and perseverance, tending to God's honour, and their own eternal advantage. Poole.

24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: &c.] Is not the government of the world given often into the hands of wicked men, who bribe and pervert justice, and thereby injure the innocent? Bp. Wilson.

Job pursues his argument. The truth of what I have said, that the good and bad suffer promiscuously, is evident from this, that "the earth is given into the hand of the wicked." Rosenmüller.

And as He destroys the righteous, ver. 23, so He prospers the wicked. He blinds them that they cannot discern right from wrong. If it be not as I say, where is any one else that could do so? certainly none else could manage the affairs of the world after this manner but He. Clark.

—— he covereth the faces of the judges thereof;] Not that God is any way instrumental in covering the faces of the judges; in making them pass a wrong and unjust sentence. "He covereth &c." is the same thing in Scripture phrase, as, the faces of the judges are covered. Chappelow.

"The judges," being in contrast here with the wicked, that is, a tyrannical ruler, must mean good governours, who administer justice impartially to all. Thus "a man" signifies one who has the virtues proper to the male sex, Eccles. vii. 28; see also Prov. xxviii. 12: "a woman," one who is adorned with the qualities becoming the female sex, Prov. xxxi. 10: and "a king" is a king indeed, who acteth worthy of his royal dignity, Prov. xvi. 10. Of these good rulers he says, God "covereth their faces;" that is, God treats them as condemned malefactors, overwhelming them in calamities, disgrace, and ruin; Job himself being one example of this melancholy truth. See 2 Sam. xv. 30; Esth. vii. 8; Jer. xiv. 3; Isai. xxii. 17; Mic. iii. 7; Mark xiv. 65. Scott.

25. Now my days &c.] This and the following verse are a confirmation of Job's former argument. As he had shewed in general that the wicked are exalted, and the innocent afflicted, so now he shews the latter branch from his own experience or example. "My days," that is, my prosperous days, are gone in a moment. Caryl.

—— swifter than a post:] A messenger or regulated courier, appointed to carry with expedition despatches of princes, or letters of private persons. Calmet.

Those who carry despatches sometimes rode dromedaries, a sort of camel which is extremely swift. Lady Montague says, "that after the defeat at Peterwaradin, they far outran the swiftest horses, and brought the first news of the battle at Belgrade."

CHAP. X.

1 Job, taking liberty of complaint, expostulateth with God about his afflictions. 18 He complaineth of life, and craveth a little ease before death.

MY soul is ‖ weary of my life; I will leave my complaint upon myself; I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

‖ Or, cut off while I live.

2 I will say unto God, Do not condemn me; shew me wherefore thou contendest with me.

3 Is it good unto thee that thou shouldest oppress, that thou shouldest despise † the work of thine hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked?

† Heb. the labour of thine hands.

4 Hast thou eyes of flesh? or seest thou as man seeth?

Agreeably to this, Dr. Shaw assures us, that the sheik who conducted him to mount Sinai, and rode on a camel of this kind, would depart from the caravan where he was, "reconnoitre another just in view, and return in less than a quarter of an hour." With what energy then might Job say, "My days are swifter than a post!" Instead of passing away with a slowness of motion like that of a caravan, my days of prosperity have disappeared with the swiftness of a messenger carrying despatches, mounted on a dromedary. Harmer.

26. — as the swift ships: &c.] There are but two places in the book of Job, that I remember, where there is any allusion to navigation. One is the present passage, where Job compares the course of human life, and the rapidity with which it passes, to "the swift ships;" (swiftest ships, most excellent for sailing. Houbigant.) Or, as in the margin, "ships of desire;" that is, such as are longed for, and long to be at their destined port, and crowd all the sail they can for that purpose. Peters. Or, "ships of Ebeh," (see the margin,) that is, of the Egyptian papyrus, which seems here to be meant, the woody part of which was anciently used to build vessels with. Parkhurst.

Schultens very ingeniously suggests, that Job compares the days of his prosperity in three several degrees with what we esteem the swiftest in the three elements: namely, with the quick despatches of the post by land; with the more expeditious motion of papyr-vessels by sea; and, which exceeds them both for swiftness, with the flight of the eagle in the air to his prey. Chappelow.

27. If I say, I will forget my complaint, &c.] These words contain a proof of the latter part of Job's assumption. He had affirmed, that an innocent and righteous person may quickly lose all his outward comforts; now he proves that he may be entangled with afflictions beyond hope of escape. This he does, ver. 27—29, which he amplifies, ver. 30 and 31. Caryl.

28. I am afraid of all my sorrows,] That is, I no sooner endeavour to comfort myself, but presently my sorrows throng about me; they charge and assault me afresh, when I am purposing to make an escape from them. Caryl.

—— I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent.] That Thou wilt not deliver me, as an innocent man, from these sufferings, but wilt afflict me, without measure, as a guilty person. Rosenmüller.

29. If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?] If I must be condemned as a wicked man, say what I can for myself, then it is in vain for me to endeavour to clear myself, and maintain my own innocence. Clark.

30. — with snow water,] Which is thought to possess the property of cleansing in a greater degree than other water. Rosenmüller.

31. Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch,] Thou wilt adjudge me sinful, notwithstanding all my purifyings. Caryl. Though I may seem innocent to myself, and may defend my own cause, yet before God I shall appear most unclean and unrighteous, as if I were plunged into a miry ditch. External things are used figuratively for internal; impurity of body for impurity of soul. See Zech. iii. 3, 4; Rev. vii. 13. Poole.

33. — daysman] Or umpire. In some of the northern parts of England, any arbitrator, umpire, or elected judge, is commonly termed a diesman or daysman. The word "day" in all idioms signifies judgment. Dr. Hammond.

—— that might lay his hand upon us both.] "The laying the hand, like a just umpire, on both parties," implies a coercive power to enforce the execution of his decrees: this no one could have on the Almighty; it was therefore vain to contend with Him. Heath, Scott.

34, 35. Let him take his rod &c.] I would open my case, if, while I am speaking, God would remove from me that dominion and authority, which He possesses over me, or that sore affliction which His sovereign power has laid upon me: but "it is not so with me;" I do not find that the Lord hath done any of these things for me. Caryl, Poole.

Chap. X. Job having in the former chapter justified God in afflicting him, and maintained his own integrity, notwithstanding those afflictions, now remonstrates with greater earnestness, that he conceived himself more hardly dealt with than was consistent not only with the goodness of God in His nature, but with that goodness which He had formerly shewn both towards others and towards himself. Caryl.

Ver. 1. — I will leave my complaint upon myself;] I will leave my complaint unrestrained, I will give free scope to it. Rosenmüller.

2. — Do not condemn me; &c.] Do not deal with me as a wicked wretch, and such as my friends take me to be; but acquit me from this censure by withdrawing thy hand, or shewing me for what great sin it is that I should be more heavily afflicted than others. Clark.

unrighteous dealing with him, so he appeals to the Lord, (who was able, he knew, to do it upon certain knowledge,) to acquit him of all the unjust charges with which his friends had burdened him: It is not with Thee, O Lord, as with mortal judges, who, having "eyes of flesh," can see no farther than the outside of things, and know no more than is told them. "Thy days are not as the days of man." Why then dost Thou deal thus severely with me, as if Thou wert afraid that Thou shouldest overslip Thy day, or want a season for dealing with me? Thou knowest that I am not wicked; there is some other cause for my sufferings: shew me wherefore Thou contendest with me. We may hence observe, that God knows the state of every man and every thing exactly; and that it is a matter of highest consolation to good men to remember that God knows them. Caryl.

7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked; &c.] That is, flagitious. Houbigant. It would be injurious to the character of Job, should we interpret in a severe and rigorous sense, as it is certain his friends too often did, his frequent protestations of his innocence, and his bold appeals to the supreme Judge to prove and try him; for where he is thus strenuous in asserting his integrity, it is only in opposition to the notion which those mistaken friends had entertained of him; namely, that he had been guilty of some gross sins, which he had the art to hide from the world, but that he was in reality a wicked man, and a hypocrite in his behaviour. This is what Job utterly denies and disclaims; though he no where arrogates to himself perfect innocence, or freedom from sin. Peters.

8—13. Thine hands have made me &c.] At ver. 3. of this chapter we found Job questioning with the Lord, "Is it good unto Thee that Thou shouldest oppress, that Thou shouldest despise the work of Thine hands?" In the following passage he insists upon and illustrates that argument by fitting it to his own condition: as if he had said, Am not I the work of Thine hands? ver. 8, and "yet Thou dost destroy me." Caryl.

9. Remember, I beseech thee, that thou hast made me &c.] Need I put Thee in mind, that I was formed by Thee, as the potter works the clay into what shape he pleases? and now Thou art crumbling me in pieces again. Bp. Patrick.

10. — curdled me like cheese?] That is, brought me into shape. Bp. Wilson.

Shall my substance receive so great a change, as to be brought near to its dissolution? This substance, which Thou wert solicitous in "pouring out as milk;" anxiously curious in its formation, when I was in the state of an embryo; blending and proportioning the several parts of the body to each other, so as to bring them to a beautiful perfection. This substance, which was "curdled like cheese;" the several members of which were once a rude uncongealed mass, without contexture, without beauty; but by Thy Almighty power secretly and surprisingly wrought: every loose divided limb receiving from Thee its proper shape and ligament, and taught by Thee its distinct use and office. Chappelow.

13. And these things hast thou hid in thine heart: &c.] Thou hast conferred upon me great and signal blessings; but these evils, which I now suffer, Thou didst reserve for me, and appoint them to be inflicted upon me. Rosenmüller. "This is with Thee" is a phrase, which denotes the secret decree of God, chap. xxiii. 14. Scott.

14. If I sin, then thou markest me, &c.] I cannot offend Thee in the least, but Thou, by whom I was thus formed, must needs know and observe it, and I cannot avoid Thy punishment for it. Bp. Patrick.

15. If I be wicked, woe unto me; and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head.] That is, I cannot, will not hope for any such temporal deliverance upon account of my righteousness, as you are endeavouring to persuade me of, from a mistaken principle; and according to which, if no such deliverance should happen, you are still resolved to condemn me as an innocent man. Peters.

16. — Thou huntest me as a fierce lion:] That is, as if I were a fierce lion: compare chap. iv. 10. The allusion, in this and the following verse, is to that manner of hunting the lion, wherein the hunters, armed with spears and javelins, formed themselves in a ring about the beast, and threw their weapons at him one after another. By this image, Job represents in lively colours the violent and rapid succession of his calamities. Scott.

—— thou shewest thyself marvellous upon me.] Thou proceedest after an unusual and extraordinary manner with me, so that every one will wonder at it, Numb. xvi. 29, 30. Clark.

17. Thou renewest thy witnesses against me,] Fresh witnesses of Thine anger rise up against me: Thou multipliest Thy plagues upon me, so that there is no end, but only a change of my conflicts. Bp. Patrick.

The word, rendered "witnesses," may be translated weapons, or attacks, or troops: in either of these ways, the allusion to the chace will be preserved. "Changes and war" means "changes of war;" or successions of war: denoting the war of the chace, carried on by repeated attacks. Scott.

—— without any order,] Where every thing is in such disorder as to resemble the primeval chaos. Capellus.

The conduct of Job is an example of piety and of weakness: of piety, in acknowledging that the Almighty Being, from whom he received his life and all things, was perfectly righteous in all His ways; of weakness, in complaining that it would have been better he had never been born. Let us imitate his piety, and acknowledge at all times the goodness of our Creator: let us avoid his weakness, and submit without murmuring to God's chastening hand. Ostervald.

Chap. XI. Zophar goes beyond Eliphaz and Bildad in the assertion, that none are visited by Divine chastisement but such as deserve it: he maintains that Job's affliction is far short of his desert; and that Job himself would acknowledge it to be so, if he were able to fathom the counsels of God. He urges the vanity of attempting to flee from Divine justice and power, which are exerted always with a view to tame the wildness of human nature; and he concludes with an exhortation to Job to call to mind his past acts of injustice, and presently to make the best reparation for them in his power: the consequence of which would be the recovering of the favour of God, and his former prosperity. Bp. Stock.

Ver. 2. — should a man full of talk be justified?] Acquitted from the crimes with which he is charged, and be accounted righteous merely because of his multitude of words? Clark.

3. — shall no man make thee ashamed?] By confuting thee put thee to shame. Caryl.

4. — My doctrine is pure,] The word "doctrine" is here, by a latitude of signification, used for discourse. Rosenmüller.

5. But oh that God would speak, &c.] Zophar here alludes to the wish expressed by Job, chap. ix. 35. Rosenmüller.

6. — that he would shew thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is!] The methods of His providence and wise disposal of things, with which thou art unacquainted, that thou hast deserved far more than He hath laid upon thee. Clark.

—— that they are double to that which is!] That in strict justice He might inflict upon thee double to what thou now sufferest. Bp. Hall.

7—9. Canst thou by searching find out God? &c.] These three verses are an illustration or a comment upon the sixth. Zophar having breathed out his wish, that "God would speak, and shew Job the secrets of wisdom, &c." proceeds to prove, that it is need He should, those secrets being such as none can see till they are shewed. Caryl.

These are very reasonable questions which Zophar put to him. It must be owned, that we are not able to account for the method of Divine Providence in many instances; and whosoever is not abandoned of all modesty, must readily acknowledge that it is reasonable that it should be so. For we have not the entire scheme of Providence in our heads at once; we cannot see from the beginning to the end of God's ways; we know not what are the designs, and what will be the issues, of His counsels: and therefore ought to suspend our judgment till the conclusion and winding up of things. Bradford.

7. Canst thou by searching &c.] "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Dost thou know God intimately, and thoroughly within and without? Canst thou pierce into the centre of His perfections, and dive into the bottom of them? And "Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" Canst thou find out the Almighty to the very last and utmost of Him? so that thou canst say after a thorough search and inquiry, There is no perfection in God beyond this, there is nothing of Him now that remains to be known: this He is, and no other; that He is, and no otherwise; this He can do, and no more; hither doth His power, and knowledge, and wisdom reach, and no farther. "Canst thou do this?" These interrogations have the force of a vehement negation: as if he had said, No, thou canst not: God is unsearchable, He is incomprehensible. Abp. Tillotson. These words represent to us the vanity of an inquisitive temper, and the defect of our knowledge in respect to spiritual objects; but they are not designed to exclude our endeavours after the proof of a Deity, or to stifle those limited notions and apprehensions of the Divine nature and attributes, which God has thought fit to communicate to us. We are to make a right use and exercise of our reason, and to get as fully acquainted with the object of our worship as we can; but we are not to suffer our knowledge to move out of its sphere, or to presume that a finite being can comprehend the nature, or account for all the actions, of an infinite God. Dr. Coney.

8. It is as high as heaven;] The meaning is, The nature and perfections of God are above the understanding of any of His creatures. It is only His own infinite understanding that can frame a perfect idea of His own perfection. Abp. Tillotson.

When we cannot comprehend a thing, we say it is beyond our reach; or, it is too high or too deep for us. But in what a noble manner does Zophar here express such an impossibility! Bishop [b] Chap. 8. 14. & 18. 14. ‖ Or, a puff of breath.

Lowth produces this passage as an example of the grand manner, in which the Hebrew poets speak of the attributes of God, absolutely considered, without particular mention of the operations and effects that flow from them. Scott.

—— deeper than hell;] The concealed or unseen place of the dead: see the note on chap. xxvi. 6. But it may be a question, whether the word, translated "hell," does not signify sometimes a great invisible depth under ground, without any reference to the dead. See Deut. xxxii. 22; Ps. cxxxix. 8; Ezek. xxxi. 17; Amos ix. 2. Parkhurst.

10. — shut up, or gather together,] Deliver into the enemies' hand, Ps. xxxi. 8, or bring them back after they had been scattered abroad. Clark.

11. For he knoweth vain men:] For he knows vain men, (who mind not what they say or do,) He sees their most hidden wickedness; and will He not punish it? Bp. Patrick.

12. — though man be born like a wild ass's colt.] That is, were he left to himself, and suffered to take his own course without being controlled, did he follow the dictates of his natural appetites, and, void of discipline and instruction, yield to the dominion of headstrong passions, he is then in effect no better than a wild ungovernable creature. This is true in a general sense, but it is said with a particular view, we may suppose to Job. The reflection is perhaps the more severe, because robbers and plunderers are distinguished by the odious title of "wild asses in the desert, rising betimes for a prey," chap. xxiv. 5. It was moreover a common reproach among the Arabians, when they spoke of a perverse obstinate man, tenacious of his own ways, and a despiser of other people's advice, to say, "Such an one is a young wild ass by himself." Chappelow.

14. — tabernacles.] Tents having been the ancient dwellings of men, the term was retained after the invention of more durable and fixed habitations. Job, it is certain, lived in a city, chap. xxix. 7; yet his house is called a "tabernacle, or tent, chap. xxix. 4. Scott.

15. — without spot;] This is a scriptural phrase to denote innocence and integrity, Numb. xix. 2; Heb. ix. 14; Eph. v. 27. "Fair in calamity" is a character, among the Arabians, of one, who bears his misfortunes with a composed steadiness. They likewise distinguish a man of honour, true nobility, and figure, as having "a fair unspotted countenance." On the contrary, "a face as black as a coal," is imputed to the base dishonourable person. Chappelow.

16. — remember it as waters that pass away:] That is, thou shalt not remember it at all. The memory of thy afflictions will be wholly effaced, like the winter torrents, which are utterly evaporated in the beginning of summer, chap. vi. 15, 17. Scott.

17. And thine age shall be clearer than the noonday;] That is, thy latter end shall be full of comfort, and thou shalt rejoice in the serenity of thy condition. Caryl.

18, 19. And thou shalt be secure, &c.] These two verses contain, if I mistake not, a pleasing rural scene; green pastures, wells of water, flocks and herds couched around them, and a little camp of Arabian shepherds inclosing the whole. The expression "thou shalt dig," refers most probably, as Heath remarks, to digging of wells or springs, a circumstance frequently mentioned in the patriarchal history. The word translated "thou shalt lie down," denotes properly the decumbent posture of cattle, after they have well fed, and when they repose at night. As to the encampment, it was the custom, as Heath observes, of the Eastern people to pitch their tents nigh wells, for the conveniency of water for their cattle. The security also, here promised, expresses the protection wanted to defend them from wild beasts, and from the incursions of the thievish Arabs of the desert. The "hope," mentioned in the former of these two verses as the ground of security, can be no other than hope in God: that firm dependence on Divine Providence, which good men are warranted to entertain. Scott.

19. — many shall make suit unto thee.] Shall court thy friendship, as in the instances of Abraham and Isaac, Gen. xxi. 22; xxvi. 28. Grotius.

20. But the eyes of the wicked shall fail,] By being intently fixed on thy happiness, which they cannot enjoy; as the sight is dimmed, while we gaze incessantly on one object. Michaelis.

"Failing of the eyes" is one of those expressions in Scripture to be admired for their beautiful simplicity. It represents a very eager and passionate desire to obtain that which we are in pursuit of, and at the same time the great uneasiness which must unavoidably follow from a disappointment. One of the appeals which Job makes in vindication of his integrity, is, "If I have caused the eyes of the widow to fail," chap. xxxi. 16: that is, If I have frustrated her expectations, when she applied to me for relief and assistance in her distress. See Ps. lxix. 3; and compare chap. xvii. 5. Chappelow.

Chap. XII, XIII, XIV. These three chapters contain Job's answer to the counsels and objections of his third friend Zophar, not excluding what had been said by the two former. There are four things most to be noticed in it: 1st, Job sharply rebukes that kind of spirit and confidence in their own opinion, which he observed in his friends. He pursues this point from the beginning of the twelfth chapter to the end of ver. 4. 2dly, He refutes that opinion which the three had maintained against him; namely, that good or evil things distinguished good or evil men; himself shewing by many arguments, taken from the various administrations of God, that outward evils are often the lot of good men in this life: the theme begins at ver. 5, and is enlarged to the end of the chapter. 3dly, He rejects his friends as physicians of no value; yea, as having wronged God, whilst they seem to be advocates for Him. This subject he prosecutes with much variety from the beginning of chap. xiii. to ver. 7. 4thly, He renews his former plea with God, putting many requests to Him, and strongly arguing for a release from, or at least a mitigation of, his troubles. Caryl.

Chap. XII. ver. 2. No doubt but ye are the people, &c.] This is ironically spoken. Ye are the only wise; with you shall all wisdom expire. Capellus.

3. — yea, who knoweth not such things as these?] Even the meanest understand that God is infinite in wisdom, power, and justice: but that is not the question between us. Clark.

4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he answereth him:] These are the words of one, entertaining good hopes of God's assistance. As if he had said, God has heard me before, when I have called upon Him: He will do the same now. Nevertheless you deride me. Poole.

5. He that is ready to slip with his feet] To slip with the feet is to fall into affliction. A despised lamp is of the same signification with a smoking firebrand, which last is a proverb for that which is almost spent, and therefore despised and thrown away as useless. Caryl, Poole.

The meaning is, He that is in affliction is despised by them that are in full prosperity. Bp. Wilson.

6. The tabernacles of robbers prosper,] As if Job had said; Zophar, thou hast affirmed, that the righteous man is as a shining light: I say, he is but a despised lamp: thou affirmest, that the eyes of the wicked shall fail, &c. but I have seen that the tabernacles of robbers prosper, and that they who provoke God are secure. Caryl.

7—9. But ask now the beasts, &c.] The connexion here is to be traced back to the end of the third verse: "yea, who knoweth not such things as these?" Rosenmüller.

This beautiful apostrophizing of the inanimate and brute creation, is only a poetical way of saying, that the great Author and Disposer of life had given into the hands of robbers the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven, &c. Such men, he complains, possess the largest property and use of the brute creation, and of the produce of the earth; which they abuse to the purposes of luxury and riot. Scott.

7. But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee;] The creatures teach us that there is a God, and much of that which God is—they teach us also ready obedience to the will of God: all creatures obey the law of their creation: they teach us also dependence upon God: the eyes of all wait or look up unto God (Ps. cxlv. 15.) that they may receive good. Caryl.

9. — hath wrought this?] Has by His Divine power and providence disposed of all things that concern them. Clark.

11. Doth not the ear try words?] We may read these words comparatively, (as we find them, chap. xxxiv. 3,) "the ear trieth words, as the mouth tasteth meat." Caryl.

11—13. Doth not the ear try words? &c.] Doth not the understanding judge of the truth of what is spoken? therefore do not rashly condemn me or my doctrine without a due trial; much more may they who have lived to a great age attain the knowledge of Divine truths: and though these should want it, still with Him, ver. 13, that is, with God, "is wisdom, &c." Clark.

"Doth not the ear try words, as the palate tasteth food?" Job, being about to speak of the supreme and absolute dominion of God over His creatures, begins with two proverbial expressions, in which he seems to insinuate that he wished for other judges of what he had to say; who, endued with a more mature and solid understanding of spiritual things, were better able to distinguish sincere piety and the just complaint of oppressed innocence from impiety and hypocrisy, and to dispute more prudently concerning God and His providence. Schultens.

13. With him is wisdom &c.] The design of this grand discourse on the ways of God to men is, I apprehend, to establish his position, chap. ix. 22, "He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked." That proposition is here proved by induction. He allegeth those great and general calamities, drought, inundation, and the overthrow of kingdoms; which make no distinction between the innocent and the guilty, but involve the most virtuous characters, and the noblest and most important talents, in distress, disgrace, and ruin. Scott.

16. — the deceived and the deceiver are his.] God will make both the deceiver and the deceived accountable to Himself: it is from His sufferance that there are any such: in infinite wisdom and holiness He disposeth of the errours of men and of those that lead them into errour, ordering how far any man shall deceive, and to what extent his deceit shall prevail: and further, the Lord improves both to serve His own ends, to bring about His counsels, and promote His own glory. Caryl.

6 Hear now my reasoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

7 Will ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

18. He looseth the bond of kings, &c.] He dissolves their authority, and reduces them to the condition of servants, attending on their masters with loins girt up, to execute their commands. Bp. Stock.

"He looseth the bond of kings," He destroys their binding power, their authority, by dethroning them. The expression may allude to the royal belt, one of the insignia of majesty; compare Is. xlv. 1. "And girdeth, &c." The tenour of the discourse requires these expressions to be taken in a calamitous sense. The "girdle" therefore must here mean the cord or chain, that was tied about the waist of captives; see Ps. cxlix. 8. The manner of making war in our days is very different from what it was in ancient times. We now see no such catastrophes as princes and their people led into captivity: but these were the usual effects of conquest in former ages. Scott.

20. —taketh away the understanding of the aged.] When Job would set out the uncontrollable power of God to defeat all the counsels and purposes of men, one of the strongest phrases he could find to express it by, was this: for in those early days the highest veneration possible was paid to old age. Peters.

21. —weakeneth the strength of the mighty.] The margin reads, "looseth the girdle of the strong," the valiant, or hero. The girdle in 1 Sam. xviii. 4, is connected with the sword and the bow, as part of the military dress: so we read in 2 Kings iii. 21, "The Moabites gathered all that were able to gird themselves with a girdle," as it is in the margin; that is, to oppose the enemies; "to put on armour," as in our translation. Fragments to Calmet. A zone or girdle was a token of strength. Chappelow. See the note on Isai. v. 27.

22. He discovereth deep things out of darkness, &c.] The sentiment is, that, while these terrible revolutions remain in the Divine counsels, they are darkness, utter darkness to us, deep impenetrable secrets: and, when they are discovered in the execution, they astonish and terrify mankind, as though sepulchral darkness covered the face of the earth. The Prophet Daniel speaks in like figurative language of the counsels of God, relating to the four great empires of the world, chap. ii. 21, 22. Scott.

——the shadow of death.] That which hath been contrived in the greatest obscurity. Bp. Patrick.

24. He taketh away the heart &c.] When God takes away the hearts of men, they run strange courses, and go ways which the wise never went; the foot of honesty or of justice treads not their paths. Caryl.

Divine infatuation of the governing powers is here described in forcible language and striking resemblances. Privation of judgment and courage is expressed by God's "taking away their hearts:" in their confusion, mistakes, perplexity, and distress, they resemble persons who have lost themselves in the Arabian solitudes; without a path, without a way-mark, without a light to guide them; and their irresolution and unstable counsels are like the reeling motions of a drunken man. Scott.

25. They grope in the dark without light, &c.] See Is. xix. 14; xxiv. 20; xxix. 9, 10. Rosenmüller.

Chap. XIII. The friends of Job charged him with ignorance of God and His ways: to refute which, he made that excellent confession both of the power and wisdom of God in the foregoing chapter; and concludes his discourse upon those points, at the beginning of this, with an attestation to all from his own knowledge and experience. Caryl.

Ver. 1. Lo, mine eye hath seen all this,] I know, by my own observation and experience, all that I have spoken concerning God's power and wisdom; so that I need not your discourses about them. Clark. These two verses ought not to have been disjoined from the former chapter. They authenticate the facts contained in it. Scott.

3. Surely I would speak to the Almighty, &c.] As if Job had said, I see that I shall avail or profit myself but little by any farther conference with you; therefore, I desire to turn myself to God, from whom I am sure of a good answer. Caryl.

4. But ye are forgers of lies,] My integrity is such, that I dare undertake to clear myself before God; but as for you, ye are authors of false doctrine, namely, that great afflictions are peculiar to hypocrites and wicked men; ye are unskilful and unfaithful, prescribing bad remedies, and misapplying good ones. Clark.

5. —and it should be your wisdom.] To keep the tongue within proper restraint was always reckoned one of the qualities of a wise man. Solomon delivers his opinion in very strong terms, Prov. xvii. 28. The Arabians are remarkable for their proverbs of the same kind. Chappelow.

7. Will ye speak wickedly for God? &c.] Doth God stand in need of untruths to justify His proceedings? cannot He be righteous unless I be wicked? Bp. Patrick.

8. Will ye accept his person?] Will you seek to win the favour of God by assailing me unjustly, as is the practice towards earthly princes? Grotius.

——will ye contend for God?] As if Job had said, If you will engage as patrons of God's cause, and contend for Him, you must do it so as becomes the cause of God; you must not, to gratify God, oppress the poorest man. Caryl.

9—13. Is it good that he should search you out?] The ninth and tenth verses are an appendix to, or an enlargement of, his second argument, which began at the seventh verse. There he expostulates thus: "Will ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for Him? Will ye accept His person?" Will ye make such adventures, will ye run such hazards as these? Here he dissuades them from it; "Is it good that He should search you out?" ver. 9; if He do, you will suffer for your iniquity; for, "He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons," ver. 10. If you give wrong judgment for God, you shall not escape His just judgment. Job's third argument is grounded upon the majesty and greatness of God, ver. 11; "Shall not His excellency make you afraid? &c." His fourth, upon their frailty and weakness, ver. 12; "Your remembrances are like unto ashes:" and will you, who are dust and ashes, speak thus, not only before, but concerning the high and the holy God? From all these premises, he draws the wish of the fifth verse; "O that ye would altogether hold your peace!" into a conclusive charge at the thirteenth verse, "Hold your peace, &c." Caryl.

12. Your remembrances are like unto ashes,] Whatsoever thing of yours seems memorable, or what monument soever ye shall set up to yourselves, it shall vanish away, and be scattered like ashes. Bp. Hall.

——your bodies to bodies of clay.] He threatens them with punishment, for acting so rashly and presumptuously concerning God: or rather he describes their abject state in comparison with the sublimity of the Divine nature. Whatsoever is eminent in you, is like a heap of clay, and shall be reduced to clay. Why then do you flatter yourselves, and thus exalt yourselves above others, and despise me? Poole.

13 Hold your peace, &c.] Job being provoked speaks here with some heat, and is desirous rather to cast himself wholly on God, than to hear his friends any longer. Caryl.

14. Wherefore do I take my flesh in my teeth, &c.] Why is my heart torn with anguish, and wherefore am I involved in the greatest danger? Grotius.

The putting any thing valuable "in one's hand," may signify exposing it to danger, on this account; because it is then ready to be snatched away by one that is stronger: whereas a treasure locked up and kept in a retired place is not so easy to be come at, nor affords the like temptation. Dr. Durell.

14, 15. Wherefore do I take my flesh &c.] You ask me, Why I should consider my case as desperate? Why I should be thus slow to believe that God will deliver me out of my troubles? You say this looks as if I were conscious of some wickedness that rendered me unworthy of such a deliverance. No: it is not the want of a due hope or trust in God, occasioned by any wickedness I am conscious of, that makes me thus despair of my condition; for "though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him: but I will maintain mine own ways (my integrity) before Him." Peters.

We may hence observe, that trust is due to God in all estates, that it is the best ease to the soul, and the best remedy in evils, and that we can never trust God too much. Caryl.

15. Though he slay me, &c.] Though he slay me here, yet I am sure that He will save me hereafter, and be my portion for ever. Caryl.

16. —for an hypocrite shall not come before him.] Rather, but an hypocrite, &c. In this latter clause, Job secretly refutes the censure of his friends, who had aspersed him as an hypocrite. Bildad did so obliquely in chap. viii. 13. Job looking up to God as his "salvation," expresses his confidence that he should come "before" God, that is, into His presence, whither no hypocrite could come. Caryl.

18. Behold now, I have ordered my cause;] As if Job had said, I address myself to my trial, and plead not guilty. Peters. I am so sure of the goodness of my cause, that I know I shall be acquitted. Bp. Patrick.

19. —if I hold my tongue, &c.] I am so full, and my impatience for a trial is so great, that if I have not liberty to give it vent in vindicating myself, I shall expire. Clark.

20—23. Only do not two things unto me: &c.] This holy man seems here to recollect himself; and, as fearing that he might have been too bold in his appeal, addresses himself in these verses to the Judge Himself, and beseeches Him, in the most submissive manner, before He enters into judgment with him, to grant him two things; to withdraw His afflicting hand from him, and to vail the terrours of His majesty, that it might not strike him with too great a dread; and then to question him, and he would answer, or permit him to speak, and vouchsafe to inform him what his guilt was, and what were the reasons of these severe afflictions. Several passages in his speech shew very evidently, that Job looked forward to a day of judgment, in which he hoped to have his innocence cleared. The whole tenour of his argument must therefore be referred to a future, not a temporal deliverance. Peters.

23—25. How many are mine iniquities &c.] Scarcely ever were the feelings of the human heart, oppressed with such a load of grief, expressed in a more natural or less blamable way: in the last part Job confesses his own meanness, or rather nothingness, in comparison of God, and that in a manner so ingenuous and simple, as to shew that his complaints, however passionate and moving, had but a small mixture of pride and stubbornness at the bottom of them. Peters.

10 But man dieth, and † wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?

† Heb. is weakened, or, cut off.

26—28. For thou writest bitter things &c.] The whole relation is carried on in a continued metaphor, alluding to a judiciary proceeding, as if himself were a guilty malefactor, and God the supreme Judge: first, aggravating his faults and pronouncing sentence upon him, ver. 26; secondly, executing the sentence, ver. 27; "Thou puttest my feet in the stocks." In the close of all Job declares the effect which that sentence, pronounced and executed, wrought upon him, ver. 28; "He, as a rotten thing, consumeth, &c."

Job may have here had respect to some actual sins of his youth, without any detriment to his argument drawn from that present uprightness of heart and life, which he now pleads, and had so long practised: for it is not his innocence, strictly speaking, which Job insists on, but his integrity. Peters.

27. — the stocks,] The original word appears to signify a clog, or logger, probably such an one as used to be put on the feet of fugitive slaves, or rather malefactors. Parkhurst.

—— thou settest a print &c.] The shackles and chains which are upon me leave their marks behind them in my flesh; my feet swell with my heavy fetters. Caryl.

Otherwise, "Thou imprintest Thyself, that is, Thy wrath, on the soles of my feet:" Thou treatest me as the vilest slave: for perhaps he alludes to the bastinadoing of the feet, which has long been a common punishment in the East; but whether as ancient as the time of Job, or whether some other impression on the feet be not intended, I will not take upon me absolutely to determine. Michaelis thinks, that Job moreover refers to the tumours and ulcers in his feet, such as are usual in the elephantiasis, the distemper under which he suffered. Parkhurst.

28. And he, as a rotten thing, &c.] The person is here changed from the first to the third, Job being still the subject of the description. A similar comparison to the latter occurs in Ps. xxxix. 11. Caryl. Such changes of person are very common in the sacred poems. The usage also of the third person for the first, this man for I or me, is frequent in the tragedies of Sophocles. Schultens, Scott.

Chap. XIV. In the last verse of the former chapter Job shewed how weak and miserable a creature man is under the afflicting hand of God: he prosecutes the same argument in the first and second verses of this chapter; from all drawing down this expostulatory conclusion, ver. 3, "and dost Thou open Thine eyes upon such an one?" Caryl.

An air of sad solemnity is diffused over this whole chapter. It is a train of gloomy ideas, rising successively in a melancholy mind, and closing with a scene highly tragical, the deplorable condition of man in the grave. Scott.

Ver. 2. — like a flower, — as a shadow,] The first of these similies beautifully represents the tender composition of man's elegant frame, which is easily destroyed by the smallest accident: the other illustrates the emptiness of his enjoyments, and the celerity with which his life is continually hasting to its period. Scott.

3. And dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one,] Dost Thou observe all his ways to find some occasion for punishing him, and deal with me according to rigid justice? Clark.

3, 4. And dost thou open thine eyes &c.] These last words plainly refer to the first, and shew the ground of other expostulations; see chap. xv. 14, and xxv. 4. This seems to be the sense of Job's expostulation; "Why art Thou extreme to mark all my errours? Is it reasonable to expect purity from a man born of a woman, who is, by the very condition of his birth, unclean?" The expostulation has a plain reference to the introduction of vanity and corruption by the sin of the woman; and is an evidence, that this ancient writer was sensible of the evil consequences of the fall upon the whole race of mankind. Bp. Sherlock.

5. — his days are determined,] Or cut short. Job probably thought of the longevity of the antediluvian men, and the present abbreviation of human life. Scott. See the note on chap. vii. 1, from Collyer.

6. — till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his day.] Till, wearied with life, he shall look to death for relief, as the hireling eagerly expects the evening, that he may secure his wages, and rest from his labour. Rosenmüller.

7 — 12. For there is hope of a tree, &c.] The death of man is not like the cutting down of a tree, which soon sprouts again and flourishes in the same place; but rather, like the drying up of a river whose waters disappear, and we see no more of them. So man appears no more upon the stage of this world; "he lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more." Peters.

9. Yet through the scent of water it will bud,] The sensitive faculty of smelling is here elegantly ascribed to the root. As soon as it shall have smelt, that is, felt the influence of, the water, it will bud. Chappelow.

11. — the sea,] So the Orientals style a lake, or any large body of water. Scott.

12. — till the heavens be no more,] We know from writers both sacred and profane, that it was a very old opinion, that the present frame of nature should be one day dissolved, and be succeeded by a renovation of all things, by new heavens and a new earth. Bp. Sherlock.

Our blessed Saviour speaks in the same language, Matt. v. 18, "Till heaven and earth pass," that is, so long as the world endures. Chappelow.

13—17. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, &c.] As if he had said, 'Tired out with the calamities of life, let me then presently undergo my lot, the effect of Adam's sin, and of Thy wrath against it, till the time appointed for us to remain in this separate state be fulfilled; and then remember me, and raise me to that better state, which Thou hast prepared for Thy faithful servants.' And here he breaks off into an expression of joy and admiration, ver. 14, 'If a man die, shall he live, or revive? Is it true, that we shall rise again to a new and better life hereafter? Let me with hope and patience wait this happy change, (my renovation,) how long soever it may be in coming.' He adds, ver. 15, "Thou shalt call, and I will answer Thee; Thou wilt have a desire to the work of Thine hands." He trusted that God would call him forth to judgment; that he should then be admitted to answer for himself before a just and equitable Judge, who knew the uprightness of his heart, and had a love for all His creatures that did not render themselves unworthy of it; and that then he should receive a different sentence from that which his rash ill-judging friends had passed upon him, and be acquitted before them and all the world: though now (as it follows in the next verses) God had seemed to deal so hardly with him, had numbered his steps, and sealed up his transgression in a bag;" that is, had seemed to take account of every the smallest transgression of his life, and, by the severe chastisements inflicted on him, had laid him open to the bitter censures and reproaches of his three friends: for his hopes of being acquitted in the day of judgment could not entirely subdue that grief and indignation which he had conceived at the cruel usage given him by these men, who measured his guilt by his afflictions, and treated him, upon this account, in all their speeches as a wicked man and a hypocrite. Peters.

13. O that thou wouldest hide me — until thy wrath be past,] We may hence remark, that our only refuge from the wrath of God, is God Himself; that it is our duty to refer all the circumstances of our petitions to the wisdom of God; that there is nothing more desirable than to be remembered by God, which to the righteous is the accomplishment of all their desires: and finally it behoves us to consider, that if it be such a blessing to be had in remembrance by God, what wrath and misery must be reserved for those whom God shall be provoked to cast out of His sight! Caryl.

14. If a man die, shall he live again?] This question does not denote any doubt on the part of Job, for see chap. xix. 25, &c.; but is an expression of joyful admiration, like that of Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 27. Parkhurst. See the note from Peters on ver. 13—17.

16. — thou numberest my steps:] Thou seemest to call me to an account for every step of my past life. Bp. Wilson.

17. My transgression is sealed] That is, the scroll or record of it, in a bundle; "and Thou tiest up mine iniquity."

The money that is collected together in the treasuries of Eastern princes is told up in certain equal sums, put into bags, and sealed; and it appears to have been so anciently: see 2 Kings xii. 10. Job seems to allude to this custom. Harmer.

18—22. And surely the mountain falling &c.] All these similitudes appear to aim at the same point, which Job had been pursuing a little before, namely, that a man dying shall return no more to his former state: this he shadows out by mountains, rocks, stones, trees, and the fruits of the earth, which are changed and consumed, as if they had never been. Caryl.

19. — and thou destroyest the hope of man.] Thou takest from me all hope of returning to this world again. Clark.

20. — and he passeth:] That is, he dieth; so the word is used chap. x. 21: death is our passage out of the world. Caryl.

—— thou changest his countenance, &c.] That lively look which he had before, and makest him pale and ghastly. Clark.

—— and sendest him away.] Into another world. Bishop Patrick.

21. His sons come to honour, &c.] And then, whether his children whom he leaves behind be rich, or whether they be poor, it is indifferent to him; for he knows not what passes there. Bp. Patrick.

22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain, &c.] But while he is in the flesh, he cannot but be in pain for them; and his soul is inwardly grieved to see their misery. Bp. Patrick.

Or the twenty-first and twenty-second verses may be interpreted thus: 21. When he is now in the agony of death, striving with his last pangs, he little regards what honour his son has recently acquired, or what shame he hath incurred. 22. But his flesh upon him is in extremity of pain, which takes up all his thoughts and senses; and his soul within him mourns for the present violence of his torment, and for the expectation or fear of the future. Bp. Hall.

Job in this chapter presents us with a lively representation of the frailty of human life, of the miseries to which man is subject in this world, and of the condition to which he is reduced by death. Whilst our experience teaches us that the representation is correct, we ought to praise God that we have in the Gospel, and in the sure and certain hope of the resurrection, strong consolation, and an unfailing remedy against the vanity of this life, and against death itself. Meanwhile our great care should be, to improve the time and other talents with which God hath entrusted us; that so we may be enabled by His mercy in Christ Jesus to support our present sufferings with patience, and be secured in the possession of unmingled and never-fading happiness in the life to come. Ostervald.

Chap. XV. Eliphaz observes, how idly Job talks, and how little proof he exhibits of wisdom, when he is not afraid to defy the Almighty to a contest with him. His own language condemns him as the presumptuous offender, who merited the punishment which had fallen upon him. Why should he be so positive in maintaining his innocence against the concurrent opinions of his friends, who had at least as good opportunities of forming a correct judgment as himself? What folly was it to pretend exemption from blame in the presence of that Being who discovers imperfection in the most exalted of His creatures, but still more in one so tainted with corruption as man! Eliphaz then returns to his first position, that misery implies guilt, which he confirms by the authority of ancient sages, and quotes their description of the progress and period of a wicked man. Bp. Stock.

Ver. 2. — and fill his belly with the east wind?] Eliphaz compares Job's speeches to the wind, and to the east wind: to the wind, because of the vanity of them; to the east wind, because they are so hurtful. Caryl.

Pernicious doctrine is here compared to the Simoom, or wind, which blows occasionally in the deserts of Arabia. Michaelis. In those climates, both in spring and summer, if the east wind blows for some days, all the fields are burnt, so that scarce any green thing remains; most of the rivers and fountains are dried up, and nature itself seems almost to die. Scott.

4. Yea, thou castest off fear,] The sentiment conveyed here is plainly this: If once Job can persuade men, that God does not interpose to execute judgment in this life, but reserves all things to a distant day of visitation, when the heavens shall be no more, there will be an end of all fear of God, an end of all prayer and supplication to him. Bp. Sherlock.

7. Art thou the first man that was born?] Thou speakest of Providence as if thou wert older than the world, and hadst been present in council with the Deity at the creation. Michaelis.

8. Hast thou heard the secret of God?] Hast thou been admitted as a hearer into that great assembly where God's consultations are held? and hast thou drawn wisdom to thyself from thence? Peters.

11. Are the consolations of God small with thee?] Why dost thou slight those Divine consolations which we have given thee? Hast thou some secret ones unknown to others? Bp. Patrick.

12. — and what do thy eyes wink at,] In token of contempt and scorn. Clark. Wherefore do thine eyes look fierce? Excruciating pain, anguish of mind, and indignation at their cruel treatment, had given perhaps an air of wildness and fierceness to his countenance, which this inhuman censor attributes to passion against God. Scott.

14. What is man, &c.] See the note on chap. xiv. 3, 4.

15. — yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.] We have here, and at chap. iv. 18, the fall of angels plainly intimated to us. Peters.

16. How much more abominable and filthy is man,] How loathsome a creature then is man, who is as prone to sin, as he is disposed to drink when he is thirsty. Bp. Patrick.

17—19. I will shew thee, hear me; &c.] The characters here laid down thus distinctly can belong to none so properly as to Noah and his sons; from whom, in reality, the ancient traditions were delivered down. And it is evident from the Scripture history, that the earth was divided amongst these; that they were all of one family, and that "no stranger passed among them." Peters.

20. — The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days,] Eliphaz having argued against Job's supposed opinion of his own righteousness, proceeds to confirm his own position, which he largely handles, and illustrates to ver. 31. Caryl. He describes with great strength the terrours of the wicked, and the troubles of an evil conscience. He tells us, that the wicked are as a woman in travail all the days of their life; that they are in perpetual fear; that they never enjoy any solid peace; and that their prosperity quickly passeth away. This is a truth, which is confirmed by the sense of all men, and the experience of all ages; and ought to inspire us with a great dread of sin. Ostervald.

——the number of years is hidden &c.] His prospect of many years to come may be suddenly shortened: he may be cut off in the height of his career by the stroke of death, when he least expects a change. Chappelow.

21. A dreadful sound is in his ears: &c.] The wicked is here described as threatened by various dangers, though one only calamity may be destined to strike him: his misery is thus multiplied, because his conscience, and Providence, which conceals its intention, threaten him with all. Michaelis.

"A dreadful sound is in his ears, that in peace the destroyer will come upon him." When there are no signs of invasions, insurrections, or plots against him, his disturbed imagination is continually presenting destruction to him. This is strong painting. Scott.

22. He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness,] If he fall into trouble he despairs of deliverance: instead of being delivered from this, a farther evil, even utter destruction, is ready to seize on him. Clark.

23. He wandereth abroad for bread, &c.] This abrupt transition to the punishment of the wicked transgressor, admirably expresses the suddenness of the event, and presents him to our sight in a most deplorable state of calamity. Scott.

26. He runneth upon him, even on his neck,] The wicked man maketh violent and presumptuous opposition to God, as if he could grapple with and overcome the Almighty; and fearlessly runs upon the most conspicuous judgments of God. Bp. Hall.

These images are borrowed from the single combat, which was much practised in the ancient wars. "Stretching out the hand" is the attitude of defiance: "strengthening himself," or behaving himself insolently, may denote the haughty terms of the challenge; and "running, &c." the intrepidity and fury of his attack. These bold metaphors are intended to express the most daring impiety, atrocious violation of the laws of God, with contempt of His vindictive justice. The whole may be thus translated: "For he stretched out his hand against God, and bade defiance to the Almighty. He ran upon Him with his neck," that is, with his neck stooping and stretched out, the very attitude of a combatant running upon his adversary, "upon the thick boss of His buckler." The scripture poets represent the Almighty armed with a shield, a sword, and a bow. Scott.

27. Because he covereth his face with his fatness,] Because he is grown rich, powerful, and successful; and his only care is to pamper and please himself. Clark.

28. And he dwelleth in desolate cities,] He possesseth cities which he hath laid desolate; and houses out of which he hath driven the owners, and which are running to ruin. Bp. Patrick.

The foregoing verse marked the sensuality of this wicked man. The character would have been left unfinished, had nothing been added concerning the oppressions by which that luxury was supported. I think, therefore, that by "dwelling in desolate cities, &c." must be understood his getting possession of them by conquest, and depopulating them, partly by his sword, and partly by severe contributions and taxations. Scott.

29. —neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof upon the earth.] The verse may be thus rendered: "He shall not (continue to) be rich, neither shall his might endure, and their prosperity shall not extend," or "spread abroad in the earth," like a flourishing tree. Parkhurst.

30. He shall not depart &c.] He shall not come out of his calamities. The destruction of the tyrant, with his whole family and fortunes, is here represented by that of a lofty tree, which on some dark tempestuous day is fired by lightning, torn up by the wind, and hurled down the precipice on which it grew. Scott.

31—35. Let not him that is deceived trust in vanity:] Eliphaz laid down his doctrine at the 20th verse of this chapter, that a wicked man's life is full of misery; and having insisted long upon the proof, he now gives the application of it. Caryl.

31. Let not him that is deceived &c.] Let not him that is seduced into evil ways trust to uncertain greatness; for disappointments shall be all that he will gain by it: and he shall meet with these where he least expects them; and shall see his children wither away as well as himself. Bp. Patrick.

32. It shall be accomplished before his time, &c.] Affliction shall come when he least thinks of it, like fruit withered before it be ripe. Bp. Wilson.

——his branch shall not be green.] Shall not continue green. His fate shall be like that of a vine or olive, that is withered by drought, or by a poisonous east wind: see the next verse. Scott.

14 He breaketh me with breach upon breach, he runneth upon me like a giant.

15 I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, and defiled my horn in the dust.

16 My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death;

17 Not for any injustice in mine hands: also my prayer is pure.

14; Isai. lix. 4. All his attempts are rendered abortive; yet he still persists in continuing new schemes of fraud. Grotius.

——their belly prepareth deceit.] Their secret thoughts do but in the end deceive themselves. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XVI, XVII. Job answers that Eliphaz had said nothing new, nothing worthy of notice. Piety and virtue would not be extinguished, if they had no certain rewards in this life; the truly pious, he declares, would still persevere: he maintains his innocence, and calls God to witness that he is not polluted with secret sins. Michaelis.

Chap. XVI. ver. 4. — I could heap up words against you,] I could tack together (old) sayings against you; alluding to the speech of Eliphaz, who in the preceding chapter had urged such sayings against Job. Parkhurst.

—— shake mine head at you.] As a mark of scorn: so Ps. xxii. 7, "All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head." Caryl.

7. — thou hast made desolate all my company.] Thou, Eliphaz, by thy slanders, sanctified by thy years and character, drivest away the few friends my adversity had left me. It is supposed he alludes to chap. xv. 34, "the congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate." Scott.

8. And thou hast filled me with wrinkles, &c.] That is, my friends reproach me with it, as if it were a proof of my being wicked. Peters.

Or thus: the wrinkles that are suddenly grown in my face, bear witness to my extreme suffering. Bp. Hall.

9. He teareth me in his wrath, &c.] This passage is generally referred to God as the agent. Caryl. Or, by a sudden change of the person, expressive of great emotion, he turneth from Eliphaz to the audience; and, instead of continuing his address to him, complaineth bitterly of him. "He," this man, my professed friend, is become my false accuser. Scott. The metaphor is taken from a beast of prey, who rends and tears his prey in pieces; and the same metaphor is carried on through the whole. Heath.

10. They have gaped upon me with their mouth;] My friends, the instruments of God's anger, have treated me with the greatest contempt, and combined to grieve me. Clark.

This was the case with Christ, as it had been with Job. In this, and in many other things, the Jews, who received this book, as written under the influence of the Spirit of God, might have seen that the best of men may suffer wrongfully; and suffer by the malice of men and devils. Such is God's will. Bp. Wilson.

—— they have smitten me upon the cheek reproachfully;] A proverbial form of speech for atrocious defamation. Lam. iii. 30. Scott.

13. — he poureth out my gall upon the ground.] A proverbial expression, which appears to be derived from hence; When a beast is taken and slain, it is usual, on taking out the bowels, to pour the gall on the ground, lest the overflowing of it should give a disagreeable flavour to the adjoining parts: so that Job only pursues here the former theme of his sufferings; that he was (as St. Paul speaks of himself, 2 Cor. i. 8,) "pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired even of life:" which he gives yet more fully in the next verse, "He breaketh me, &c. Caryl.

15. I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, &c.] I have humbly submitted myself to receive and sustain these dispensations. "The horn" is often put for power and dignity. "There shall I make the horn of David to flourish," Ps. cxxxii. 18. Caryl. See note at 1 Sam. ii. 1.

As "exalting the horn" intimates the highest degree of honour and power, so this phrase of "defiling one's horn in the dust," is an expression of the greatest ignominy and abasement that a person can suffer, especially after having been exalted to a high station. Chappelow.

18. O earth, cover not thou my blood, &c.] Commentators are divided in their interpretations of this passage. Some suppose that Job utters here an imprecation on himself, if he has been guilty of any such offences as his friends would, by insinuation, fasten upon him. According to which interpretation the sense may be, If it be not true that there is no injustice in my hands, and that my prayer is pure, let my blood be left for the dogs to lick, when I am dead, and let neither God nor man regard my complaint, while I am alive. Others understand him to pray, that his innocence may be cleared, and that his grief and his cries may be every where made known. The sense will then be, "O earth, cover not my blood," so as to withdraw it from the sight of God; see Gen. iv. 10, 11; xxxvii. 26; 1 Sam. xxvi. 20; Is. xxvi. 21; in other words, O that my afflictions may be displayed before the eyes of God and man! a wish, that the earth may not cover his blood before it has made manifest his innocence, which he asserts in the preceding verse: "and let my cry have no place," where it may be concealed; but let it be carried up to heaven. Bp. Patrick, Rosenmüller.

19. Also now, behold, my witness is in heaven,] As if Job had said, I fear no evidence that can be brought against me on earth, and I rejoice in the witness which I have in heaven: though I have none to testify for me here, yet I have One who will testify for me above: "my witness is in heaven, and my record is on high." We may hence remark, that a good man dares appeal to God, and commit his cause to Him, deriving joy and comfort from the reflection, that there is a God in heaven who knows his heart, and is the witness of all his ways. Caryl.

21. O that one might plead for a man with God,] That I might argue my cause as freely with God, as men of the same rank and degree debate their own cases with each other. All that Job seems to intend by uttering this wish, is the desire he has to gain an opportunity of setting himself right in the opinion of men, by that impartial decision of his cause which, he was well assured, God would give upon the whole matter in question between him and his friends, if once He would be pleased to vouchsafe a free and familiar hearing. Caryl.

22. — whence I shall not return.] A return to this world is all that can be reasonably understood both here and chap. x. 21: and it is remarkable, that in both places the words are introduced by a reflection on the bitter usage given to Job by his friends. Peters.

As for the complaints that Job makes in this chapter, and his protestations of innocence, they are not to be interpreted into a declaration that he was exempt from all sin, or into a pretence of justifying himself before God. But as his friends had accused him of bringing on himself by his sins all the miseries which he endured, he meant only that he was not guilty of those heinous sins, by which wicked and ungodly men expose themselves to the Divine vengeance. Every one, who sincerely fears God, should be able to say as much: and this should make us sensible of the happiness of those who endeavour to live uprightly, and can call God to witness their sincerity in studying to serve Him and keep His commandments. Ostervald.

Chap. XVII. ver. 1. My breath is corrupt,] In the margin, "My spirit is spent." The verse may run, "My breath is confined, straitened, oppressed; my days are extinct; the sepulchral cells are ready for me:" for in the elephantiasis, Job's distemper, death is usually caused by a violent suffocation. Parkhurst.

—— the graves] The cells or holes in the sepulchral chambers for the coffins; see Ezek. xxxii. 22, 23: the walls of these subterraneous rooms, hewn in the rock, were sometimes scooped into rows of cells, like the holes in a pigeon house, wide and deep enough to receive a coffin of seven or eight feet long. Scott.

2—4. Are there not mockers with me? &c.] As in the fourth verse Job addresses his speech to God, so in the two preceding he points at and addresses himself to his mistaken friends. "Are there not mockers with me? lay down now (some pledge,) put me in a surety with thee; who is he that will strike hands with me?" Which of you, who thus mock and insult me, will venture to try your cause before the Supreme Judge? No, they shew a want of understanding in thus rashly censuring me; and were they to bring their cause before Thee, O God, "Thou wouldest not exalt them," that is, they would be cast in their trial. The sense is very obvious and easy: the change of the person addressed, and the several breaks in the sentence, only shew the earnestness of the speaker, and are both natural and elegant. Peters.

2. — doth not mine eye continue in their provocation?] Is not their unjust provocation continually in mine eye; so that I cannot but be a witness of their injury? Bp. Hall.

3. — who is he that will strike hands with me?] In the days of ancient simplicity, "striking hands" was thought a sufficient ratification of the most solemn engagements. Scott.

5. He that speaketh flattery to his friends, &c.] This is to be understood as an apology for the contemptuous mention of his friends just before. I cannot flatter you, says Job: the man that will give up truth for a compliment, deserves to be punished even in his posterity. Bp. Stock.

6. — aforetime I was as a tabret.] I was in good repute, was as welcome as a tabret. Caryl. Or, "He," namely Eliphaz, "has made me a byword of the people, and I shall be," or "that I may be, an example before them." The word, rendered "tabret" in our version, may signify a sign or example to others, according to the Latin Vulgate. Parkhurst.

7. Mine eye also is dim by reason of sorrow,] It is evident even to common observation, that great sorrow and weeping will have nearly the same effect on the eyes as old age. Compare Ps. vi. 7; xxxi. 9. Parkhurst.

8. Upright men shall be astonied at this;] Upright men hereafter will be astonished at the cruel sentence which my friends pass upon me; and the innocent will resolutely oppose the wicked, when he judges the worse of piety because of my affliction. Bp. Patrick.

10. — do ye return, and come now:] Give up your unjust opinion of me, and listen to my words, which declare the truth, and contain wholesome instruction. Rosenmüller.

11. — the thoughts of my heart.] Literally, the possessors of my heart: that is, thoughts or purposes, which had taken entire possession of it. Parkhurst.

12. They change the night into day:] My great afflictions change my night into day; causing me to pass over that time of darkness without any rest, so that my thoughts are no less busy than in the day; and so great is the darkness of my misery, that it eclipseth my day, and makes it either short or none. Bp. Hall.

15. And where is now my hope?] Where is my hope of future prosperity, with which you seek to delude me? Clark.

16. They shall go down to the bars of the pit,] Those hopes you speak of shall go down with me to the bottom of the grave, and shall rest with me together in the dust. Bp. Hall.

You see me dying, and yet you bid me hope for better days; (see chap. v. 19—26; viii. 5—7, 20—22; xi. 15—20;) instead of comforting me with a prospect and hope of a reward hereafter, for mine integrity here. Bp. Wilson.

——the bars of the pit,] Or, the hidden recesses of the grave: the same with "the gates of death," chap. xxxviii. 17; and "gates of the grave," Isai. xxxviii. 10. Chappelow.

Chap. XVIII. Bildad has nothing to add to the argument, that misery is the lot only of the wicked, except an invective against Job for persisting in his opinion, and for expressing it with so much passion and indecency of petulance. He concludes with a laboured description of the inevitable fate of the man who knoweth not God. Bp. Stock.

Ver. 4, 5. — shall the earth be forsaken for thee? &c.] As if Bildad had said, What is this wonderful man, that he expects to see all things destroyed, the earth and the heavens to pass away, that there may be a proper time to do him justice? Is it not more reasonable to think that God will do justice here, than that all the works of nature should be destroyed to make way for judgment? "Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine." Bp. Sherlock.

6. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, &c.] The houses of Egypt, according to Maillet, are never without lights in the night-time. If such was the ancient custom, not only of Egypt, but of the neighbouring countries of Judea and Arabia, it will strongly illustrate this passage, chap. xxi. 17; Ps. xviii. 28; cxxxii. 17; Jer. xxv. 10; and other passages. In chap. xxix. 3, there is probably an allusion to the lamps, which hung from the ceiling in the banqueting rooms of the wealthy Arabs. Parkhurst.

An Arabian poet expresses the permanent prosperity of his family, almost in the very words of Bildad: "Neither is our fire, lighted for the benefit of the night stranger, extinguished." There is an allusion to the Arabian fires of hospitality, or beacons lighted on the tops of hills by Arabians of distinction, to direct and invite travellers to their houses and tables. Scott.

8. — he walketh upon a snare.] Or, "he runneth to and fro in the toils." The metaphor is taken from a beast, which the hunters have driven into the toils. He runs here and there striving to find a way out, till at length it fastens upon him. The word "robber" in the next verse having no relation to the preceding metaphor, it would be rendered more properly, "and the noose fasteneth close upon him." Heath.

11. — shall drive him to his feet.] They shall make him flee or run; force him to have recourse to his feet. Caryl.

This seems to be a metaphor taken from a warriour, who is so sorely pressed in battle, that he has no hope of saving himself, but by betaking himself to his feet and running away. Heath.

12. His strength shall be hungerbitten,] Shall decay for want of food. Clark.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

3 These ten times have ye reproached me: ye are not ashamed that ye ‖ make yourselves strange to me.

4 And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth with myself.

5 If indeed ye will magnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach:

6 Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with his net.

7 Behold, I cry out of ‖ wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

8 He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths.

9 He hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head.

‖ Or, harden yourselves against me.

---

13. — even the firstborn of death shall devour his strength.] The most cruel and painful death shall make an end of all his power and glory. Bp. Hall.

The sentence of death, pronounced on all mankind, gave birth to diseases; which therefore by a sublime allegory are styled the offspring of death: and the most horrible disease, that which hath the pre-eminence in cruelty, is called his "firstborn," his might and the beginning of his strength. Scott.

14. His confidence &c.] That is, his hopes, his fortune, his family. Heath.

— — it shall bring him to the king of terrors.] His broken confidence shall bring him to death: the ruin of all his hopes shall hasten his death. Caryl.

15. It shall dwell in his tabernacle,] Yea, this terrour shall dwell and continue in his tabernacle, which, though he possesses it, his conscience tells him is not his own, since he has gained it by extortion and violence; and God shall rain down brimstone upon it, as He did upon Sodom. Bp. Hall.

The Hebrew poets and Prophets used the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah as an image of all other desolating judgments of God. Bp Lowth.

16. His roots shall be dried up beneath,] He shall be like a withered tree, whose roots being once dried up below, the branches are presently cut down for fire-wood. Bp. Hall.

17. — he shall have no name in the street.] Perhaps an allusion is here made to the custom of placing monumental inscriptions near the road. Dr. Durell.

The word rendered "street," means "an out-place;" "a field:" and it is so translated in the text and margin of chap. v. 10. It seems to allude to the want of a sepulchral monument; for the Eastern nations still bury their dead without their cities, in the fields. Parkhurst.

20. — at his day,] The word "day," without any addition, is frequently used in Scripture to signify an eminently evil day, as in Ps. cxxxvii 7, "Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem." The meaning of the whole verse is this; As they who lived at the time when God brought those evils upon him were affrighted, so they who come after shall be astonished at him; the former were terrified by the sight of the judgments, the latter shall be astonished at the report of them. Caryl.

An allusion is here made to the eighth verse of the former chapter: men will be astonished, not, as Job observed, at the fate of the innocent, but at the severe judgment that befalls the wicked. Michaelis.

21. Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked,] Though all these observations concerning affliction are true of the wicked, yet they must not be applied to all that are visited with affliction: for affliction is sometimes the portion of God's children, as it was in this case of Job. Bp. Wilson.

Chap. XIX. Wearied with incessant reproaches and accusations, Job, in his reply to Bildad, laments the estrangement of his friends and family in the most pathetick terms; and attributes it to the Divine wrath; and despairing of redress, or the vindication of his innocence in this life, he makes a solemn appeal to his Redeemer; and professes his belief, that he shall be acquitted at his resurrection, in the general judgment: and bids his friends beware, lest God should afflict them with those common visitations here of the sword, &c. which were designed to shew God's judgment on sinners. Dr. Hales.

Ver. 3. — ye make yourselves strange to me.] You act as strangers, not as friends. You reproach me, as if my manner of life had been unknown to you. Bp. Wilson.

4. And be it indeed that I have erred, &c.] If I have erred, I am the sufferer, not you. Rosenmüller.

4—6. And be it indeed &c.] Let it be granted that I am in an errour; if ye upon that ground "magnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach," then "know that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with His net:" this answer may put you to silence. As if he had said, The hand of God is upon me; why do you lift up your heads against me? doth it become you to magnify yourselves, because God hath brought me low? Caryl.

7. — there is no judgment. There is no one to judge between me and my brethren in this case. Caryl.

9. — the crown] This may mean the richer kind of turban, which is worn by persons of distinction among the Arabs at this day. It appears to have been the same with the tiara or diadem. Or the expression may be metaphorical; and the "glory" and "the crown" may denote his dignity, and the honours paid to his authority, justice, and beneficence. Scott.

10. He hath destroyed me on every side,] He hath brought me to such utter ruin, that, like a tree plucked up by the roots, I have not so much as hope remaining, which is the only comfort of the wretched. Bp. Patrick.

12. His troops come together,] Whole armies of evils, by His order, have at the same time invaded me, and laid so close a siege to me, that not the smallest comfort that I had could escape their fury. Bp. Patrick. These metaphors are borrowed from the works cast up by a besieging army, for the annoyance of a city with their arrows and engines of war, Isai. xxxvii. 33. Scott.

15. They that dwell in mine house,] The clients of my house. The word is that by which the Arabs denote such as put themselves under a great man's protection, are adopted into his family, and become dependent on him for maintenance and security. Schultens, Scott.

17. My breath is strange to my wife,] She will not listen to my words. Caryl.

20. My bone cleaveth to my skin &c.] I am become a very skeleton. Bp. Wilson.

The latter part of the verse may be rendered, "And I have shed (the hair,) or have become bald on the skin of, or which covers, my teeth;" that is, My mustaches are, or the hair is, shed or fallen off from my emaciated lip; which was one symptom of the elephantiasis, Job's distemper. Michaelis, Parkhurst.

22. Why do ye persecute me as God,] Why should you persecute me as God, or claim to yourselves the prerogative, like Him, to know the very secrets of my heart? Are the miseries you see me suffer in my flesh too little to satisfy you, that you are resolved to pierce my very soul with your unjust reproaches? Peters.

—— and are not satisfied with my flesh?] That is, why are ye not satisfied with the reproaches and slanders with which ye have already worried me? To "eat the flesh" of another is an Arabian phrase for calumniating him. Schultens, Scott.

23. Oh that my words were now written! &c.] It has been supposed, that Job alludes in this passage to letters hollowed in the rock with the iron pen or chisel, and filled up with melted lead, in order to be more legible. The Septuagint, however, seem to have supposed, that he meant the recording of things by engraving accounts of them on sheets of lead. "Who will cause my words to be written, to be put in a book that shall last for ever; with an iron pen and lead," (that is, upon lead,) "or to be engraven on the rocks?" Which cutting of letters on lead marks out an ancient method indeed of perpetuating the memory of things. Harmer.

23, 24. O that my words &c.] "Oh that my words were engraved in a memorial with an iron pen and lead;" the lead being to grave upon with the iron pen or style. Pliny informs us, that writing on lead, rolls of lead, was of high antiquity, and came in practice next after writing on the barks and leaves of trees, and was used in recording publick transactions. And "the cutting or sculpturing in the rock for ever," seems to be here mentioned as a different and more durable method than even the engraving on lead. Scott, Parkhurst. It is easy to imagine, that the first inscriptions on stones were engraved on some places of the rocks which were accidentally smoothed and made pretty even. And in fact we find some, that are very ancient, engraved on the natural rock, and, what is remarkable, in Arabia, where it is supposed that Job lived. The Prefetto of Egypt describes some such inscriptions, cut in the hard marble rock, in none of the characters now in use in the East, nor in any of those in which ancient inscriptions before known are found written in those countries. By the expression rendered "printed" in our translation, Job meant to convey the idea of perpetuating his words, as is apparent from the twenty-fourth verse. Harmer.

—— oh that they were printed in a book!] Oh that they were noted in a register! He wishes that his memorable words might be transmitted to posterity; first, by writing, the usual method of preserving past transactions; secondly, by the still safer method of lodging this writing in the publick archives; thirdly, by inscribing them on lead, as more durable than linen or paper; and lastly, by engraving them in the natural rock, as the most durable of all. Scott.

25. For I know that my redeemer liveth,] However I am judged by you, yet this is my comfort, that I know I have a Judge and a gracious Redeemer to come, who lives eternally when ye shall be gone to dust, and shall one day come down to judge the quick and the dead; and shall in that last day of our general account present Himself here upon earth to the eyes of all flesh. Bp. Hall.

26, 27. And though after my skin &c.] And though after my skin, which you see so miserably affected, this whole frame shall be dissolved and turned to dust; yet I believe that I shall live again hereafter, as truly and as certainly as I do now, and shall appear personally before my Judge, whom I shall see for myself, or in my own cause, prepared to do me justice; and, conscious of my innocence, shall look up to Him with joy and hope; whilst others, my accusers, unable to behold Him, shall look down with shame and confusion. Peters.

in his temporal condition, is evident from the remarkable preface which ushers in this expression, "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!" He desires that his words may continue as long as his expectation; that they may remain in the rock, together with his hope, so long as the rock shall endure, even to the day of his resurrection. The same appears from the objections of his friends, who urged against him that he was a sinner, and concluded from thence that he should never rise again; for his sins he pleaded a Redeemer, and for his resurrection he shewed an assurance through the same Redeemer. It is further confirmed by the expressions themselves, which are by no means proper for his temporal restitution: the first words, "I know," denote a certainty; whereas the blessings of this life are under no certainty, nor did Job pretend to it: I know certainly and infallibly, whatsoever shall become of my body at this time, which I know not; but this I know, that I shall rise: the title which he gives to Him on whom he depends, "the Redeemer," shews that he understands it of Christ; the time expressed denotes futurity, "at the latter day." The description of that Redeemer "standing on the earth" represents the Judge of the quick and the dead; and seeing God with his eyes declares his belief in the Incarnation. Bp. Pearson.

In this noble declaration of faith in a future resurrection, Job evidently had no more notion of a miraculous recovery, than Martha of the immediate resurrection of her brother Lazarus, when she professed her faith in the language of Job, "I know that he shall rise again at the last day," John xi. 24. Dr. Hales.

Job, being tired with the opposition of his friends, and the perverse construction they put upon his misfortunes, as if he must needs be wicked as he was miserable, appeals from them to another judgment, ver. 23—25. He insists strongly on his plea; though men would not receive it, yet he wishes it were "graven in the rock for ever;" that it might remain till the time when God would come to judge his cause; for "I know," he adds, "that my Redeemer liveth." Though I myself shall soon be gone, yet my Redeemer lives, and will at the last day call me from the grave; and with my own eyes shall I see God my Saviour. Bp. Sherlock.

Children of God ought to encourage themselves with the same hope in the midst of affliction, and in death itself; and these words of Job's ought to raise their minds to a firm expectation of the resurrection, and of the life to come through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Ostervald.

27. — my reins be consumed within me.] I feel my very vitals fail me, and am hastening on apace towards that death, which shall consign me to a future judgment. Peters.

28. But ye should say, &c.] But ye should rather say, Alas! why do we persecute this distressed man any more, since we find, if we look to the very root and bottom of this our dispute, that he is upright, and innocent of those things whereof we have accused him. Bp. Hall.

29. Be ye afraid of the sword:] Job bids his friends beware, that they were not convinced to their cost of the certainty of a righteous judgment hereafter, by the experience of some one or other of those common plagues, which God was often seen to distribute in this life. He mentions the sword particularly, which destroys promiscuously the good and bad; and is sent or suffered by God with this intent, that men may from thence infer that there is a judgment. The expression in the Hebrew is remarkable, "For wrath (that is, the wrath of God) bringeth the punishments of the sword, that ye may know there is a judgement:" intimating, that the violence and iniquity, which always accompany the ravages of the sword; the many unjust and cruel things which are done and suffered amidst the rage of war; and, in short, every dispensation of Providence which levels the good and bad in this life, are a demonstration of a righteous judgment to be expected hereafter. Peters.

——the sword:] The sword in the hand of earthly magistrates is the emblem of punitive justice. The Scripture accordingly puts a sword into the hand of God, the supreme Magistrate, to signify His retributive justice. And the greatest of all Teachers represents the future punishments of wicked men in terms of allusion to the punishments inflicted by the courts of human judicature, Matt. v. 22. Scott.

Chap. XX. Zophar retorts upon Job for the threat at the close of his last speech, by declaiming like the rest on the transient prosperity and fearful end of great wicked men, insinuating covertly, that Job had all along deserved to be reckoned in this class, although Heaven had not till now been pleased to reveal his guilt. Bp. Stock.

The flaw in Zophar's discourse is this, (which was common to him with all the rest,) that he imagined God never varied from this method, and that therefore Job was, without doubt, a bad man, though it did not appear that he was so, any other way but by his misfortunes. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 2. Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, &c.] Because of thy contumelious words and threatenings, (which I have fully weighed,) I have bethought myself what to answer. Clark.

3. I have heard the check of my reproach, &c.] What Zophar calls "the check of his reproach," was probably Job's stiffness, and persistance in his opinion, still dissenting from his friends, and refusing to be brought over to their judgments. Caryl.

4—7. Knowest thou not this of old, &c.] It seems thou dost not yet understand, though it is a truth as old as the world, that the happiness, boasted of by the wicked, and by him who counterfeits piety, is of no long standing, and will continue but for a few moments. Though he should be advanced to the highest pitch of human greatness, he shall at last be cast out with contempt. Bp. Patrick.

10. His children shall seek to please the poor,] This is much stronger than if he had said, "they shall become poor." It is placing them below poverty itself. They shall court the goodwill and assistance of the most destitute and abject. Scott, Parkhurst. God many times suffers an estate got by oppression to prosper for a little while: but there is a curse attends it, which descends upon the estate like an encumbrance; and parents, when they think they entail an estate, often entail poverty upon their children. Abp. Tillotson.

12. — though he hide it under his tongue;] As a glutton that gets a sweet morsel between his teeth is loth to lose the taste of it, and therefore does not hastily swallow it down; thus does the carnal man deal with his sin: he keepeth it close, and hideth it under his tongue. Caryl.

14. Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, &c.] As meat mixed with poison, his sin will at last be his ruin. Bp. Wilson.

—— the gall of asps] Ælian says, that the poison of asps is extremely subtile, and extends its effects very rapidly over the whole body. Hence the proverb, "bite of an asp," to express an incurable wound. With this verse is connected ver. 16, where "the viper" answers to several Eastern names, which are very near to the original Hebrew word, and which signify a serpent remarkable for a quick and penetrating poison. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

15. He hath swallowed down riches,] The original word is very forcible: it denotes vast avidity and rapacity; being a metaphor from a ravenous beast devouring his prey. Compare Jer. li. 34. Scott.

—— he shall vomit them up again:] He shall be forced to restore with sorrow his ill-gotten riches. God, by His providence, shall take them away, with plagues that will attend the loss of them. Bp. Wilson.

16. He shall suck the poison of asps:] His ill-gotten riches shall prove as great and as deadly a torture, as if, when he squeezed the poor, he had sucked the poison of asps, or been bitten by the viper. Bp. Patrick.

17. He shall not see the rivers, &c.] He shall not see the plenty and happiness which he proposed to himself. He shall have no satisfaction in what he gets by his industry. Such is the certain fruit of injustice and oppression. Bp. Wilson.

—— the brooks of honey and butter.] We in these cooler countries have no great notion of butter being described as so extremely liquid: it appears among us in a more solid state. But as the plentiful flowing of honey, when pressed from the comb into jars, in which it is wont to be kept, may be compared in strong language to a little river; so, according to the Eastern management, butter is equally fluid, and may be described in the same way, when poured from the skin, in which it is made, into jars for the purpose of being preserved. Harmer.

The Eastern butter is a kind of thick cream, not solid, like our lumps of butter. This butter and honey compose the same mess of food, and are eaten mixed together. D'Arvieux says of the Arabs, "One of their chief breakfasts is cream, or fresh butter, mixed in a mess of honey: these do not seem to suit very well together, but experience teaches that this is no bad mixture, nor disagreeable in its taste, if one is a little accustomed to it." Thevenot also says, "the Arabs knead their bread-paste afresh, adding thereto butter, and sometimes also honey." See the same mixture noticed in Isai. vii. 15, 22. Fragments to Calmet.

20. — he shall not feel quietness in his belly,] "Neither is his belly satisfied," as the Latin Vulgate translates it. His vice is described: it is an insatiable appetite of rapine. Scott.

22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits:] The greater his supply of worldly goods, the more he shall be distressed. Bp. Patrick.

24. He shall flee from the iron weapon, &c.] When he desires and hopes to avoid a less danger, he shall fall into a greater. Bp. Hall.

"He would flee from the weapons, but the brasen bow shall strike him through." The word rendered "weapons," signifies arms, or weapons of every sort, as the bow, shield, arrows, &c. Ezek. xxxix. 9; and is here put for the armed host, that is, of evils. God is at war with him. The Scripture arms the Divine Being with a sword, a bow, and arrows, to represent His vengeance, Ps. vii. 12, 13. Compare chap. vi. 4; xv. 24; see also the note on chap. xviii. 14. All his efforts to ward off the calamities which fall upon him will be ineffectual. The Arabian writers are very fond of the idea of a bow, and frequently use it to represent extraordinary, inevitable, and destructive calamities, from the hand of God. Scott.

28. — in the day of his wrath.] That is, of God's wrath upon him: perhaps, more properly, though lessstrictly, "in the day of his sufferings;" that is, of the criminal's punishment. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

29. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, &c.] The posterity of the wicked do many times inherit the fruit of their fathers' sins and vices; and that, not only by a just judgment of God, but from the natural course and consequence of things. And in this sense that expression of Job in the following chapter is often verified, that "God layeth up the iniquity of wicked men for their children," chap. xxi. 19. And experience testifies, that the intemperate and unjust do many times transmit their bodily infirmities and diseases to their children, and entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume them, or eat out the heart and comfort of them. Abp. Tillotson. We have here a most admirable account of great wicked men: the only fault in Zophar was, in misapplying it to Job; as if God could not in justice afflict any but wicked men. Bp. Wilson.

Chap. XXI. This chapter contains Job's reply to Zophar; in which he enters at large into the momentous question of God's dealings with mankind, in order to shew the falsehood of Zophar's argument of the shortlived triumph of the wicked.

He begins his speech with a gentle complaint of their severe treatment of him, and calls their attention to his reasoning upon this delicate subject, which he reflected on with awe and reverence, "Wherefore do the wicked live, &c." ver. 2—7. He then shews, that the wicked sometimes live long, and prosper, and die in peace; and yet that all this only hardened them in their wickedness, and led them to cast off all regard to God and religion, ver. 14, 15.

But in touching on this tender ground, the prosperity of the wicked, which his adversaries might misinterpret, as if he were pleading the cause of impiety, he adds an apology for himself, that he was not of the "counsel of the wicked," neither of their opinion nor society; for that he did not consider their prosperity to be owing to themselves, or in their own "hand" or power: that oftentimes God made them terrible examples of His justice, and their children after them: thus admitting his adversaries' arguments, as far as they were just, ver. 16—21.

Still however he contends, in opposition to them, that, in the general course of God's providence, as it appears in fact, however mysterious His ways, good and evil are not seldom dispersed here promiscuously, without any strict regard to merit or demerit, during the whole period of human life, ver. 22—26.

Job next touches on their uncharitable perversion of his calamities into judgments; and as he had before stated his own hope of a resurrection, and a gracious sentence from his Redeemer, so now he closes and completes his masterly argument with a declaration, that the wicked who prosper in this life, and leave their proud monuments behind them, shall receive a dreadful recompense in the future day of judgment, ver. 27. Peters, Dr. Hales.

Ver. 2. Hear diligently my speech,] Let me prevail with you to attend to my discourse: do me this kindness, and it shall serve instead of those consolations which I promised myself from you. Bp. Patrick.

4. As for me, is my complaint to man?] If I had only to do with man in this my misery, and had no other to make my complaint to, I should have just reason to be utterly dejected; but now, I have a God to make my moan unto. Bp. Hall.

5—13. Mark me, and be astonished, &c.] As Job well knew, that this account of the prosperity of the wicked, however necessary to his argument, would have something shocking in it to the ears of those to whom it was addressed, the delicacy with which he introduces it is inimitable. Ver. 5—7, as if he had said, That thus it is in fact, is plain. It is with awe and reverence I speak it. But as for you, I am persuaded, that you will never be able upon your principles to account for it. Peters.

7—13. Wherefore do the wicked &c.] We have here a lively description of worldly felicity, drawn from the manners of Arabia, and adapted to the mode of wealth and sensual gratification in ancient times. Scott.

12. — the organ.] The instrument here spoken of seems to have resembled the modern organ, so far as it consisted of a number of pipes set close, or joined together. We can hardly imagine it was very like the modern organ; it appears rather, from Ezek. xxxiii. 32, to have been, as Calmet observes, "a kind of flute composed of several pipes of unequal length and thickness joined together, which gave an harmonious sound, when they were blown into by moving them successively under the lower lip." It was probably not unlike the pastoral instrument, which the Roman poets ascribe to Pan. Parkhurst.

18. They are as stubble before the wind,] In order to perceive the beauty and propriety of these images, we should recollect the practice in the East of threshing their corn in the open field, so that, if the wind happen to rise, the shattered straw and chaff are easily carried away. Scott.

24. His breasts are full of milk,] Rather, "his pastures are full of milk;" that is, of flocks and herds; he dies in opulence. Scott. Or, "his bowels" or intestines "are full of," or abound with, "fat." Parkhurst.

27. Behold, I know your thoughts,] I know what you would insinuate by the speeches which you make, such as this which follows, ver. 28, "For ye say, &c." As if you should say, what is become of the house of Job, who lived like a prince? or what, in general, is the portion of the wicked? Does not a great and sure destruction overtake them? This is evidently the meaning of the question. The answer follows immediately, ver. 29, 30. Now if they were meant of a temporal destruction, it directly confirms the insinuation of the friends; and the inference would be unavoidable; therefore Job must needs be wicked.

But the true key to it appears to be this: It was the custom of the ancients to bury near the high roads, or in the most publick and conspicuous places; and to erect a pillar or monument over the dead, to preserve his memory. These pillars, if they had any inscription at all on them, recorded, no doubt, the name and titles of the person, and perhaps some of the happiest circumstances of his life, or what was most remarkable in his death. These inscriptions, moreover, usually bespoke attention by "Stop, Traveller;" or words to that purpose. These then probably are the marks or tokens, to which Job directs his friends; and which he advises them either to consult themselves, or to ask the travellers about them: and from thence they would be naturally led to make the inference or conclusion which follows in the next verse. For as they might observe several monuments among the rest, erected for such as had been notoriously wicked in their lives, and yet had run out a long course of years in prosperity, and had been buried at last with great pomp; it is with reason he bids them infer from hence, that the punishment of such as these was reserved for a more solemn season, which was the proper time of retribution, and not the mixed uncertain state of this life, ver. 27—30. Peters.

30. — the day of destruction — the day of wrath.] By the "day of destruction" and the "day of wrath," it will appear from the context, that no other can be meant than the future day of judgment; which to the wicked and ungodly is every where represented in Scripture as a day of wrath, a day of destruction. "They shall be punished (says St. Paul) with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power," 2 Thess. i. 9. And so St. Peter (2 Pet. iii. 7.) calls the day of judgment, "the day of perdition of ungodly men." And it is remarkable, that where Job declares to his friends, that he had been all along withheld from sinning by a pious awe of the Divine justice, (meaning, probably, the thought of a future judgment,) he uses a similar expression, chap. xxxi. 23, "Destruction from God was a terrour to me." The Hebrew word, as well as that in our translation, is the same that is used here.

To understand it of a temporal destruction, is to suppose Job to cut the neck of his own argument at once, and to fall in with the meaning of his friends. Peters.

‖ Or, What.

He suffers nothing but what all men shall suffer after him, as innumerable have suffered before him. See then how ill you discharge the office of comforters, whose answers have so little truth in them!

For you maintain, that prosperity is the inseparable companion of piety: when every one can tell you, that none flourish more than the wicked, and that calamities are common to all mankind. Bp. Patrick.

The liveliness of Eastern poetry here represents the dead as having the same perceptions as if they were alive in their sepulchres: "He shall watch in the heap" of earth or stones that cover him; for such, the margin of our translation tells us, is the more exact import of the Hebrew: "the clods" around him, like those in some pleasant valley, or on the border of some torrent, "shall be sweet unto him;" alluding probably to the manner of ornamenting their sepulchres, by planting on or about them flowers and odoriferous herbs or shrubs. Harmer.

Chap. XXII. Job having constantly affirmed, in opposition to his friends, that God equally afflicts the righteous and the wicked; and having intimated, chap. xxi. 4, that his complaint was not to man but to God, Eliphaz asks him, whether God hath any interest in refusing to bring him to that trial which he is so ready to call for. If, Eliphaz adds, God declines Job's challenge, it can be for no other reason, but that He is already fully aware of Job's misconduct, and needs not to investigate the matter. This seems to be the intent of the whole chapter, which may be divided into two distinct parts: the first is reprehensory; for Eliphaz reproves Job severely to the end of ver. 20: the second is hortatory, Eliphaz earnestly moving Job to repentance by many promises, and by assurances that his repentance will not be in vain, from ver. 20. to the end of the chapter. Bp. Stock, Caryl.

Ver. 3. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous?] If thou art as upright as thou pretendest to be, still God is not indebted to thee for thy righteousness. Clark.

These words teach us that man, by doing good, cannot be profitable to God; that there is no accession of happiness to the Almighty, when we are righteous and walk in integrity; but that the advantage is all to ourselves. If God gives us laws, and commands us to observe them, He only does it for our good; and if we offend and disobey Him, we only hurt ourselves. Ostervald.

4. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee?] Will it turn to God's profit, if thou livest never so unblamably? ver. 3. Or, on the contrary, ver. 4, Is He afraid that thou shouldest hurt Him by thy sins, and will He therefore punish thee? Is this the reason that He now afflicts thee, to prevent the damage they might do Him? Bp. Patrick.

6. For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, &c.] Amongst Job's many and grievous afflictions, as it is hard to say which was the greatest, so we are sure this was not the least, that he was to wrestle with the unjust and bitter upbraidings of unreasonable and incompassionate men. They came to visit him as friends, and as friends they should have comforted him. But sorry friends they were, and "miserable comforters," chap. xvi. 2; indeed not comforters, but tormentors; and accusers, rather than friends. Seeing God's hand heavy upon him, for want of better or other proof, they charge him with hypocrisy. And because they would not seem to deal all in generalities, for against this general accusation of hypocrisy it was sufficient for him as generally to plead the truth and uprightness of his heart, they therefore go on more particularly, but as falsely, and as it were by way of instance, to charge him with oppression. Thus Eliphaz by name taxes him in this chapter. Against these foul aspersions, the good man defends himself something largely in the twenty-ninth chapter, in which he declares how he demeaned himself in the time of his prosperity in the administration of his magistracy, far otherwise than was laid to his charge. Bp. Sanderson.

—— stripped the naked of their clothing.] The Arabs call their upper garment a hyke; which is a blanket, or gown, five or six yards long, and five or six yards broad. This is wrapped over the tunick, or close bodied frock, which is the inner garment, and girded about their waist in time of work or action. Persons, who have no hyke or upper garment, but only their tunick and shirt, may be said to be "naked," according to the mode of speaking in the East. Dr. Shaw, Scott. The sense is, Thou hast stripped of their garments even those, who had no more but just enough to cover their nakedness. Bp. Patrick.

7. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink,] Thou hast been hard-hearted to the weary traveller, when thou sawest him ready to die with thirst or hunger. Bp. Patrick.

Entertainment of travellers, and charity to the poor, were looked upon by the Arabs, and by the ancient Greeks, as duties of the most sacred obligation. The Odyssey of Homer has some noble sentiments on this subject; and the poems of the Arabs abound with them. The vilest of all characters among them was the inhospitable and avaricious man. Scott.

17. Because I was not cut off before the darkness,] I am astonished at the hand of the Almighty, for I am still upheld by His power in these extremities, and not cut off by death before this darkness of sorrow and misery overwhelmed me; neither yet hath he restrained these intolerable evils from seizing upon me, but hath caused me to feel them, and not to be swallowed up by them. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXIV. ver. 1. Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty,] But to answer a little what you have so often asserted: If punishments from the Almighty be so apparent and visible upon the wicked, why do not they, who are truly pious, see the publick and open judgments? In what follows, Job confutes the rash assertions of his friends about the plagues, which always befall the wicked, by an induction of particulars that prove the contrary. Bp. Patrick.

2. Some remove the landmarks;] As in these countries the pastures and corn fields were not enclosed, they had no other way of distinguishing the limits of each other's grounds but by boundary stones. He here describes that sort of injustice which the Prophet complains of, Mic. ii. 2. Scott.

3. — the ass of the fatherless, — the widow's ox] This is another species of wrong. They deprive the fatherless and widow of their only means of supporting themselves: for they could not prepare their little farm for sowing without an ox, or beeve, to till it; or bring in their corn, if they had any, without an ass to carry the burden. Scott.

5. — as wild asses in the desert, &c.] Robbers are here well compared to wild asses, as they lie hid in solitary places. Grotius.

Bochart observes, that a robber can be compared to a wild ass in no other respect, than as he lives in the desert; for a wild ass is not a rapacious animal. Dr. Durell.

6. They reap every one his corn in the field: &c.] The following is a more intelligible reading of this verse, "they reap corn in the field which is not their own: and the wicked gather the vintage of others." Rosenmuller.

"Corn," in the Hebrew, "mingled corn, or dredge," says the margin. Job apparently alludes to the provender, heap of chopped straw and corn lying mingled together in the field, after having passed under the threshing instrument. Harmer.

7. — they have no covering in the cold.] Irwin found the cold of the desert which he passed through very severe at times: and very cold rains and snow descend in some of the hilly parts of these southeastern countries. Harmer.

—— in the cold.] In Arabia Petrea, Job's country, the day is intensely hot, and the night intensely cold. Dr. Shaw. See the note on Gen. xxxi. 40.

8. — embrace the rock for want of a shelter.] They, that is, "the naked," in the preceding verse, are fain to seek shelter of the rock, to keep them from the violence of the weather. Bp. Hall.

This exactly agrees with what Niebuhr says of the modern wandering Arabs near mount Sinai: "Those who cannot afford a tent, spread out a cloth upon four or six stakes; and others spread a cloth near a tree, or endeavour to shelter themselves from the heat and the rain in the cavities of the rock." Parkhurst.

9. They pluck the fatherless from the breast,] Nay, the persons of men are not safe from the violence of these outlaws: but they snatch away young children from their mothers' breasts, and carry away the poor, pretending they owe them something, to make them their slaves. Bp. Patrick.

—— and take a pledge of the poor.] "And take that which is upon the poor for a pledge:" that is, his upper garment, or hyke, for security of a debt. See the note on chap. xxii. 6. Scott.

10. — take away the sheaf from the hungry;] They will not suffer him who is ready to starve to eat of the sheaf which he hath gleaned. Bp. Patrick.

11. Which make oil &c.] They cause these miserable creatures to press out their oil and their wine in their cellars, but let them not taste a drop, though they be ready to die with thirst. Bp. Patrick.

Which make oil within their walls, and tread their winepresses, and suffer thirst.] Rather, "they work at midday among their walls, they tread winepresses, and suffer thirst." For it is difficult to say what greater hardships attended making oil within walls than in the open air, nor does any contrast appear between their labour as to this and what followed; but a contrast does appear between treading winepresses, and suffering thirst, in the latter part of the verse, as in Micah vi. 15, and this thirst may be expected to be most oppressive at midday. Harmer.

"Between, or within their walls they make or press out oil;" or rather, "between their walls," with which the vineyards were enclosed, Prov. xxiv. 31, "they labour at noonday," or bear the noonday heat, Matt. xx. 12, which it is well known, in those hot Eastern countries, is in the summer time almost insupportable, particularly near walls. Parkhurst.

In the East they still "tread" their grapes after the ancient manner. Dr. Chandler says, "August 20th; the vintage near Smyrna was now begun: the juice of the grapes was expressed for wine; a man with feet and legs bare treading the fruit in a kind of cistern, with a hole or vent near the bottom, and a vessel beneath to receive the liquor." Parkhurst.

13. They are of those that rebel against the light;] They sin shamelessly in the face of the sun, against the light of nature, conscience, and Divine revelation: they neither delight nor will walk in those ways to which by this light they are directed. Clark.

"They know not the ways thereof;" either, they do not desire or care to know them, they are willingly ignorant of them; or, they do not approve, nor love, nor choose to walk in them, as "knowing" frequently signifies in the language of Scripture. "Nor abide in the paths thereof:" that is, if they do some good actions, yet they do not persevere in well-doing; they are not constant and fixed in a good course of life. Poole.

16. — they dig through houses,] The materials used for building in Job's country seem to have been mud and slime, which are frequently employed in the East for this purpose: these walls of sunburnt brick, when moistened with copious showers, must have been liable to attacks of this kind; at the same time that the thickness of them makes the term digging peculiarly expressive. Harmer.

18. He is swift as the waters; &c.] Thus doeth the evil man: but shall he prosper in his mischief? No: God shall be avenged of him; he shall pass away swiftly, even as a current of waters: and while he continues here, he enjoys what he has with a curse: his lot shall be barrenness, so that he shall not so much as look towards the way of the vineyards; he shall have no hope of receiving the benefit of his seasonable culture of the earth. Bp. Hall.

20. The womb shall forget him;] His mother shall be ashamed to own her relation to him: he shall not be remembered with honour, but consigned to infamy: the wicked oppressor shall be utterly and irrecoverably destroyed, as a tree broken to pieces, which will never grow again. Clark, Poole.

23. Though it be given him to be in safety, &c.] Though the wicked man seems to pass his time in much security and confidence, yet the eyes of God are so open upon his ways, that He observes him to take His advantages against him, and to inflict on him suitable judgments. Bp. Hall.

25. And if it be not so now, &c.] If this be not a truth which I have maintained, namely, that God many times prospers the wicked and afflicts the righteous, let any one confute me if he can, and shew that my arguments are weak. Clark.

Job, having first described the impiety, the injustice, the cruelty, and other sins of the wicked, and having then desired his friends to take notice that God does not always display His vengeance upon them, but suffers them to succeed in their evil designs, finally observes, that God nevertheless sees them, and that His righteous judgments overtake them. This doctrine highly deserves our serious meditation: that, when we see so much wickedness and impiety prevailing in the world, even among those who profess to know God, our faith may not fail; but we may remember that God sees it as well as we, and in a manner infinitely more perfect; and as nothing escapes His cognizance, so nothing can escape His judgment. Ostervald.

Chap. XXV. This chapter contains Bildad's third contest with Job, in which, waving altogether the point in question, concerning the present troubles of the righteous and the prosperity of the wicked, he first falls into a description of the glory, power, and majesty of God; and 2dly, by way of opposition and comparison, he sets forth the misery and impurity of man. Caryl.

The foregoing discourse of Job was so undeniable, that Bildad here begins to break off the dispute: for he says not a word to it, but only advises him to speak more reverently of the majesty of God, than he imagined Job had done in his appeal to Him, chap. xxiii. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 2, 3. Dominion and fear are with him, &c.] He is an awful God, who hath the absolute dominion over all the world: He ordereth the very heavens so, that there is a perfect harmony in all the apparently contrary motions thereof: and contriveth all things so, that they agree to glorify Him! What innumerable troops of glorious angels hath He there above, and what infinite armies of His creatures to execute His will upon all occasions! And how gracious is He in sending forth His light into all the corners of the earth! and how wise in searching all the secrets of human actions and counsels! Bp. Hall.

4. How then can man be justified with God?] As to the origin of the general corruption and depravity of mankind, it seems to be here plainly intimated, that all men are corrupt by descent and inheritance. Bp. Sherlock. See chap. xiv. 3, 4; and the note on that passage.

5. — and it shineth not;] In comparison of Him. Clark.

Chap. XXVI. This chapter contains Job's answer to Bildad, in which he derideth Bildad's dealing with him, as if what he had urged were not only very little to the purpose, but very wide from it; and dwells at large, and in a very lively manner, on the power and perfections of God, His wonderful works and acts of providence; which Bildad had but lightly touched. Caryl, Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 2. How hast thou helped him that is without power?] What powerful support hast thou given to one (Job himself) who is deprived of all strength? A sarcastick rebuke of Bildad. Rosenmüller.

4. To whom hast thou uttered words?] Dost thou think me ignorant of these things? or canst thou pretend to any extraordinary inspiration concerning them? Bp. Patrick.

5, 6. Dead things are formed from under the waters, &c.] In the Old Testament the region of departed souls, called in the Hebrew "Sheol," was supposed to be divided into two parts, the upper and the lower: David makes mention of the latter, Ps. lxxxvi. 13, "Thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell." Gehenna, or the place of perdition, was the name given to this lower part by the later Jews, who, in order to express the great depth to which they conceived it to be sunk, used to describe it as beneath the waters; their notion being, that the waters were placed below the earth, and that the earth floated upon them like a ship.

The above statement may seem to explain the following rendering of ver. 5, 6.

"The souls of the dead tremble;
[The places] below the waters, and their inhabitants.
The seat of spirits is naked before Him;
And the region of destruction hath no covering."

Here "the souls of the dead," and "the inhabitants of the places" below the "abyss of waters," appear to bear to each other the same proportion, that is found in the next verse to subsist between "the seat of spirits" and "the region of destruction;" or the Gehenna of the later Jews: so that the passage, on the whole, conveys this meaning; that nothing is or can be concealed from the all-seeing eye of God: that the souls of the dead tremble under His view, and the shades of the wicked, sunk to the bottom of the abyss, can even there find no covering from His sight. Peters, Dr. Magee, Windet.

The Hebrew word "Sheol" signifies "the invisible state of the dead:" and it seems nearly to answer to the Greek "Hades," by which the Septuagint almost constantly render it; that is, "the invisible place;" and to our old English word "Hell;" which, though now scarcely used but for the place of torment, yet being derivative from the Saxon "Hillan," or "Helan," to hide, or from "hole," a cavern, anciently denoted the concealed or unseen place of the dead in general; as is manifest from the version of Ps. xlix. 14; lv. 16; lxxxviii. 9; lxxxix. 44; in King Henry the Eighth's Great Bible, which is retained in our Liturgy; and so it ought to be understood in other places of that translation. Parkhurst.

6. Hell is naked before him,] The meaning is, not merely that the region of death lies in prospect before Him, but that it is under His eye as part of His dominion. Death is the effect of His moral kingdom; and the consequences of death, the destruction of the body in the grave, and the disposal of unbodied souls in Sheol, are operations of His power. Scott.

7. He stretcheth out the north &c.] He hath spread out this glorious hemisphere of the heavens upon the void and empty space of the light and thin air; and hangeth the great ball of the earth in the midst of heaven without any prop or foundation. Bp. Hall.

The "south," in chap. ix. 9, means the southern hemisphere of the heavens: by the "north," therefore, he here intends the northern half of the heavens. The expression "He stretcheth out" is that which the Hebrew poets generally use when they celebrate the formation of the heavens. It is a metaphor from a tent or pavilion, Isai. xl. 22. Scott.

—— hangeth the earth upon nothing.] This has been formerly questioned by some, and denied by others. But now all agree in it, since so many have sailed round the earth; for that could never have been done, if the earth did not hang in the air, without any thing but the immediate hand of God to support it. But this is no new discovery: for here we see that Job, one of the oldest writers extant in the world, if not the oldest of all, knew it in his day. Bp. Beveridge.

8. He bindeth up the waters &c.] He binds up the waters, and keeps them suspended in the clouds; through which they do not burst all at once, but distil by drops to moisten the earth in due season. Bp. Patrick.

into clouds, and sustaining them in that form, so that their contents may not burst all at once upon the earth. Scott.

9. He holdeth back the face of his throne,] He keeps the highest heavens, which is His throne, (Isai. lxvi. 1,) from our view, that its lustre and glory (Ezek. i. 26) should not reach us and dazzle our sight. Clark, Michaelis.

11. The pillars of heaven tremble &c.] When God shews Himself angry by sending thunder, tempests, and earthquakes, the very heavens seem to tremble, and the whole universe to be moved by these tokens of His displeasure. Clark.

The figurative expression, "the pillars of heaven," seems intended to represent the heavens under the idea of an immense fabrick supported on stately columns. Their "trembling" and "astonishment" is the animated style of sublime poetry, to denote violent concussions of the air, and agitation of the clouds. The cause is God's "reproof;" that is, thunder, lightning, and tempestuous winds, which are represented by the heathen, as well as by sacred poets, as effects and tokens of God's displeasure at the sins of men. Scott.

12. He divideth the sea with his power,] This passage probably refers to the separation of the waters at the creation: like the parallel passage chap. xxxviii. 8—11. In both places Rahab or "proud" is an epithet of the sea. Dr. Hales.

Or it may be no more than the description of a tempest: and if the former part of ver. 12. mean, that God sometimes by His power raises a violent storm at sea; the latter may be well enough understood of the pride or swelling of the sea itself, allayed again by the same Divine power and will that raised it. Peters.

13. By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; &c.] Finally by His wise contrivance the heavens were adorned and made thus beautiful as we behold them: His power made the celestial signs. Bp. Patrick. "The crooked serpent" may mean an heavenly constellation, called the great dragon or serpent; which being most eminent, as taking up a considerable part of the northern hemisphere, may well be put for all the rest of the constellations or stars, with which the heavens are garnished. Job was well acquainted with the doctrine of astronomy; and knew the nature and names of the stars and constellations, as appears also from chap. ix. 9, and xxxviii. 31. Poole.

14. Lo, these are parts of his ways: &c.] The works of God are many and wonderful: we know but a very small part of them, and we cannot comprehend all the reasons of His conduct in the government of the world. God is so great, so powerful, so just and wise, that we ought not to presume to question any thing that He does, nor pry into His works with too much curiosity. We ought rather to be firmly persuaded that He governs all things with wisdom, justice, and goodness, and humbly submit to all His dispensations. Ostervald.

Chap. XXVII. Job, having refuted the principle on which his friends had argued, and having silenced them, now undertakes to prove to them, on their own principles, that their reasoning was false. Having first declared his resolution to maintain his innocence, he bids them consider how, upon their own principles, they could suppose him a hypocrite: for as he was cut off, and had abandoned all hope of life, what end could it answer to play the hypocrite? a part which could not deceive the all-seeing eye of God: what reliance could such an one have on the Almighty, or how could he dare to call on Him in the day of calamity? But to put the matter beyond all dispute, I will prove to you, says Job, by irrefragable arguments, such as you at least cannot but allow them to be, for they are your own, that it must be, in my condition, to the last degree foolish to play the hypocrite: for all I could propose to gain by it is the long catalogue of misery which I shall run over, which you must allow to be true, having yourselves declared that you have been eye-witnesses of it; (referring to chap. iv. 8; xv. 17; xx. 4.) Why then will you trifle in this manner? Heath.

Ver. 1. — his parable,] See the note on Numb. xxiii. 7.

The original word "Mashal" I take to be the general name for poetick style among the Hebrews, including every sort of it, as ranging under one or other, or all of the characters, of sententious, figurative, and sublime; which are all contained in the original notion, or in the use and application, of the word mashal. Parables or proverbs, such as those of Solomon, are always expressed in short pointed sentences; frequently figurative, being formed on some comparison; generally forcible and authoritative, both in the matter and the form. And such in general is the style of the Hebrew poetry. The verb mashal signifies to rule, to exercise authority; to make equal, to compare one thing with another; to utter parables, or acute, weighty, and powerful speeches, in the form and manner of parables, though not properly such. Thus Balaam's first prophecy, Numb. xxiii. 7—10, is called his mashal, though it has hardly any thing figurative in it; but it is beautifully sententious, and, from the very form and manner of it, has great spirit, force, and energy. Thus Job's last speeches, in answer to the three friends, are called mashals; from no one particular character, which discriminates them from the rest of the poem, but from the sublime, the figurative, the sententious manner, which equally prevails through the whole poem, and makes it one of the first and most eminent examples extant of the truly great and beautiful in poetick style. Bp. Lowth.

5—8. God forbid that I should justify you: &c.] Though I am quite cast down, as miserable as it is possible to be, in this life; yet God forbid that I should justify your censures of me, by owning that I have played the hypocrite, or been secretly wicked. No, whatever shall befall me, I am resolved that I will still maintain and still hold fast my integrity: I will sooner die than confess the guilt you charge me with. "Let mine enemy be as the wicked;" let him flourish and prosper here as much as his heart can wish, (and he had before shewn that they often do so;) but "what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?" that is, what can he think will become of him after death? what comfort can such an one possibly entertain in the prospect of futurity? Peters.

10. Will he delight himself in the Almighty?] Can he find comfort in God, when the world affords none? which I do now. Will he call upon God in prosperity as well as adversity? There must be a delight in God before there will be any perseverance in duty. Clark.

11. I will teach you by the hand of God:] Rather, "I will instruct you in the power of God;" as the word is rendered, Prov. xviii. 21. Dr. Durell.

12. Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it;] Behold, there is not one of you but hath, by his own experience, found what I am about to say to be certainly true: and yet, such is your vanity, you will defend an ungrounded opinion. Bp. Patrick.

13. This is the portion of a wicked man with God,] I grant that a wicked man (but not all wicked men, as you maintain) sometimes receives such punishments from God as he deserves: which might make other tyrannical oppressors fear to meet with the same vengeance. Bp. Patrick.

14. —shall not be satisfied with bread.] Shall be starved for want of food. Clark.

15. —shall be buried in death:] "Shall rot unburied." The learned Schultens seems to have given the true meaning of the passage, "they shall have death for their burial;" that is, they shall be reduced to so great a degree of misery, that where they die, there they shall rot; and no person shall bury them. This is put in contrast with the costly monuments of the rich. Heath.

16. Though he heap up silver as the dust,] Sir J. Chardin tells us, in his note on this passage, that it is customary through all the East to gather together an immense collection of furniture and clothes, for their fashions never alter. They keep them up in wardrobes, as they heap up mud for mortar in building. Harmer.

18. —as a moth,] His house shall be as easily destroyed as the dwelling of the moth, which falls a prey to herself. Grotius.

——as a booth] Like a temporary hut in a garden or vineyard to shelter the guard, who suffers it to fall when the season is over. The same image occurs, Isai. i. 8; Lam. ii. 6. Bp. Stock.

Job here teaches us, that although worldly men may live in affluence, heap up riches, and leave them to their children, their ill-gotten wealth soon passes away, and their posterity are often exposed to want and disgrace. These are visible marks of God's justice towards the wicked; and should serve as a powerful antidote against injustice, pride, and the love of the world. Ostervald.

19. The rich man shall lie down, &c.] Peters thus ingeniously explains this important passage; "The wicked rich man" (for of such Job was speaking) "shall die, but shall not be gathered" to the assembly of good and pious souls: "he openeth his eyes" in the other world "and is not," or finds himself lost and miserable. He observes, that the phrase of "being gathered to their fathers," or "to their peoples," is confined in Scripture to the eminently good and pious. Thus it is applied to Abraham, Gen. xv. 15; xxv. 8; to Isaac, Gen. xxxv. 29; to Moses, Numb. xxvii. 13; xxxi. 2; to David, Acts xiii. 36; to Josiah, 2 Kings xxii. 20: whereas the general expression applied to good and bad indifferently is, to "lie down," or "sleep with their fathers;" as Jeroboam, 1 Kings xiv. 20; Rehoboam, 1 Kings xiv. 31, &c. To "lie with the uncircumcised" is applied to the wicked; as Pharaoh, Ezek. xxxii. 19—28, &c. for "the uncircumcised shall be cut off from his peoples," Gen. xvii. 14.

By these expressions was denoted the happiness or misery of good or bad souls, in the intermediate state between their death and resurrection. Dr. Hales.

20, 21. Terrors take hold on him] The horrour and distraction of a wicked man on his death-bed are here described in a very lively manner. He dies, as most wicked men do, in the utmost tumult and confusion. Peters.

destructive wind that blows in these countries; see the note on chap. xv. 2. It is most violent in the night. Scott.

23. Men shall clap their hands at him,] The striking of one hand against the other with some smartness, which we mean by the term "clapping of the hands," might, and I believe did, obtain anciently, as an expression of joy; not unfrequently, if not always, of the malignant kind. Compare what Jeremiah says of Jerusalem, when it was destroyed, Lam. ii. 15. Harmer.

Chap. XXVIII. This chapter, as it is one of the most beautiful and instructive, so perhaps we might add, it is the most obscure of this book. The subject proposed in it is an inquiry after wisdom; not the wisdom of God, by which we mean the unsearchable depth of His counsels, but wisdom in general, or rather the wisdom proper to man, which therefore, in the last verse, is pointed out as the result of the preceding inquiry.

The chapter begins with a fine description of the indefatigable industry and ardour of mankind in searching after other things, which contribute either to the uses or the ornament of life: how they dig into the bowels of the earth for metals, gold, silver, iron, brass. And though the great Creator hath placed a boundary betwixt light and darkness, yet the industry or avarice of man is without bounds. He searcheth into the land of darkness itself for hid treasures. Peters.

Ver. 1—11. Surely there is a vein &c.] The first verse speaks of mines: the eleventh verse, which concludes the paragraph, mentioneth man's bringing the riches of them into daylight: the intermediate verses, therefore, may in reason be supposed to relate to the same subject. Scott.

—— a place for gold] So the Arabians called the mine. "Gold," says one of their poets, "is thrown away like earth in its places:" it has no value in the mine. Scott.

—— where they fine it.] Rather, "which (both the silver and the gold) they fine." Neither silver nor gold is fined in the mine itself. The fining of these metals is mentioned as another instance of man's ability, distinct from his searching them out in the mine. Arabia Felix had anciently its mines of gold, Ps. lxxii. 15, "to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba;" in the Septuagint and Arabick versions, "the gold of Arabia." Sheba was the ancient name of Arabia Felix. Job, who dwelt in Arabia Petrea, could be no stranger to the riches of that neighbouring country. Scott.

2. — brass] He probably means the natural or red brass, which is copper. The modern brass, which the French name yellow copper, is factitious, being made of copper fused with the calamine stone. Scott.

—— out of the stone.] With which it is mixed and incorporated in the earth; but by fire and the art of the metallist is separated from it, and taken out of it. Poole.

3. He setteth an end to darkness, &c.] "The stones of darkness," and "the shadow of death," must surely mean the metallick ore in the deep and dark parts of the earth. The agent then who searcheth them out must be man. He also it is whose pride and presumption "setteth an end to darkness;" that is, contracts its bounds by carrying light into the subterraneous caverns when he works the mines. Scott.

——and searcheth out all perfection:] Or, more clearly, "he searcheth to every extremity the stones of darkness, &c." that is, he follows the vein of metallick ore as far as it goes. Scott.

4. The flood breaketh out &c.] As the author of the book of Job was perhaps the most concise writer that ever appeared in the world, and his language the most concise; he just gives a glimpse of things, and leaves the rest to be supplied by the imagination of the reader. His thoughts are, like the gold and jewels he speaks of, precious in themselves: but we must sometimes labour hard and go deep for them. Of this we have a farther proof in what follows; where he proceeds to give another instance of the daring spirit and ingenuity of mankind. How they cross the broad rivers and arms of the sea for commerce; where there is no path for the foot of man; where they lessen to the sight, and are tossed upon the waves. This appears to be the meaning of the fourth verse, which may be literally rendered thus; "the flood interrupts from the stranger; forgotten of the foot, they appear less than men, they are tossed;" their feet forget them, and are no longer serviceable to them in this very different way of travelling; they lessen to the sight, as they go off farther and farther from the shores; and lastly, are tossed up and down upon the billows. The same expression is used, Ps. cvii. 27. Peters.

Otherwise, it is evident that this chapter of Job relates to mineralogy and mining: thus then I would explain this difficult verse: "A torrent bursteth forth from the rubbish, forgotten," not thought of, or in a word unexpectedly. "By the foot," that is, an engine worked by the foot, "they are drawn off, by man they are removed." The following quotation from Mr. Catcott's treatise on the Deluge is an excellent though undesigned comment on this passage: "The vast profusion of water, that sometimes ensues the breaking up of the strata in coal-pits, is well known to those who are in the least conversant in that affair; and what amazing quantities are drawn off from deep mines, either by drains, or levels, or raised by engines, is also well known: nay, in digging common wells and ponds, in places where there are no springs above ground, it frequently happens that such a glut of water issues forth, as to endanger the lives of the workmen." Parkhurst.

5. As for the earth, &c.] Here he appears to represent the dangers to which miners are exposed, and which avarice is bold enough to venture through. The surface of the earth produceth corn and other fruits for the sustenance of man and beast: but underneath it is turned to be as it were fire. Its caverns abound with inflammable minerals, for instance sulphur. The sulphureous air in mines has been known sometimes to take fire from the candles of the workmen, and to destroy the miners. Or perhaps he referreth to the "slime-pits" in "the vale of Siddim," near the place which was afterwards turned into a lake, and called the Dead sea. Those slime-pits were holes, out of which issued a liquid bitumen or naphtha, an oily substance. Hanway, in his Travels into Persia, describes some fountains of naphtha, which were actually burning near Baku on the western coast of the Caspian sea. Chaldea abounded with them. The walls of Babylon were cemented with the bitumen or slime. Scott.

5—11. As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: &c.] Job continues in the following verses to give farther instances of the daring and yet successful attempts of mankind to provide themselves with every necessary and convenience of life: such as corn for bread, ver. 5; fountains of water in the dry places, where they are wanted, cut out of the hard rock, ver. 10; and rapid rivers restrained within their channels to prevent the mischiefs of their overflow, ver. 11: to which he adds again, gold, and sapphire, and other precious stones, dug deep from the caverns of the earth, where "the lion's foot never trod, nor the vulture's eye hath reached," ver. 7, 8. In short, that there is scarcely any thing so concealed but what the industry of man had brought to light, wisdom alone excepted; for all this is designed to introduce the great question, ver. 12, "But where shall wisdom be found? and where is the place of understanding?" Peters. In the notes which follow, to the end of the 11th verse, a different interpretation is given of some parts of this obscure passage.

6. The stones of it are the place &c.] Here is the temptation to risk the aforementioned dangers: the rocky earth in those subterraneous caverns is the country and birth-place of sapphires, and other precious stones. There also men find glebes of gold, or golden ore. Scott.

7, 8. There is a path &c.] These two verses are a poetical illustration of man's intrepidity in penetrating these dangerous regions of darkness. The fiercest and most daring creatures of prey would not venture into them: "A path which the fowls of prey know not, &c." He means, the path which leads to the place of sapphires and golden ore; the way into the mines. Scott.

9—11. He putteth forth &c.] These verses appear to describe the prodigious labour of working a mine: for the effect of the operations here specified is, man's bringing forth to light the thing that is hid; that is, the hidden treasure of the earth. Scott.

—— he overturneth the mountains &c.] The operation, described here, seems to be the breaking in pieces and dislodging, in order to come at the ore, the hardest flint or marble; which are the roots, that is, the foundation of the mountain. Or perhaps the poet means a still greater work; such as Pliny, quoted by Schultens, strongly paints: "Yet the labour of hewing the rock is comparatively easy. For there is an earth compounded of a kind of clay and grit that is almost impenetrable. This the miners assail with iron wedges and mallets. Nothing is imagined to be harder, except the insatiable hunger after gold, which of all things is the hardest to subdue. Having finished this labour, they cut the props of their arch-work, the prelude and signal of the fall of the mountain. The sentinel on the top of the mountain perceiving the ground under his feet to sink, immediately gives notice of it to the workmen below by his voice and repeated thumps. Away he flies. The mountain splits, and falls with a continued thundering sound, and an incredible blast of wind. The victorious miners gaze upon the overthrow of nature." Scott.

10. He cutteth out rivers &c.] The next operation is to clear away the stones and rubbish, that "his eye may see every precious thing;" that is, lay bare the precious gems and the gold. The means by which this is accomplished, is turning a large body of water upon the ruins. But so wonderful is man's invention, and so indefatigable his avarice, that he cuts a passage even through rocks to collect and convey a strong stream down to the mine for that purpose. "To wash the ruins," says Pliny, "they bring rivers from the tops of mountains a hundred miles off. They carry aqueducts over the valleys, and sometimes hew a way for those pipes through the rocks: they gather the waters into large reservoirs, make sluice-gates to those reservoirs; then let out such a torrent as bears down the largest stones with the violence of its course." Scott.

11. He bindeth the floods &c.] There remaineth still a third operation to exercise the art of man. The subterraneous waters sometimes burst into the mine in great abundance. These he must thoroughly drain off by machines, before "he can bring forth into light the hidden treasures." Scott.

13—20. Man knoweth not the price thereof; &c.] In the intermediate verses betwixt the first and last proposal of this great question, there is made a beautiful repetition of several of the particulars which had been mentioned before, and a fine turn given to each; "The depth saith, It is not in me: and the sea saith, It is not with me:" as if Job had said, Men may dig into the bowels of the earth, and find gold and treasures there; but they will be as far from finding wisdom as ever: and could they traverse the great sea itself, as they run across a river or a strait, yet they would learn that wisdom is not to be acquired in the way of commerce or exchange. One thing we cannot but remark from this passage, how early the race of men had learned to set a value on those precious trinkets which are here so lavishly exposed to view. Peters.

15. — neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof.] Compare Gen. xliii. 21. The practice of weighing money, says Mons. Volney, is customary and general in Syria, in Egypt, and in all Turkey. No piece, however light, is refused: the tradesman takes out his money-weights, and values it. It is the same as in the time of Abraham, when he bought his burying-ground. Parkhurst.

16. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir,] That is, estimated, or compared with it. The word strictly signifies, to be strèwed, or laid on the ground, as the ancient merchants laid their commodities to be bartered or exchanged for others: a method of traffick still practised by some nations to this day; as, for instance, by the Moors and Negroes of Africa, in bartering salt and various trinkets for gold. Parkhurst.

—— the precious onyx,] It was observed on ver. 1, that Arabia Felix, now called Yaman, had formerly its golden mines. It still boasteth its gems. We are assured by an eyewitness, that precious stones for rings and bracelets are brought thence in great quantities, to the annual fair held at Mecca during the last ten or twelve days of the stay of the pilgrims there.

It is doubtful what gem is meant by that which we translate the onyx: the epithet precious, as Schultens remarks, gives a distinction to it; which the onyx, a sort of agate, does not merit. The Chaldee interpreter renders it beryls. The beryl of the ancients was a transparent gem of a sea-green colour. Scott.

—— the sapphire.] The sapphire is of a beautiful sky-blue.

Some will have the Hebrew word to signify the ruby; others the carbuncle, which is a stone of the ruby kind, very rare, and of a rich glowing blood colour. Scott.

17. — the crystal] Or glass, according to the Greek, Latin, and Syriack versions: no wonder that it is here mentioned with gold, and other things of great value, since however common and cheap glass now is among us, yet it is very conceivable, that in the age and country of Job, this beautiful artificial crystal was very scarce, and of consequence highly precious. Parkhurst.

—— jewels of fine gold.] Some ornaments or vessels of gold that were of high value for the workmanship as well as for the materials. Scott.

18. No mention shall be made of coral,] According to Pliny, coral was highly esteemed among the ancients. "The Indians value coral as highly as we value pearls, which come from India. The men esteem these gems, as our women do Indian pearls. Their priests and predictors attribute to it something sacred, and affirm that it has the virtue of protecting from dangers those who carry it. So that two things contribute to render it valuable, superstition and beauty." Experience confirms the relation of Pliny: for often in that country a collar of coral sells for a price equal to one of pearls. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

22. Destruction and death say, &c.] By "destruction and death" must be meant the dead: this interpretation gives a clear and natural sense to the passage. Job had before told us that wisdom and her place were "hid from the eyes of all living," ver. 21, and therefore whither should we go to look for it, but among the dead? "Death and destruction," two synonymous words, are used probably, after the Hebrew manner, to increase the signification, and to denote a long race of their dead ancestors from the beginning of the world downward.

We have here then an answer to the great inquiry, "Where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?" "Destruction and death say," that is, the generations of the dead have told us, "we have heard the fame thereof with our ears." We have had something relating to this question about wisdom delivered down to us by tradition from our forefathers: amongst others, these important particulars, that "God understandeth the way thereof," ver. 23; for His knowledge reaches to all things and places: "He looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven," ver. 24; and that with a wisdom so infallible, and a power so uncontrollable, as to give a certain weight and measure to things the most uncertain and inconstant with respect to us, the winds and waters; "to make the weight for the winds; and He weigheth the waters by measure," ver. 25. We have had it moreover delivered down to us, says Job, in the same traditional way, that this infinitely wise and glorious Being, when He made the world, not only displayed His own wisdom in the admirable contrivance of it, but at the same time declared what was the wisdom proper to man, the best and truest wisdom to which he could attain; which was, to acknowledge and adore his Maker, and to pay all due obedience to His laws, ver. 26—28. "Unto man He said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding."

We see now the reason why this holy man, amidst all the calamities that had overwhelmed him like a flood, still persists in that well-weighed and generous resolution, which he expresses in the foregoing chapter, and which points out the connexion between these two chapters; "Till I die, I will not remove mine integrity from me. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live." He then adds, "Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?" chap. xxvii. 5—8. Well might Job thus reason and resolve, who had learned from the Divine Oracle this important lesson; that, be circumstances or events of things what they will in this world, yet "to fear God is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding." This he was sure of, because God had said it. And here therefore he fixes his foot, where every wise man gladly will, every man of sense and sobriety, who, like Job and his friends, has ever experienced the embarrassments of his own reasonings, upon a Divine revelation.

What the traditions of their ancestors were to these men, that the Bible is to us: and happy were it for us if we paid it the same pious regard: if we would give it its due weight in determining our religious controversies; be studious to enrich our minds with the knowledge of its awful truths, and to form our lives by the simplicity of its admirable precepts: if we would allow these sacred books the privilege, at least, which we so seldom deny to others of any merit, the privilege of a serious and attentive reading! we should then find that they want nothing to recommend them, but their being thoroughly understood. Peters.

When I had such numerous herds of cattle, and consequently such plenty of butter, that, if I pleased, I might have washed my feet with it. Poole.

—— and the rock poured me out rivers of oil;] Cattle and olive groves made the principal wealth of the Arabs. The best olives grow upon rocky mountains. Hence these bold figures to express uncommon felicity. Scott.

7. When I went &c.] Having described his domestick happiness, he proceeds to represent the honours paid him in publick life. This representation is judiciously intermingled with an account of his impartial and intrepid administration of justice; which is a noble answer to the accusation of Eliphaz, chap. xxii. 6—9. Scott.

—— the gate] The court of justice, where was the meeting of the elders to try causes. Bp. Stock. See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10, and on chap. v. 4.

—— when I prepared my seat in the street!] When I sat on the bench in the open place where the people are wont to have their causes heard. Bp. Patrick.

Sitting on a cushion is an expression of honour in the East: and the preparing of a seat for a person of distinction seems to mean, laying things of this kind on a place where such an one is to sit. When Job speaks of "his preparing his seat," it is extremely natural to understand him of his sending his servants to lay a cushion and a carpet on one of the publick seats, or something of that sort, as Sir John Chardin supposes. Harmer.

8. — hid themselves:] Being struck with such reverence of Job's person, that they durst not appear openly before him. Caryl.

The slavish homage of prostration to princes and great men, which prevailed in Egypt, Persia, and the East in general, and still subsists there, was unknown in Arabia at that time. Though Job was "the greatest of all the men of the East," we do not find any such adoration paid to him by his contemporaries in the zenith of his prosperity, among the marks of respect here so minutely described. "When the young men saw him, they hid themselves," in token of reverence; "the aged arose, and stood up" in his presence: "the princes refrained from talking, and laid their hand upon their mouth; the nobles held their peace," and were all attention while he spoke. All this was highly respectful indeed, but still it was manly, and shewed no cringing or servile adulation. And so Sir William Jones describes the genuine Arabs at the present day as a majestick race, who were never conquered, and who have retained their primitive manners, features, and character, with scarcely any alteration. Peters, Dr. Hales.

11. — it gave witness to me:] They who saw me bore testimony to my uprightness and the integrity of my heart. Chappelow.

13. — ready to perish] Through false accusations, whereby his estate or life was in danger. I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy, on account of her great and unexpected deliverance. Clark.

14. I put on righteousness, and it clothed me: &c.] In all his proceedings, as a magistrate, or a man in authority, Job sought to do justice to all. Caryl.

Where silence against foul and false imputations may be interpreted a confession, there the protestation of a man's own innocency is ever just, and sometimes necessary. When others do us open wrong, it is not vanity, but charity, to do ourselves open right: and whatsoever appearance of folly or vain boasting there is in so doing, they are chargeable with all that compel us thereunto, and not we. "I am become a fool in glorying," saith St. Paul, "ye have compelled me," 2 Cor. xii. 11. It was neither pride nor passion in Job, but such a compulsion as this, that made him so often in this book proclaim his own righteousness. See chap. xxii. 6, and the note there. Bp. Sanderson.

—— it clothed me: &c.] This metaphor of clothing is much used in the Scriptures in this notion, as applied to the soul and things appertaining to the soul. See Ps. cix. 29; Isai. xi. 5; Rom. xiii. 14; 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10; Eph. vi. 14, &c. By his speech of "putting on righteousness and judgment as a robe and a diadem," Job signifies that the glory and pride, which kings and potentates are wont to take in their crowns and sceptres and royal vestments, is not more than the glory and honour which he placed in doing justice and judgment. He considered that to be true honour, not which is reflected from these empty marks and ensigns of dignity, but which springs from those virtues, whereof these are but dumb remembrances. "He put on righteousness, and it clothed him:" and "judgment" was to him, what to others "a robe and a diadem" are, honourable and delightful.

In this and the three following verses we have to consider as laid down to us in the person, and from the example of Job, some of the principal duties which attend any situation of eminence or authority, either in church or state; more especially any office appertaining to the administration of justice, ver. 14: secondly, a forwardness in the works of mercy, compassion, and charity, ver. 15: thirdly, diligence in examination, ver. 16: and fourthly, courage and resolution in executing, ver. 17. Bp. Sanderson.

—— a diadem.] The usual headdress of the Turks, Persians, Arabs, and other Eastern nations to this day, is the turban, which consists of a cap, and a sash of fine linen or silk wound round the bottom of the cap; and which appears from the present passage to have been worn in the East as early as the time of Job. Isai. lxii. 3, it is used for the royal turban; and in Zech. iii. 5, for the high priest's. Parkhurst.

This beautiful manner of speaking is still preserved among the Arabs. One of their proverbs is, "Knowledge is a diadem to a young person, and a chain of gold about his neck." Scott.

18. Then I said, I shall die in my nest, &c.] Then did I please myself in the confidence of my continuing happiness; and durst boldly resolve, I shall die in peace and fulness of days in my own house. Bp. Hall.

The image is taken from the eagle, who builds his nest on the summit of a rock. Security and ease are the points of resemblance intended. Scott.

19. — the dew lay all night upon my branch.] It is well known that in the hot Eastern countries, where it rarely rains during the summer months, the copious dews, which fall there during the night, contribute greatly to the nourishment of vegetables in general. And "this dew," says Hasselquist, speaking of the excessively hot weather in Egypt, "is particularly serviceable to the trees, which would otherwise never be able to resist the heat; but with this assistance they thrive well, and blossom, and ripen their fruit." Parkhurst.

20. — my bow was renewed in my hand.] A bow always bent is an image employed to represent unabated power and strength. Rosenmüller.

22. — my speech dropped upon them.] Like rain, refreshing them. Fragments to Calmet.

23. — as for the rain; — the latter rain.] In the foregoing verse, the soft insinuating force of his political and religious instruction was compared to the dropping dew. Here the copiousness of his eloquence is likened to the abundant rains which fall in autumn in those countries; and the high acceptableness of it, to the avidity with which the earth, burnt up by the summer's drought, devours those rains. The alteration which they produce in the withered fields is so astonishingly great, that Dr. Russell scruples not to call it "a resurrection of vegetable nature."

The same ingenious author informs us, that the first autumnal rains fall about the middle of September; the second, or latter, about twenty or thirty days after. The first are inconsiderable, the latter fall in great abundance. Scott. Concerning what are usually called the former and the latter rains, see the notes on Deut. xi. 14; xxviii. 12.

24. If I laughed on them, &c.] Or sported and jested with them, that is, carried myself familiarly and pleasantly with them, it was so acceptable to them to see me well pleased with them, that they could scarce believe their senses. Yet my familiarity did not breed in them contempt or presumption, so as to grieve me or make my countenance fall, as it does in cases of shame or sorrow, Gen. iv. 5. They were very cautious not to abuse my smiles, or to give me any occasion to change my countenance or carriage towards them. Poole.

25. I chose out their way, &c.] The phrase of "choosing out their way," denotes supremacy both in the state and in the affairs of religion, Exod. xviii. 20.

The next sentence represents him encamped with his subjects on some military expedition, with the authority of a royal general: "I shall pitch my tent as a king in the army,"

The last clause, "as one that comforteth the mourners," may mean, animating his troops when they were dispirited: or, in a larger and more noble sense, his being the father of his people, ever touched with their distresses, and ready to exert his utmost ability for their relief. Scott.

Whilst Job was in prosperity, he was respected by all; but as soon as he fell into adversity, every one forsook him. Thus it happens every day: men make their court to those that have riches, and honours, and credit in the world; but abandon them as soon as they are deprived of these advantages: and virtue is commonly but little esteemed when it is not attended with worldly prosperity. The opinions of men are extremely vain and unreasonable: we ought not, therefore, to make any great account of them, nor build our happiness upon them. Ostervald.

Chap. XXX. Job paints his miserable reverse of fortune, the universal contempt into which he is fallen, the dreadful and unceasing torments of his disease; breathing at the same time a petition to God for mercy, and begging that his persecution might not be extended to his very ashes. Bp. Stock.

The section, ver. 1—14, appears to be a strong and spirited description of those villanous Arabs, who, when Job was in his prosperity, had felt the severity of his justice, and fled into the lurking-places of the desert. Upon the loss of his authority, these miscreants came out of their dens to revenge themselves upon him by the most scurrilous abuse. In drawing their character, he insists much on the misery of their habitation and way of living, as circumstances very expressive of the turpitude and barbarity of their manners. Scott.

Ver. 1. — younger] The vast respect paid to their elders by the Eastern people, quickened their sensibility of contempt from their juniors. Scott.

——fleeing into the wilderness in former time desolate and waste.] These words would be clearer, if they were rendered thus: Fleeing lately into the wilderness which is desolate and waste; or, into the wilderness, unto desolation and destruction. Dr. Durell.

4. Who cut up mallows by the bushes,] The word, here translated "mallow," seems to signify a herb of a saltish taste, which grows in salt places, whether near the sea, or in the desert. Athenæus says, it is the food of the miserable. Script. illust. Expos. Ind. The plant is described by Job as "cropped upon the shrub;" which exactly agrees with what the Arab writers say of the Maluck or Halimus, namely, that they ate the tops of it. Parkhurst.

Biddulph says, that "he saw many poor people gathering mallows and three-leaved grass, and asked them what they did with it; and they answered, that it was all their food, and that they boiled it, and did eat it. Then we took pity on them, and gave them bread, which they received very joyfully, and blessed God that there was bread in the world." This was in Syria, not far from Aleppo. Whether mallows was one of the herbs Job precisely meant, may be doubted. As Biddulph went to Jerusalem some time before the Bible was undertaken by the command of King James I. the observation he made of the poor people's eating mallows in Syria, might engage the learned translators so to render the word used in this passage of Job. Harmer.

——and juniper roots for their meat.] Rather, the Genista or Spanish broom. I cannot find any modern instance of the root of this shrub being eaten for food; but it is certain that the shoots, leaves, barks, and roots of other shrubs and trees, have been eaten among many nations in times and places of famine and scarcity. Parkhurst.

5. They were driven forth from among men,] This verse discovers the true cause why the men before spoken of lived solitary in the wilderness; their retirement was not voluntary but compulsory. Caryl.

They were cast out of all civil society, as pests not to be endured: and whenever they were discovered lurking about towns, an outcry was raised against them as against the pilfering Arabs of the desert; with whom, it is likely, they herded. Scott.

6. To dwell — in caves of the earth, &c.] St. Jerome says, that the southern parts of Judea are full of caves under ground, and of caverns in the mountains, to which the people retired in time of danger. Compare Judg. vi. 2; 1 Sam. xiii. 6. Parkhurst.

The following passage, in which notice is taken of the like circumstances in these deserts, is not inapplicable: "If in the course of our travelling we did not fall in with the hovels of the Kabyles, or the encampments of the Arabs, we had nothing to protect us from the inclemency either of the heat of the day, or the cold of the night, unless we met with some accidental grove of trees, the shelve of a rock, or sometimes by good fortune a grotto. At these times our horses were the greatest sufferers: and as they were always our first care, we gathered for them stubble, grass, boughs of trees, and such like provender, before we sat down and examined what fragments of some former meal were reserved for ourselves." Dr. Shaw.

The rocks of Arabia Petrea abound in caves. At this day, the Arabs who dwell in the mountains of that country are a bad people; the worst of all the Arabs, as Bishop Pococke informs us. Scott.

7. Among the bushes they brayed;] Made a noise like wild asses through hunger, cold, and other sufferings. Clark. See chap. vi. 5.

—— under the nettles they were gathered together.] The nettle is a plant so low, that no persons could assemble under it: the Latin Vulgate always renders the word brier, bramble, or the like: and Scheuchzer says, We must absolutely have recourse to tall shrubs, which are thorny, prickly, and burning. Dr. Shaw says, "There is no great variety of plants to be met with in these deserts. Those which I have seen are generally indebted to the cleft of some barren rock, or to the sandy plain, for their support, and to the nightly dews for their nourishment." Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

11. — loosed my cord,] This seems to be an allusion to the "stretched cords," by which Job's tent was fixed to the ground. Dr. Durell. Because God hath bereaved me of that power and honour which I formerly enjoyed, therefore they let loose the reins of their obedience and respect to me. Bp. Hall.

Perhaps, "Because He (God) hath loosened my bow-string," that is, hath made me weak and helpless, in opposition to what he had said by a like image, (chap. xxix. 20,) "and afflicted me, therefore they," my rascally persecutors before described, "have let go the rein," that is, thrown off all restraint, "before me." Parkhurst.

Or, the phrase "He hath loosed my cord," seems equivalent to that in chap. xii. 18, "He looseth the bond of kings." Scott.

13. — they have no helper.] Rather, there is no helper among them, none ready to assist me. Dr. Durell.

14. They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters:] Rather, They came as a wide torrent; they rolled themselves in order to destroy. Dr. Durell.

corroded from off me, eaten into holes with sores. Michaelis observes, that in the elephantiasis, Job's distemper, "in process of time tumours are formed, and these tumours degenerate at length into incurable sores, which penetrate one after another." Parkhurst.

It is too common a spectacle to see even among Europeans, at Rio de Janeiro, as well as native whites and negroes, that dreadful disease, the elephantiasis, which, destroying the sound texture of the integuments of the human frame, swells, distorts, and discolours wherever it attacks; enlarging the patient's mis-shapen limbs to the bulk of those of the huge animal, the resemblance to whom, in that particular, occasioned the appellation which this horrid disorder has received. Sir G. Staunton's Embassy to China.

18. By the great force of my disease is my garment changed: &c.] The passage may be rendered, "with great force He layeth hold of my garment, and enfolds me by the collar of my robe. He hath cast me into the mire, &c." The idea is taken from a man struggling with another, laying hold of his garment, casting him to the earth, and rolling him in the mire. Job compares the disease and affliction which laid hold of him to such a struggle. Houbigant. Or, it requires great force, when I would shift my clothes, to pull them off: my outward garment, by the filthy matter of my sores, being glewed as fast to me, as the collar of my shirt. Bp. Patrick.

20. —I stand up,] I offer myself to Thy view as an object of compassion, and pray to Thee. Clark.

Standing was the usual posture of prayer among the Hebrews. Scott.

21. Thou art become cruel to me:] It is remarkable, that the very same word is used, Jer. xxx. 14, where God Himself declares how He had dealt with His own people, and expresses it in the following terms: "I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one." Peters.

—— with thy strong hand thou opposest thyself against me.] The turn of the sentence in the original is somewhat different, and is literally thus, "With Thy strong hand Thou hatest me;" which gives us a plain direction how the passage ought to be understood; Thou hast dealt with me as if Thou hatest me, or as men use to deal with those whom they hate. Peters.

22. Thou liftest me up to the wind;] Thou tossest me up with Thy judgments, as dust or chaff is blown up by the wind. Bp. Hall.

It is very probable that this remarkable figurative representation refers to a sand-storm; especially such an one as Bruce describes, when, says he, we saw a number of prodigious pillars of sand at different distances, at times moving with great celerity, at others stalking on with a majestick slowness; at intervals coming as if in a very few minutes to overwhelm us; again retreating so as to be almost out of sight, their tops reaching to the very clouds. There the tops often separated from the bodies; and these, once disjoined, dispersed in the air, and did not appear more, &c. The comparison may represent Job's dignity exalted in the air, rising to great grandeur, importance, and even terrour in the eyes of the beholders; riding upon the wind; and at length dissipated and dispersed, like a pillar of sand melting into the undistinguished level of the desert. This comparison seems precisely adapted to the mind of an Arab, who must have seen or heard of similar phenomena in the countries around him. Frag. to Calmet.

23. —to the house appointed for all living.] The ancient belief was, that the souls of all men went to Sheol; (see the note on chap. xxvi. 5, 6:) which, as in the largest sense it took in the receptacle of good and bad souls, was in Job's phrase the house of assembly for all the living. Of the state or condition of the souls there, very little is said in the Old Testament; because good men looked beyond it for a reward of their piety, when they should be released from this state of death, and obtain a blessed resurrection: which hope they expressed by the care bestowed upon their dead bodies, to have them decently interred, and, if possible, in the sepulchres of their ancestors. And as for their souls, they believed that they should be gathered to their fathers, or their people; that is, to their religious ancestors, or to the abode of the blessed, there to remain in a state of peace and hope till the grand period of the resurrection, when they were to emerge into a new state of life and being. This seems evidently to have been the ancient notion of the state of death, and to have obtained universally in the first ages of the world. Peters.

24. Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the grave,] God's afflicting hand will not pursue me to the grave; for though men cry out when they are sent thither, yet when they are there, all their sufferings and complaints are ended. Bp. Patrick.

The passage may be rendered, "But yet He will not stretch out His hand against the grave: surely in His destruction or destroying" (namely, of me) "a shout (would be) to them;" that is, to death and the grave before mentioned. The sense of this violently pathetick and obscure passage seems to be, that God would not extend Job's punishment beyond the grave, and therefore that even in death and the grave he would shout for joy in being relieved from his present sufferings. Parkhurst.

27. —prevented me.] Rather, rushed in upon me. Dr. Durell.

29. I am a brother to dragons, &c.] Affinity in disposition and circumstances, as well as in blood, is denoted by the term "brother" among the Eastern nations. Scott.

The verse may be paraphrased thus: My pain forceth me to such lamentable cries, that I might seem to be associated with dragons and owls in some horrible desert, whose howlings and shrieks are wont to be held most mournful and ominous. Bp. Hall.

The purport of the passage is, I am like to wild creatures; first, to the tanim or phocæ, which frequent the inhospitable shores of the sea, and are notorious for mourning and whining; see the note on Lam. iv. 3: and secondly, to the ostrich of the desert, (as in the margin,) whose mourning and lamenting is often of long continuance. See Mic. i. 8, where the same creatures are associated: and the remark of Dr. Shaw on that place. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

30. My skin is black upon me,] In the elephantiasis, as Michaelis observes, which appears to have been Job's disease, "at first the whole skin becomes red, then of a leaden colour, or even quite black." Agreeably to this, the 28th verse may be rendered, "I go," or "am grown black without the heat," namely, by his distemper. Parkhurst.

31. My harp also is turned to mourning, &c.] These seem proverbial expressions for a most melancholy change of condition from happy to wretched. We cannot form an adequate idea of the force of the latter expression, "the voice of them that weep," without reading the accounts which travellers have given us of the excessive lamentations of the Easterns in their funeral processions. Scott.

Notwithstanding the complaints which Job makes of his friends, his chief complaint is, that God Himself seemed to have forsaken him. It is a small thing to be rejected of men, if God with His favour look upon us; but our condition is really deplorable, when God seems to hide His face from us, and answers us not in the time of trouble. The condition to which Job was reduced, ought to comfort those whom God causes to pass through the like trials. However, from what befell Job, they should likewise learn to moderate their complaints, to undergo their sufferings with patience, and to wait with resignation till it shall please God to deliver them in His due season. Ostervald.

Chap. XXXI. In this chapter Job makes a full profession of his integrity, and declares at large his strict adherence to the rules of duty, as they relate to God and man; binding the heaviest curses on himself, by imprecations of Divine vengeance, if he swerved from the truth. And this he did to wipe off the aspersions which his friends had cast on him, to clear himself from the charge of hypocrisy, or open transgression. Caryl.

Here is an amazing instance and example of a very great prince, who, when he had no superiour to control him, gave such instances of his chastity, temperance, justice, charity, compassion, devotion, &c. as few of his quality have imitated, worthy as they are all of imitation. Bp. Wilson.

Ver. 1, 2. I made a covenant with mine eyes; &c.—For what portion of God &c.] For if I had suffered my eyes and my heart to rove after these unlawful lusts, what could I have looked up for at the hand of God but due vengeance? Bp. Hall.

2—4. For what portion of God is there from above?] When Job asserts the same thing with his antagonists, namely, that a sure destruction attends the wicked, that it is their portion, their inheritance from God; he must certainly be understood in a sense different from theirs, and can only refer to a final retribution in a future state: for the intimation conveyed in the 4th verse, had he meant it of a temporal destruction, was what his antagonists had repeated to him again and again, and had urged it as an argument of his guilt, that he was thus miserably destroyed. Peters.

5. If I have walked with vanity, &c.] The word rendered "vanity" signifies falsehood, and is properly applied to idols: and the phrase is here peculiarly adapted to that signification; for "I walked with," signifies in Scripture phrase paying acceptable service to the Deity. So Enoch is said to have "walked with God." So that the meaning is, If I have paid religious worship to idols. The word "deceit" seems to look the same way; as all idols in Scripture language are a lie, an imposture, a fraud. A parallel passage is Ps. xxiv. 4. Heath.

6. Let me be weighed in an even balance,] Similar allusions to weighing the characters of mankind are frequent in Scripture. See Isai. xxvi. 7; Dan. v. 27; 1 Sam. ii. 3. Fragments to Calmet.

10. Then let my wife grind unto another,] That is, Let her be so degraded, that, instead of having her corn ground for her, she shall perform that servile office herself; not for herself, nor for me, but let her grind for another. Grinding was the work of the women in the East, and esteemed a very servile, as well as laborious employment. Frag. to Calmet. See the note on Exod. xi. 5. Otherwise the phrase here used is a decent expression for her committing adultery, as many learned men have understood it. This sense seems best to suit the context, and particularly the latter part of the verse, in which, as usual in Hebrew poetry, the same sentiment is repeated in other words. Parkhurst.

Then let my wife become false to my bed, and repay my sin with the like adultery; let me be plagued, as I deserve, in my own kind: for this had been a capital offence, worthy to be punished by the sword of authority. Bp. Hall.

12. For it is a fire that consumeth to destruction,] Such great wickedness would have called down upon me the Divine vengeance, which would have spent its fury against me, like a fire laying all things waste, and consuming the fruits of the earth. Rosenmüller.

13, 14. If I did despise the cause of my manservant &c.] Job here speaks plainly of the future, of something which he was infallibly to expect, had he behaved unjustly to his slave: whereas could we suppose him to mean it of any temporal judgment or visitation of God, what is it that he had to expect? he seems to think his condition so miserable already, that it was scarcely possible for him to fall lower; and therefore he often and earnestly wishes for death, as the happiest event that could befall him. We need not question, therefore, but that he had here an eye to the future judgment; and it is remarkable, that he expresses himself in the same phrase here as in chap. xix. 25. Peters.

17. Or have eaten my morsel myself alone,] This verse affords us a beautiful picture of liberality and tender charity, which would not eat even the least morsel of bread without imparting some little portion to the poor and needy. Schultens.

The following passage, describing a custom that prevails among the Arabs, is illustrative of their hospitality: "No sooner was our food prepared, than one of the Arabs, after having placed himself upon the highest station he could find, invited three times with a loud voice all his brethren, the sons of the faithful, to come and partake of it; though none of them were in view, or perhaps within a hundred miles of us. This custom however they maintain to be always a token of their great benevolence, as it would be of their hospitality likewise, if they had an opportunity to shew it." Dr. Shaw.

As we were at table, there came by a stranger wearing a white turban, who, after having saluted the company, sat down to the table without ceremony, eat with us during some time, and then went away, repeating several times the name of God. They told us, that it was some traveller who, no doubt, stood in need of refreshment, and who had profited by the opportunity, according to the custom of the East, which is to exercise hospitality at all times, and to all persons. De la Roque, Fragments to Calmet.

21. If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless,] "If I have used my power injuriously against the fatherless, when I saw that my sentence would have been seconded, and would have prevailed on the bench. Bp. Hall. See chap. xxix. 7, and the notes there.

Such was Job's "religion pure and undefiled," who "visited" the orphan and "widow in their affliction, and kept himself unspotted from the world:" no wonder then that it was accepted before "God, even the Father," James v. 11. This surely is Gospel faith; and the Apostle James, in his excellent practical Epistle, seems to allude particularly to the case of Job, whose "patience" he expressly celebrates in the following marked passages, chap. i. 2, and 26. Dr. Hales.

23. For destruction from God was a terror to me, &c.] For I never thought that I could escape the Divine vengeance; the dread of which affrighted me, when men could not, from all such insolence; for I know that I could not support myself against the majesty of God. Bp. Patrick.

26—28. If I beheld &c.] If, when I have beheld Thy glorious creatures, the sun and the moon, I have given way to any idolatrous conceits, and have ascribed Divine honour unto them, as my heathen neighbours do; this were indeed a heinous and capital wickedness. Bp. Hall.

The only species of idolatry noticed in this book is Zabianism, or the worship of the heavenly bodies, which is the earliest on record, and an additional proof of the high antiquity of the composition; especially as it is noticed with abhorrence, as a novelty, deserving judicial punishment. We learn from Sir William Jones, that the people of Arabia very soon fell into the common, but fatal, errour of adoring the sun and the firmament, the planets and fixed stars. Dr. Hales.

27.—or my mouth hath kissed my hand:] So Lucian mentions the Greeks, even in his time, worshipping the sun by kissing their hand, and then thinking their adoration complete. Minucius Felix remarks, that when the heathen Cæcilius observes the statue of Serapis, "he, according to the custom of the superstitious vulgar, moving his hand to his mouth, kissed it with his lips." Apuleius, who lived in the second century, speaking of one Æmilian, probably a Christian, says, "If he passes by a temple, he thinks it wicked to move his hand to his lips, as a sign of adoration." Parkhurst.

We are told that the Mahomedans begin their worship with bringing their two thumbs together, and kissing them three times, and at every kiss touching their foreheads with their thumbs. When they cannot kiss the hand of a superiour, they kiss their own, and put it to their foreheads; they venerate an unseen being, whom they cannot touch, in the same manner. Harmer, Dr. Durell.

31. If the men of my tabernacle said not, &c.] He appeals to his own domesticks for his bounty towards them and liberality to all others. The clearest translation of this verse is, "If the man of my tabernacle do not say, Who can produce a person not satisfied from his flesh?" that is, from his provisions. The Chaldee interpreter understood it in the same manner, "who cutteth of his flesh unsatisfied?" Scott.

33, 34. If I covered my transgressions as Adam,] The passage should be thus translated:

> Did I cover, like Adam, my transgression,
> By hiding, in my lurkingplace, mine iniquity;
> Then let me be terrified at the great assembly,
> And let the contempt of the families strike me down;
> Let me be cut off and never go out of my door.

The preceding passage contains a reference to the history of the first man, and his endeavours to hide himself after his transgression. Dr. Magee.

Amongst the particulars wherein Job vindicates his integrity, one is, that he was ready to acknowledge his errours. The allusion to Adam's hiding himself is proper and apposite; but if the passage be rendered, as in the margin, "after the manner of men," it becomes an accusation of others; and the vindication of himself has a mixture of pride in it, which does not suit the character of the speaker. Bp. Sherlock.

"Covering of sin" is spoken in several senses. God covers sin, when He hides it, as it were, from His sight, and will not observe it, Neh. iv. 5; Ps. lxxxv. 2; compare Ps. xxxii. 1. Man covers his own sin, when he clokes or palliates it, Ps. xxxii. 5; Prov. xxviii. 13: that of another, when he conceals or says nothing of it, Prov. xvii. 9; compare Prov. x. 12. Parkhurst.

34. Did I fear &c.] This passage seems to intimate, that it was customary among the Arabs to assemble all the families in a tribe for trying a delinquent of high rank. Job imprecates on himself such a solemn condemnation, in case he had concealed, in this apology, any crime whereof he had been guilty. The punishment which he imprecates, is, execration by the whole tribe, a life of obscurity, and perpetual imprisonment in his own dwelling. Scott.

35, 36. Oh that one would hear me! &c.] Oh that mine adversary had written a book, that is, a roll, accusation, or bill! surely I would take it on my shoulder, and would bind it as a crown upon me, that is, upon my head. Fragments to Calmet.

36. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, &c.] Surely I would not endeavour to obscure it, but openly expose it to be read by all; nay, wear it as a singular ornament, which would turn to my honour, when the world should see it disproved. Bp. Patrick.

——and bind it as a crown to me.] As a tiara, diadem, or turban. Linen is one of the oldest materials that ever were written upon, as appears by the bandages of the Egyptian mummies still preserved; and to this Job here probably alludes: this might readily be not only "taken on his shoulders," but "bound about his head." Parkhurst.

However dissimilar "binding a writing about the head" may be from our customs, yet we meet with such a practice in the East even to our days. For when a governour under the Great Mogul is receiving letters or orders from his master, the moment he sees the packet, he alights from his horse, and falls prostrate to the ground: which done, he takes the present from the messenger, binds it fast upon his own head, and returning to the court room, where he usually despatches business, reads it, and returns an answer immediately. Parkhurst.

37. I would declare unto him the number of my steps;] I would help him with such informations against myself as he would never be able to find out; and when I had done, I would encounter him boldly and courageously, as some warlike prince would come into the field against a weak enemy. Bp. Hall.

38. If my land cry against me, &c.] If any part of my land was unjustly gained, or I have defrauded of their wages those who ploughed it. Bp. Patrick.

39. —have caused the owners thereof to lose their life:] Killing them, that so I might have quiet possession of it. Clark.

40. —thistles —cockle] What is precisely meant by the Hebrew words cannot be ascertained. In general, however, he imprecates barrenness upon his land. Scott.

This chapter deserves to be read and meditated upon with great attention; for it contains noble sentiments concerning the principal duties of religion, and particularly purity and chastity, justice and charity, the dread of God's judgments, alms, and compassion on the miserable, contempt of worldly goods, piety towards God, the love of our enemies, and confession of sins. If Job had such pure and exalted notions, and behaved with so much prudence and piety in his time; much more must it be the duty of Christians to think and act as he did. Ostervald.

Here ends the controversy between Job and his friends. The grand question in debate between them was, Whether Job was a sinner and a hypocrite, or not. Both parties draw their arguments from the providence of God, which, they both agreed, could not act wrong.

The friends represent his extraordinary calamities as a visible judgment on him for his sins: and because he had none that were publick and notorious, they at first insinuate, and afterwards plainly assert, that he must needs have been guilty of some secret bosom sin, and that of the deepest die, that could subject him to such extreme misery: for that God never afflicts in so remarkable manner, but for sins of great magnitude. For which they appeal to experience: "Recollect, I pray thee," says Eliphaz, "what innocent person ever perished? and when were the righteous cut off?" chap. iv. 7. "Behold," says Bildad, "God will not cast off the perfect man, neither will He help the evil doers," chap. viii. 20; and Zophar tells him bluntly, "Know therefore, that God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth!" chap. xi. 6.

Job, on the other hand, defends himself, by setting before them another view of Providence. He denies an exact retributive justice in this life, arguing from the general course of it; whereas they argued chiefly from extraordinary exceptions: they had seen a good man sometimes remarkably delivered; and oftentimes a wicked man remarkably punished. But he bids them reflect, how many they had known, who were notoriously wicked, and had nevertheless prospered a long time, and no extraordinary calamity befell them in the course of their lives, nor in their deaths. And though it was not so easy to discern who were really good, (a bad inside being often covered by a good outside,) yet he bids them consider what ravages were sometimes made, either by the pestilence or the sword; and they must needs be convinced that many good men must unavoidably suffer with the bad, in such great and general devastations. So that no certain conclusion could be drawn of men's being either good or bad, from what they enjoyed or what they suffered in this world. And therefore it was rash, and even wicked in them, to charge him with heinous sins, without any apparent foundation besides the greatness of his sufferings.

This is evidently the way of reasoning on both sides; and the leading object for Job's repeated wishes for an immediate trial before God with his accusers: and when that failed, his hope of a future resurrection at the day of judgment was, by such a solemn appeal, to convince them, if possible, of his innocence. Peters, Dr. Hales.

Chap. XXXII, XXXIII. When the opponents of Job had been put to silence, Elihu takes up the subject, and blames both parties: Job, for having been hurried away, by the violence of his feelings, "to strive against God;" his three adversaries, for having brought charges against Job which they could not prove. He solves the question between them, by affirming that calamity is not to be regarded as an evidence of guilt; but still, that even in the good there lurks a certain taint of sin of which themselves are not conscious; and that this must be corrected by some severe remedy, lest the righteous fall insensibly into impiety: and moreover, that these are salutary inflictions, not punishments. Rosenmüller.

7, 8. I said, Days should speak, &c.] I said, as in good manners I ought, those who are ancient and full of days should speak; and those who had the experience of many years, should be most able to teach wisdom to such as are younger: but I see, all is not in age; there is a Spirit of God which, breathing where it listeth, maketh a difference in men. *Bp. 8. — inspiration of the Almighty] The word used here, which we translate "inspiration," is used by Moses, Gen. ii. 7, to signify the inspiration or breath of life: and therefore we may justly take it to mean here, not what Christians call the grace of God, but rather that original ability of mind which God has given to man. Shuckford.

14. Now he hath not directed his words against me:] I am not engaged in this discourse, by any provoking words of Job, as you have been, but merely out of zeal for God, and love to truth, and a sincere desire to minister to Job matter both for conviction and comfort; neither will I answer him with such weak arguments and provoking language as you have used. Clark.

19. — as wine which hath no vent; it is ready to burst like new bottles.] Bottles made of skin were used anciently by most nations, and still are used in the East. It appears from a figure found among the ruins of Herculaneum, that, after the skin had been stripped off the animal, and properly dressed, the places where the legs had been, were strongly closed up; and where the neck was, an opening was left for receiving and discharging the contents of the bottle. Such bottles, when full, must have differed greatly from the same when empty. On receiving the liquor they must be greatly swollen and distended; and no doubt, they must be swollen still further by the fermentation of the liquor within them, as that advances to ripeness: so that in this state, if "no vent" be given to it, the liquor may overpower the strength of the bottle; or, by searching every crevice and weaker part, if it find any weaker part, it may penetrate by that. Hence arises the propriety of "putting new wine into new bottles," which, being in the prime of their strength, may resist the expansion, the internal pressure of their contents, and preserve the wine to due maturity; while old bottles may without danger contain old wine, the fermentation of which is already past. See Matt. ix. 17; Luke v. 38.

The Arabs use a larger kind of bottle, named Girba, which is thus described by Bruce: "A girba is an ox's skin squared, and the edges sewed together very artificially by a double seam, which does not let out water, much resembling that upon the best English cricket balls. An opening is left at the top of the girba, in the same manner as the bung-hole of a cask. Around this, the skin is gathered to the size of a large handful, which, when the girba is full of water, is tied round with whipcord. These girbas generally contain about sixty gallons each, and two of them are the load of a camel. They are then all besmeared on the outside with grease, as well to hinder the water from oozing through, as to prevent its being evaporated by the heat of the sun, which in fact happened to us twice, so as to put us in imminent danger of perishing by thirst." Fragments to Calmet.

22. For I know not to give flattering titles;] I dare not soothe and flatter any man in a false conceit: if I should do so, I know that God would be sure to be speedily avenged of me. Bp. Hall.

The protestation, here made by Elihu, that he would speak freely and impartially, should prompt us always to speak with sincerity, without being restrained by any regard to men; especially when the glory of God, and their good, require us to speak the truth. Ostervald.

Chap. XXXIII. ver. 4. The Spirit of God hath made me,] Creation being proper to the true God, the Holy Ghost, or Spirit of God, is therefore the true God. When God said, "Let Us make man," He spake to the Son and Holy Ghost, Gen. i. 26. Such a wonderful harmony is there betwixt all parts of Holy Scripture! Bp. Wilson.

Elihu here alludes to Gen. ii. 7. Rosenmüller.

6. — in God's stead:] To plead His cause against thee, and answer thee, as thou desiredst. Clark.

7. Behold, my terror shall not make thee afraid,] Look upon me; the combat is not unequal, as thou complainedst when thou lookedst upon God, chap ix. 34; xiii. 21: thou seest no dreadful majesty in me to affright thee, nor any power to oppress thee. Bp. Patrick.

10. Behold, he findeth occasions against me,] He seeks to overthrow all my purposes and pursuits. Rosenmüller.

These words are not taken exactly from the speeches of Job, but are charged upon him by Elihu, who puts this construction upon Job's words. The first branch of this sentence, "Behold, He findeth occasions against me," is not to be found in Job's speeches: and as for the other which occurs, chap. xiii. 24, "Wherefore hidest Thou thy face, and holdest me for Thine enemy?" though there may be something faulty in the expostulation, yet it is very much alleviated by those expressions of humility and self-abasement which immediately precede and follow it. See ver. 23, 25. Peters.

11. He putteth my feet in the stocks,] He presseth me with very close and sore afflictions. Caryl. See the note on chap. xiii. 27.

12. Behold, in this thou art not just:] Though in the former part of thy life thou mightest carry thyself without blame, yet in this thou deservest censure, that thou hast so obstinately maintained thy innocence, as if God dealt too hardly with thee. Clark.

misery. We ought therefore quietly to submit to His dispensations, as the very best. Bp. Wilson.

14. — God speaketh once, yea twice, &c.] Many times and divers ways God solicits and admonishes men; yet such is the dulness and security of their hearts, that they either do not, or will not, hear and understand them. Bp. Hall.

15—18. In a dream, in a vision of the night, &c.] Elihu having said in the former verse, that "God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not," proceeds to give an instance of the several ways by which God speaks to man: as first, ver. 15, in dreams and visions; for his instruction, ver. 16; next, to encourage repentance and humiliation, ver. 17; and lastly, to secure his safety, ver. 18. Caryl.

16, 17. Then he openeth the ears of men, &c.] Then and by these means He causeth men to hear, and imprinteth in their hearts His instructions; that He may prevail with man, to withdraw him from those evil courses and resolutions which he hath undertaken; and that He may convince him of his proud and insolent conceits, which he hath harboured in himself. Bp. Hall.

17. That he may withdraw man from his purpose,] Rather, his "doing," or "work," as in the margin; namely, all actions and words which proceed from pride, mentioned in the next clause, or from any other corrupt affection. Scott.

—— and hide pride from man.] That is, keep him humble. Want of true humility was Job's great fault. Elihu takes pains to convince him of this, but all in vain, till God awakened him, ch. xlii. 6; then he saw his fault and was humbled. Bp. Wilson.

18. — the pit,] This is one of the names of the sepulchral grot, denoting it to be a place of putrefaction. Scott.

19—22. He is chastened &c.] These verses point out the second method which the wisdom of God employs for the humiliation of man, and for the revelation of His mind unto him: God speaketh unto him by pain and sickness. Caryl.

22. — the destroyers.] The instruments of death and destruction: probably the diseases, which by God's appointment are ready to give the fatal blow. Poole. The sense of the verse is, There is but a step between him and his grave; the pangs of death being ready to seize upon him. Bp. Patrick.

23—26. If there be a messenger with him, &c.] When a man is thus soundly humbled, if a faithful messenger and minister of God, which is not easy to be found, shall shew that man his true estate, then will God be gracious to him. Bp. Hall.

—— a messenger] One sent by the providence of God, or by special commission from Him, to assist the sick man with his instructions and prayers. Scott.

—— an interpreter,] A rare person, that can expound the mind of God. Bp. Patrick.

"One among a thousand" is an expression to signify the difficulty of meeting with such a person. Chappelow.

—— his uprightness:] His duty; what right reason and religion required from a man in his situation; repentance, submission, and prayer to God for pardon. The instruction is supposed to be effectual; as appears from the following verses. Scott.

24. Then he is gracious unto him, &c.] God mercifully accepts his repentance, and saith, "Deliver him," that is, He shall be delivered, "from going down to the pit." Scott.

A blessing or benefit is here promised on God's part, which is deliverance from the ill consequences and punishment of sin: and though temporal death be here immediately intended, yet that is a type of our deliverance from eternal death, which is expressly promised in the Gospel. But then there is a condition required on our part: "If any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not," ver. 27. In which words are contained, first, a penitent confession of our sins to God: "If any say, I have sinned," that is, if he make a penitent confession of his sin to God: secondly, a true contrition for our sin, not only for fear of the pernicious consequences and the punishment that will follow it, implied in these words, "and it profited me not," for this is but a very imperfect contrition; but from a just sense of the evil nature of sin, and the fault and offence of it against God, that we have done contrary to right and our duty: "If any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right." Thus a true and perfect contrition for our sins is made a necessary condition of our deliverance from the punishment due to them. Abp. Tillotson.

—— I have found a ransom.] Or, "an atonement," as in the margin. Whatever is a means of averting punishment, and conciliating the Divine favour, is termed in Scripture an atonement. The intercession of Moses, Exod. xxxii. 30; and the act of Phinehas, Numb. xxv. 13; are so called: and here the sick man's repentance. See Ecclus. xxxv. 3. Scott.

25. His flesh shall be fresher &c.] A beautiful description of the sick man's recovery. The word, translated "shall be fresher," is an elegant metaphor from plants; which, having been withered by a long drought, recover their vigour and verdure on the falling of a shower of rain. Scott.

—— fresher than a child's:] This was probably a proverbial form of expression. Compare 2 Kings v. 14. Schultens, Chappelow.

26. He shall pray unto God,] Prayer is a duty never out of season, yet at some times more in season than at others, and most of all in time of affliction: "Is any man afflicted? let him pray," James v. 13. And among all afflictions, that of sickness seems to be a special call for this duty; therefore in the fourteenth verse of the same chapter, soon after the Apostle had said, "Is any afflicted? let him pray;" he adds, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him." But to desire others to pray for us in bodily sickness, and neglect it ourselves, is an ill symptom of a sick soul: the prayers of others are rarely beneficial to any, unless they either pray, or have a desire to pray, for themselves. Caryl.

27, 28. He looketh upon men, and if any say, &c.] The marginal reading is, "He shall look upon men, and say, I have sinned, &c. He hath delivered my soul from going into the pit, and my life shall see the light." The passage may be thus paraphrased: And he, as becomes a true penitent, casting his eyes upon his neighbours, shall openly confess and say, I have offended God, and He hath justly chastised me; I have done wickedly, and He hath punished me according to my desert: but hath redeemed me from that death into which I was going; and not only made me live, but given me hope that I shall enjoy prosperous days. Bp. Patrick.

The words of his confessional and thanksgiving hymn, or rather the substance and burden of it, are, "I have sinned, &c." Scott.

28. — his life shall see the light.] Shall be prolonged in comfort and prosperity. Clark.

30. To bring back his soul from the pit,] He repeats, from ver. 18, the merciful design of Divine admonitions and corrections, in order to fix the persuasion of it in the mind of Job. Eliphaz and Zophar had hinted this, chap. v. 17, 18; and xi. 11, 12. But Elihu expatiates on the subject. His aim likewise differs from theirs. The exclaiming of a wicked man, such as they supposed Job to be, was the point they had in view; whereas Elihu speaks of those Divine rebukes, applied to the cure of faults which are not inconsistent with general goodness. Scott.

Job seems to have considered the subject in this view; for when he is called upon "to answer, if he had any thing to say," by Elihu his youthful but friendly monitor, who, unlike the rest, "desired to justify him" where he was right, and to "teach him wisdom" where he was wrong, ver. 31—33, he held his peace; and listened in respectful silence to his sage admonitions, though rather severe, without attempting any reply. Dr. Hales.

CHAP. XXXIV. As Job makes no reply to Elihu, being conscious probably that he was in part, at least, obnoxious to the charge brought against him, Elihu renews the subject, and shews, in answer to Job's complaints, that it is the height of presumption to impute injustice to God; who, as the Governour of the world, if He were not influenced by kindness in His conduct towards His creatures, but were to deal with them according to His power, would utterly destroy them. Elihu remarks farther, how indecorous and rash it is to accuse of injustice a Being, infinite in wisdom as well as power. Rosenmüller.

Ver. 1. — answered and said,] Rather, "spake and said," as ch. iii. 2, and xxxv. 1; for none had replied to Elihu. Dr. Durell.

4. Let us choose to us judgment:] Elihu requests here that Job's friends would proceed judiciously and fairly in the cause before them. Caryl.

5. See note on chap. xxvii. 2.

6. Should I lie against my right?] Rather, I am disappointed or frustrated of my right. Dr. Durell.

7. What man is like Job, &c.] There is no man, that pretends to be wise and holy as Job, who would thus expose himself to the scorn of the world in his insolent challenges; or would thus turn off the grave admonitions of his friends with scorn and contempt. Bp. Hall.

Elihu's expressions may seem too severe in this place. They are only a strong way of saying, that Job's complaints were too much akin to those of atheistical men, who revile Providence, and ridicule religion. Scott.

8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity,] Who speaks of God's service and dispensations as wicked men are wont to do, ver. 9, as if he were one of their society; and acts like the wicked when God afflicts them. Clark.

9. For he hath said, It profiteth a man nothing &c.] Job, so far from using such infidel language, had entered his protest against it, chap. xxi. 14—16. Notwithstanding which, his complaint of hard measure from God, and of the frustration of all the hopes he had formed of a reward to his virtue, would scarce admit of any other construction. ment is founded on the sovereignty of God over all men; the sum and force of it may be stated thus: He cannot do injustice to any, who of right possesseth an absolute power to do what He will towards men. But God hath such a power; therefore He cannot do any injustice. Caryl.

14, 15. If he set his heart upon man, &c.] If God should resolve to deal with man according to His absolute power; if He should call back that life and soul which He hath given him; there would be no abiding, all flesh would perish at once. Bp. Hall.

17. Shall even he that hateth right govern? &c.] "What? shall He who hateth right" (as Job in his impatience had supposed God to do) "govern? and wilt thou condemn Him who is evidently just?" That is, Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Parkhurst.

17—19. Shall even he that hateth right govern? &c.] Miss Smith, in her translation of this passage, by a close adherence to the original, has given an excellent sense to the whole. She renders these verses thus:

> Shall He who hateth right govern?
> And wilt thou condemn Him who aboundeth in justice?
> Who saith to the king, Thou art unprofitable;
> Wicked to the nobles:
> Who lifteth not up the faces of princes,
> Nor turneth away from the cry of the poor;
> For they are all the work of His hands. Dr. Magee.

20. In a moment shall they die, &c.] He shall fetch away the great commanders of the earth at a time when it is least expected; even in the deepest security shall He cause astonishment and tumult in the death of the mighty ones. Bp. Hall.

22. There is no darkness, &c.] Not death itself shall conceal "the workers of iniquity" from the eye of God, or withdraw them from His justice. Men may flatter themselves, if they please, with the hope of annihilation; but they will find themselves fatally disappointed when they come to make trial of the other state. Peters.

23. — that he should enter into judgment with God.] That man should therefore have any just cause of contention with God, or any ground of evil against Him. Bp. Hall.

24. — without number,] "Without searching," as in the margin; without a formal process, which He needeth not. Parkhurst.

25. Therefore he knoweth their works, &c.] Forasmuch as God overturneth them, it is an argument that He knoweth what they are, and what they have been doing. Caryl.

— in the night,] Suddenly, unexpectedly. Caryl.

26. He striketh them as wicked men &c.] This is a metaphor taken from publick executions, which are performed in publick places, amidst a variety of spectators, for the sake of the example. Heath.

Their punishment is open and exemplary. It is the triumph of Providence over tyrants. The expressions of the sacred writer allude to the publick execution of malefactors. What is translated, "in the open sight of others," is, in the original, in the place of spectators. And what is rendered "He striketh them," is literally, He clappeth His hands at them, as in chap. xxvii. 23, and in the last verse of the present chapter. It is a gesture of exultation and derision. Compare Lam. ii. 15; Ezek. xxv. 6. Scott.

29. When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?] If He shows favour to the poor and oppressed persons last mentioned, or to any other persons or people, as it follows in the latter part of the verse; or if He withdraws His favour and assistance from them, and thereby exposes them to oppression and calamity; no man or creature can hinder God's design and work. Poole.

30. That the hypocrite reign not, &c.] Yea, not only does God execute His judgments upon the people, but also upon the great potentates of the earth, striking wicked tyrants with His plagues, lest the people should be too much oppressed by their injustice. Bp. Hall.

thy conceits? If you and I should determine what were fit for Him to do, He would still take what course He thought best, whether we liked or disliked it. Bp. Hall.

36, 37. My desire is &c.] My desire is, that Job's speeches concerning God's providence may be fully scanned, till the point be brought to an issue; because he speaks in behalf of the wicked, teaching them how to argue against God and His providence, quarrelling with God, justifying himself in the evil he hath spoken, and insulting over us. Clark.

37. For he addeth rebellion &c.] Job's discontent with the measures of Providence towards him broke out in his very first speech, grew more loud and vehement in the course of the dispute, and arrived to its height in his presumptuous challenge of God, chap. xxxi. 35—37. This progress and increase are what Elihu marks by the expression, "he addeth rebellion unto his sin." The phraseology denotes continual augmentation; like that in Ps. lxix. 27, "add iniquity unto their iniquity." Compare Ps. lxxxiv. 7. Scott.

—— he clappeth his hands &c.] He exults not only over his three opponents, but also over God Himself, particularly in chap. xxxi. 35—37. Scott.

Chap. XXXV. Elihu, who has undertaken to instruct at the same time both Job and his friends, observes that our piety can be of no advantage, nor our wickedness injurious to the Deity; but that God punishes the wicked for the sake of mankind, though not so quickly as the impatient sufferers expect, who in their misery are apt to forget all former blessings, and the being who bestowed them. Michaelis.

Ver. 2. Thinkest thou this to be right, &c.] By insisting so much on your own righteousness, and complaining of God's dealings with thee, thou in effect makest thyself more righteous than God. Clark.

4—8. I will answer thee, &c.] As if Elihu had said, I know that neither thy sins can do any hurt to God, nor can thy righteousness do Him any good; but thy sins may hurt thee, and thy righteousness advantage thyself: therefore lay aside such wicked and desperate thoughts as these. Caryl.

4. — and thy companions] For they also had erred with Job, in supposing that temporal prosperity ought to be annexed by the justice of God to piety and virtue; they differed only as to the fact, whether it really was so in Job's case. Elihu combats the principle, that the Almighty is obliged, by any regard to His own interest or happiness, to distribute reward or punishment. Bp. Stock.

5. Look unto the heavens, &c.] This is a sublime sentiment in a plain dress. One view, says he, of the magnificent scenery of the lofty sky will extinguish all low conceptions of its almighty Author. It will strike the mind with a vast idea of His infinite superiority to all other beings, and of the impossibility of His gaining or suffering by the good or bad behaviour of His reasonable creatures. Scott.

6. If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him?] If thou sinnest, what dost thou hurt Him? Is His holiness, justice, power, the less, because thou hast transgressed? Is aught diminished from His essence by this offence? Bp. Hall.

9. By reason of the multitude of oppressions &c.] This offended Job: the poor cry, and they have no helper, no deliverer. See chap. xxiv. 12. Elihu grants these general truths, that many are oppressed, that many cry out under their oppressions, and that many remain undelivered from, and unrelieved in their oppressions. God seems sometimes not to regard the cries of the afflicted, nor does He presently take vengeance on oppressors according to their folly; yet he acquits God of any such imputation as the words of Job seem to insinuate. "The oppressed cry," (saith Elihu,) but not with a right frame of heart; they cry, rather as oppressed with the weight of their own sufferings, than as touched with a sense of their sins, or reverence for the sovereignty of God, who has given them up to the power of their oppressors; or as having faith in Him for their deliverance, or quiet submission to His will: these may either be said not to pray at all, or they pray not with such holy aims and designs, with such integrity and uprightness of heart, as become the people of God. They pray under the control of impatience, or moved with envy at the power of their adversaries, or with a desire of the utmost revenge; and therefore God takes no notice of their prayers, ver. 12, 13, "There they cry, but none giveth answer; surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it." Caryl.

10. But none saith, &c.] Many make formal flourishes, but none heartily acknowledge the powerful and just hand of God, who gives due and seasonable comfort to the soul, in the deepest and darkest night of our sorrows. Bp. Hall.

When God avengeth not the oppressed, it is to be attributed to their want of piety: He neglecteth them, because they neglect Him. They murmur, but they do not pray; they are clamorous, but they are not humble. Bp. Stock.

11. Who teacheth us more &c.] By bestowing the noble gift of reason, God hath qualified us for religion; and laid us under the highest obligation to be religious. Scott.

12. There they cry, &c.] The oppressed cry for help; yet as they are wicked men, who still cherish the pride of their hearts against God, God regards them not. Clark.

14. Although thou sayest thou shalt not see him, &c.] Although thou sayest, that God gives thee no assurance of His presence by any sensible demonstration; yet He will be sure to execute true, though secret judgment, in all the cases of men: and therefore acknowledge thou Him, and trust in Him. Bp. Hall.

15, 16. But now, because it is not so, &c.] But now, because it is not so, namely, that Job humbleth himself before God, and trusts in Him for deliverance, He hath visited in His anger: yet though Job is in great extremity of suffering, he is not brought thereby to the knowledge of God and himself: and hence it is manifest, that he pours forth complaints without success; thereby discovering his ignorance of God and himself. Clark.

Chap. XXXVI, XXXVII. In this last address to Job, Elihu brings forward no new assertion or saying of his to be proved against him; nor does he reprove Job for any new fault: but insists on the proof of what himself had asserted before, to shew that God is righteous, which he does by looking through the various works of God, those especially which are wrought on high, the meteors of the airy region, the rain, the snow, the lightning, and the thunder; which all declare, as the wisdom and power, so the justice and righteousness of God, who proclaims by these teachers how terrible He is, and will be to wilful and impenitent sinners. Caryl.

Chap. XXXVI. ver. 3. —from afar,] From God's wonderful works in nature since the beginning of the world, ver. 26, and chap. xxxvii. Clark.

4. For truly my words shall not be false:] Be assured that I will not seek to baffle thee with sophistical arguments: he that discourses with thee is none of those subtle disputers, but loves sincere and solid reason. Bp. Patrick.

6. He preserveth not the life of the wicked:] Suffers them not all to go unpunished; but will, in due time, execute judgment upon them. Clark.

7. He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous:] He neither forgets nor neglects to reward them, though never so poor and afflicted: these righteous poor are sometimes advanced by God to royal dignity, 1 Sam. ii. 8; Psal. cxiii. 7, 8; and continue in their dignity, yea, and increase in it in spite of all opposition. Clark.

8—10. And if they be bound in fetters, &c.] Though all afflictions are evils in themselves, yet they are good for us, because they discover to us our disease, and tend to our cure. They are a sensible argument and conviction to us of the evil and danger of sin. We are not sufficiently sensible how great an evil sin is, till we feel the dismal effects and consequences of it. And therefore to rectify our apprehensions concerning it, God makes us to suffer by it. Thus Elihu describes the happy effects of affliction in these verses. God doth but invite and intreat us by His mercies, but His judgments have a more powerful and "commanding" voice. When He "holds man in cords of affliction, then He openeth their ear to discipline." In prosperity we are many times incapable of counsel and instruction, but when we are under God's correcting hand, then we are fit to be spoken with. Abp. Tillotson.

10. He openeth also their ear to discipline,] To fit them for instruction, that they may listen to God's chastening. Caryl.

12. — they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge.] They shall die by some violent death for their folly, because they would not learn by God's correction. Clark.

13—15. But the hypocrites in heart &c.] The difference between him who makes a specious display of piety, and him who possesses it in sincerity, is manifested by the effect of afflictions on each. The hypocrite, while under chastisement, is so far from calling on God suppliantly, that he provokes Him more and more to anger by an obstinate refusal to amend: hence he comes to an untimely end, and is involved in the same destruction with the most abandoned; see chap. xxvii. 8. The righteous, on the contrary, as being more open to instruction, when they have been taught by misfortunes, are delivered by God out of their troubles. Rosenmüller.

17. But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked:] Thou hast fully pleaded the cause of the wicked, and justified their hard and reproachful speeches, uttered in rage against God, condemning Him, and justifying themselves. The just indignation of God hath already seized upon thee. Clark.

19. — not gold, nor all the forces of strength.] These words would be more intelligible, if they were rendered, as they might be, "not gold, nor all the powers of wealth." Dr. Durell.

20. Desire not the night,] Do not thou wish for the night, as thinking that that silent and quiet time might give thee ease from thy thoughts, while thou hast to do with a God, who can in an instant cut off whole nations, much more thee, who art but a weak and frail man. Bp. Hall.

21. Take heed, regard not iniquity: &c.] Thou hast rather chosen to tax the proceedings of God in thy weak impatience, than meekly to suffer His infliction. Bp. Hall.

22, 23. Behold, God exalteth by his power: &c.] Elihu, by this commendation of the power and wisdom of God, seems to comfort Job in the hope of better things if he would hearken to his counsel: for as God had greatly afflicted and broken him, so He was as mighty to heal those breaches and deliver him: He only waited to see him in a better frame of mind, that He might be gracious; see Isai. xxx. 18. Caryl.

23. Who hath enjoined him his way?] This passage ought to be rendered, "Who can charge Him with His way, or, animadvert upon Him for His way?" Dr. Durell.

24. Remember that thou magnify his work, which men behold.] The Creator doubtless did not bestow so much curiosity, and exquisite workmanship and skill upon His creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye; especially to have them slighted or contemned: but to be admired by the rational part of the world, to magnify His own power, wisdom, and goodness, throughout all the world, and the ages thereof. The more we search and discover of His works, the greater and more glorious we find them to be; the more worthy of, and the more expressly to proclaim, their great Creator. To make such researches then is to answer the ends, for which God hath bestowed so much art, power, and wisdom about His works, as well as given us senses to view and survey them, and an understanding and curiosity to search into them: it is to follow and trace Him, where and whither He leads us, that we may see and admire His handy work ourselves, and set it forth to others, that they may see, admire, and praise it also. Such is the recommendation of Elihu: "Remember that thou magnify His work, which men behold. Every man may see it; man may behold it afar off." Dr. Derham.

This verse ought to have begun a new chapter: for it begins a new head of discourse, which is continued to the end of the ensuing chapter. The subject is the incomprehensible wisdom and power of God, in forming the meteors of rain, thunder, &c. and using them to serve the ends of His moral government. The scope of the discourse is, to convince Job of his ignorance of the ways of Providence, by his ignorance of the works of creation; and to humble him for his presumption in finding fault with what he did not, could not, understand. Scott.

—— his work,] The visible creation, the heavens in particular; in which He has made manifest His eternal power and Godhead, Ps. xix. 1; cii. 25; Rom. i. 20. Scott.

27. For he maketh small the drops of water: they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof:] This passage may be rendered, "For He maketh small the drops of water, which poureth down rain through His vapour." Dr. Durell.

29—31. Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, &c.] "The spreadings of the clouds;" that is, the covering of the sky with clouds, the prelude to a thunder storm. By "His tabernacle" are meant, the clouds; see Psal. xviii. 11. Scott.

It is wonderful to observe with what a variety of natural and sublime expressions the thunder is described to us in this book, and all of them with reference to the Deity; as "the noise of His tabernacle;" the "murmurs of His mouth;" that "by which He judgeth His people;" and the like. Peters.

30. Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it,] Behold, when the heaven is overcast with clouds, He sendeth forth His bright beams, and enlighteneth and cheereth the face thereof; and again He sendeth such gloomy and dark clouds, that the blackness and obscurity thereof shade even to the bottom of the sea. Bp. Hall.

Or, "Behold, He spreads upon it," that is, the cloud, "His light," or lightning; "and overspreads," namely with the lustre of it, "the bottom of the sea." Parkhurst.

Hall.*

Chap. XXXVII. ver. 1. At this] At the consideration of the thunder. Bp. Hall, Clark.

2. Hear attentively the noise of his voice,] So as to observe God's great power manifested therein. It seems not improbable, that while Elihu was speaking, it thundered greatly: and that that tempest began, with which God ushered in His speech. Bp. Hall, Clark.

4. — with the voice of his excellency;] With His majestick voice. Dr. Durell.

—— he will not stay them when his voice is heard.] He will not check the rain and storm, (chap. xxxvi. 27, &c.) which come quickly after the thunder. Clark.

7. He sealeth up the hand of every man;] He stops the labour of those whose business is in the fields; and maketh the husbandmen know that He disposeth of all things as He pleaseth. Bp. Patrick.

8. Then the beasts go into dens, &c.] The low grounds are covered with water; the beasts of prey flee to the caverns of the mountains for safety; they couch there, and watch impatiently for the drying of the valleys. Scott.

9. Out of the south &c.] The marginal rendering is juster. The period will then be, "Out of the chamber cometh the storm, and cold from the scattering or dispersing winds." The "chamber," or rather the "secret chamber," denotes those unknown regions, whence the winds have their origin: or the meaning may be, that winds are part of the treasures of God, always in readiness whenever He pleases to employ them; see Ps. cxxxv. 7; cxlviii. 8. The "dispersing" winds are supposed to be those which blow from the northern points, and by scattering the clouds or dissolving them, make such a clear sky in sharp frosty weather, as is described in ver. 11. These three verses are a description of stormy, cold, and frosty weather: winds cold and freezing are still among "the great things which God doeth, and which we cannot comprehend." Scott.

10. — and the breadth of the waters is straitened.] Those rivers, which before had no confinement or restraint, but were at liberty to enlarge and widen their surface, are now retarded in their course. Chappelow. Snow, cold, frost, and ice, were no strangers in Judea, which bordered on Arabia Petrea, supposed by some to be Job's country, 1 Chron. xi. 22; Ps. cxlvii. 16, 17: nor yet in Arabia Petrea; see chap. vi. 16. It may be thought incredible, that there should ever be such severe cold in those warm climates as to freeze lakes and rivers. But Mr. Dawes informs us, that in the year 1756-7, at Aleppo, they had a very sharp winter, which destroyed all the fruits of the earth. The cold was so very intense, that the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer, exposed a few minutes to the open air, sunk entirely into the ball of the tube. Millions of olive trees, that had withstood the severity of fifty winters, were blasted in this; and thousands of souls perished merely from cold. Was not this a frost sufficient to freeze a lake or river? and yet Aleppo is so warm a climate, that the same author tells us, they were obliged to sleep on the terrace of their houses in the summer. Scott.

11. Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud:] He expends all the moisture of the thick cloud in watering the earth. Bp. Hall.

Rather, "Even by serenity He wearieth the thick cloud." Chappelow.

—— he scattereth his bright cloud:] Rather, "He scattereth the cloud by his light or darkness." Dr. Durell.

The whole verse may be thus translated, "Also the clear sky dispelleth the thick cloud, His sun scattereth the extended clouds." We have here a picture of the sky in a clear sharp freezing day. Scott.

12. And it is turned round about by his counsels: &c.] The unsettled and irregular motions of the clouds proceed, not from any power of their own, but from His superiour direction: they, like all other created things, may be said in some sense to receive their commission from their Maker. Chappelow.

13. He causeth it to come, whether for correction, &c.] The moral use, which God makes of meteors, wind, rain, &c. can be but twofold. They are either for correction or for mercy. The situation of the words, "or for His land," between those members of the partition, seems very uncouth, and perplexes the sense. A small transposition will render the period clear and easy:

Whether for correction or for mercy,
Verily for His earth He causeth it to come. Scott.

—— it] That is, the work which He commandeth the meteors to do upon the habitable parts of the earth. Scott.

14 Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

23 Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out: he is excellent in power, and in judgment, and in plenty of justice: he will not afflict.

24 Men do therefore fear him: he respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

It deserves our regard, that all the works of nature are prepared by God to be His instruments, either for judgment or for mercy: "The treasures of snow and hail are reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war, chap. xxxviii. 22, 23. Bp. Sherlock.

14. Hearken unto this, O Job:] Hearken unto this discourse of God's various proceedings: then say, whether it be fit to murmur against so great a Being; and whether it be possible for thee to comprehend His secret counsels, who canst not comprehend His ordinary works. Clark.

15. Dost thou know when God disposed them,] He means God's disposing of His "wondrous works" or operations, ver. 14, in such a manner as to produce such and such effects. Scott.

——caused the light of his cloud to shine?] Caused the light to illuminate the cloud. Dr. Durell.

Or "caused his luminous clouds to shine."] He means perhaps those bright clouds, fringed with gold, and stained with the richest tints, which often in a summer evening attend the setting sun. Some eminent commentators explain this passage of the rainbow; but the expressions may appear too vague to allow that limitation. Scott.

16. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds, &c.] The clouds remain suspended, so long as their pressure is exactly balanced by the counter pressure of the air, which is underneath them. When the equipoise is destroyed, they often precipitate in rain. But the law of the equilibrium, and the causes which destroy the balance, are so mysterious in their operation, that our knowledge of these matters is extremely superficial. Scott.

17. How thy garments are warm, &c.] How comes it to pass, that the air is so hot, as that thou canst not bear thy clothes, when, in a calm season, the south sun shines upon thee, and the warm southern winds blow in thy face? Bp. Hall.

He describes an Arabian noonday in the height of summer, when the sun is in his full strength, and not a breath of wind stirring to cool the sultry air. The word "wind" is not in the original. "The south" means the south quarter of the heavens, when the sun is in the meridian. The excessive heat, and bright transparency of the air, in a summer's noon, especially in the warmer climates, perplex philosophy with many difficult questions. Scott.

18.—which is strong, and as a molten looking glass?] Which seems to us so firm and solid, as if it were a mirror of some strong polished metal. Bp. Hall.

The Eastern mirrors are of polished steel, and for the most part convex. Sir J. Chardin.

Polished steel has much of that brilliant deep blue gray cast, which is very striking in an Arabian sky, of whose depth of tint we are very incompetent judges: in fact, the higher we ascend on mountains, the deeper, the blacker, the sky becomes; so that, as Mr. de Saussure informs us, the deepest blue riband was hardly deep enough. We may therefore understand this passage, as speaking of an atmosphere, extended, resplendent, clear, brilliant as a mirror, polished with the utmost skill and assiduity. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

19. Teach us what we shall say &c.] These concluding verses are the peroration; wherein he represents to Job the rashness and danger of disputing with God; sets forth the incomprehensibility of the schemes of Providence; insists that they are planned and executed with most perfect equity and justice; and exhorts him and all mankind, to annihilate themselves before their Maker, in profoundest reverence of His adorable majesty. Scott.

20.—if a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up.] If a man will be opposing Him in his speech, and questioning His justice, surely he shall be confounded. Bp. Hall.

21. And now men see not the bright light &c.] Rather, And now men see not the light, which is bright above (or within) the clouds, till the wind passeth and cleanseth them. Dr. Durell.

21, 22.—men see not] Or, men cannot look at the bright line which is in the sky, when the wind hath passed and cleansed it. That is, when the sky is in such a clear and dazzling state as he had described, ver. 18. He beautifully applies that resplendent image to the purpose of shewing the insufferable splendour of the Divine majesty. Scott.

If men be not able with their weak eyes to behold the brightness of the sun, which shineth in the light clouds when the wind passes through and disperses them, and when the air is cleared by the north winds; how shall they be able to stand before God, and to hold contention with Him, whose majesty is terrible beyond the powers of our apprehension? Bp. Hall.

22.—with God is terrible majesty.] Rather, Above is God of tremendous majesty. Dr. Durell.

23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out:] This great and worthy sentiment is the sum of his whole speech in justification of God. The incomprehensibility and infinite perfection of God silence all objections to His government. This is a sufficient answer even to those two perplexing difficulties in the measures of Providence, which Job had started; the destruction of the righteous with the wicked in general calamities, and the prosperity of so many profligate men to the very end of their lives. "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are His ways higher than our ways, and His thoughts than our thoughts," Isai. lv. 9; and the ways and thoughts of an infinitely perfect Being cannot be otherwise than right. Scott.

——in plenty of justice:] Rather, plenteous in justice. Dr. Durell.

——he will not afflict.] Willingly, (Lam. iii. 33,) or without just cause, or beyond what is necessary. Clark.

24. Men do therefore fear him: &c.] The best wisdom of man is but foolishness to Him: He makes no reckoning therefore of that vain wisdom, with the conceit of which men are wont to please themselves. Bp. Hall.

rain, clouds, the winds, and the various seasons of the year. In all these things we discover, first, the infinite power of God; and next, His wisdom, justice, and goodness: since God makes use of all these things, and of their different effects, as means to promote the good and happiness of mankind; and sometimes He makes them serve as instruments of correction. We are here therefore called upon to consider attentively the wonderful manner in which the world is governed: and to make use of the mercies which God vouchsafes us, and of His chastening dispensations, which are all designed to teach us to know and fear Him. Here ends the dispute between Job and his friends. Osterwald.

"Let men therefore fear Him who beholdeth all the wise in heart as nothing." This great instruction is the point of aim throughout Elihu's speech: this is the sublime moral of the whole poem. To establish this primary duty of all religion by His own authority, the Deity Himself at last appears; the design of whose speech to Job is to reduce him to this reverent submission, and by his example to enforce it upon all others. Scott.

Chap. XXXVIII—XLII. Jehovah Himself is introduced with an answer to Job, which shall bring his mind to a better temper, and fit him for his restoration. The manner in which this latter part of the poem is conducted, has been well delineated by Scott.

"The design of this appearance of the Almighty is not to vindicate the injured character of Job. That is done by a second appearance, which was afterwards made to Eliphaz singly, chap. xlii. 7, 9; and which comes not within the limits of the poem.

"Neither is the design of this speech to decide the controversy in the dialogues about the ways of Providence: for the decision of that dispute was not intended by the poem, but was reserved for the subsequent history. The scope of the speech is to humble Job; and to teach others by his example to acquiesce implicitly in the disposals of God, from an unbounded confidence in His wisdom, equity, and goodness. This surely is an end worthy of the interposition of the Deity.

"The method taken in the speech to accomplish its design, is a series of questions and descriptions relative to natural things, admirably fitted to convince this complainant, and all others, of their incapacity to judge of God's moral administration, and of the danger of striving with their Maker." Bp. Stock.

The Almighty's speech, in this and the following chapters, is by much the finest part of the noblest and most ancient poem in the world. Bp. Patrick says, Its grandeur is as much above all other poetry, as thunder is louder than a whisper. Longinus has a chapter on interrogations, which shews that they contribute much to the sublime. This speech of the Almighty is made up of them. Interrogation seems indeed the proper style of Majesty incensed. It differs from other manner of reproof, as bidding a person execute himself does from a common execution: for he that asks the guilty a proper question, makes him in effect pass sentence on himself. Dr. Young.

Chap. XXXVIII. ver. 1. Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind,] No sooner had Elihu spoken the foregoing words, but there was a sensible token of the presence of that most dreadful majesty of God, chap. xxxvii. 22. For there arose an unusual cloud, and a voice came out of it as loud as a tempest, which addressed itself to Job. It is probable that God appeared and spoke to Job in this manner, partly because this was His usual method in those times, as we see, Exod. xix. 18; Numb. ix. 15, 16: see also 1 Kings xix. 11; Ezek. i. 4: and partly that Job and his friends might be more thoroughly humbled and abased within themselves, and prepared the better to receive, and longer to retain, the instructions which God was about to give them. Bp. Patrick, Poole.

2. — that darkeneth counsel &c.] Who by his vain and ignorant speeches throws a cloud, as far as he is able, over the minds of men, concerning the purposes of God in the administration of human affairs. Capellus.

3. Gird up now thy loins like a man; &c.] Prepare thyself for the combat with Me, which thou hast often desired, like a valiant man who means to grapple with his adversary. Clark.

4. Where wast thou &c.] The sentiment conveyed in these striking interrogations is, that He alone, who made the world, is capable of judging how it ought to be governed. This and the three following verses speak of the creation of the earth; and in terms of Architecture, which denote exact proportion, nice arrangement, and durable solidity. Scott.

7. — the morning stars] That is, the holy angels, glorious and shining like the morning star. Compare 1 Kings xxii. 19; Dan. xii. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 41; Luke xx. 36. Parkhurst.

8—11. Or who shut up the sea &c.] The waters were coeval with the earth, and covered it in the beginning. The gathering of them together into a proper receptacle was the great work of the third day of creation. They then took the denomination of "seas," or "the sea;" and likewise retained the name of "the deep." This operation of Almighty power, together with the measures taken to prevent the sea from overflowing the earth, is the subject of these four verses. Scott.

8. — with doors,] See also ver. 10, "And set bars and doors." The shores, Prov. viii. 29; Jer. v. 22; promontories in particular, and high rocky coast, are a restraint upon the ocean, and a security to the earth. These are the "barred doors," which in part keep the waters of the sea within the bounds assigned to them. Scott.

—— when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb?] Simply thus: "when it brake forth, issuing out of the womb." Dr. Durell. The subject here is the collection of part of the mass of waters into a channel, to form the sea and surround the earth. "The womb" therefore, out of which the waters of the sea issued, seems to have been the subterraneous abyss; the sea under ground, as the Arabs call it. Scott.

9. When I made — thick darkness a swaddlingband for it,] Rather, "a swaddlingcloth:" when I enveloped it in thick clouds for its immediate clothing, and surrounded it by extensive darkness as a wrapper, involving it wholly. It was a custom among the ancients, when they had washed a new-born child, to wrap it in a cloth. Fragments to Calmet.

The eruption of the sea from the great abyss, was compared, in the preceding verse, to the breaking forth of an infant out of the womb. This image is naturally followed by the "garment" and the "swaddlingband," to which are resembled those thick and dark clouds, that frequently arise over the sea, and encompass it. Scott.

10. And brake up for it my decreed place,] In the margin we read, "and established my decree upon it;" which is a much better sense. Dr. Durell. The phrase is of the same import as that in Prov. viii. 29. The decree, which God imposed on the mighty ocean, is that wonderful law of gravitation in fluids, by which, all the parts of them exerting an equal pressure upon one another, the equilibrium of the whole mass is maintained. Scott.

11. And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, &c.] There is a character of great magnificence in all that precedes; but this is signally sublime. We are struck with admiration to see the vast and ungovernable ocean receiving commands, and punctually obeying them: to find it, like a managed horse, raging, tossing, and foaming but by the rule and direction of its Master. Dr. Young.

12—15. Hast thou commanded the morning &c.] Raise up thy thoughts still higher, and tell Me, dost thou remember since the morning light was made? Bp. Patrick.

12. — since thy days;] These words imply, that this had taken place before the birth of Job, and that the settled course of nature had been ordained by God from the creation of the world. Rosenmüller.

—— and caused the dayspring to know his place;] "The morning" and "the dayspring" are but two different names for one and the same thing; break of day until sunrising. Its regular appearance in the East is here marked. In the first sentence of verse 13, the diffusion of the morning light over the whole face of the earth is expressed by the beautiful figure of "taking hold of the ends of the earth." In the second sentence, the moral benefit of the morning to mankind is noticed: "that the wicked might be shaken out of it." In those times and countries the courts of justice sat in the morning, Judges vi. 31; Ps. ci. 8; Jer. xxi. 12. Scott. Or, as Dr. Hammond argues, the passage more probably refers to the dispersing of those, whom the darkness of the night encourages to wickedness; thieves, treacherous persons, and others, whom the light would discover. Chappelow.

14. It is turned as clay to the seal;] Or, "It," that is, the earth, "is changed as clay by the seal." During the darkness of the night, the earth is a perfect blank; in which state it resembles clay that has no impression. By the morning light falling upon the earth, innumerable objects make their appearance upon it: it is then changed, like clay which has received the stamp of the seal. Such appears to be the meaning of this elegant simile. Sealing upon clay is still practised in the East. When the corn-granary at Grand Cairo, belonging to the Sultan, is full, the inspectors, says Norden, having shut the door, put on their seal upon a handful of clay, which they make use of instead of wax. Scott.

—— and they stand as a garment.] All things upon the earth present themselves to our view, and are like a garment, with which the earth is, as it were, clad and adorned. Clark. Or, men, especially guilty malefactors, are shifted by the breaking forth of the light, like so many separate garments. Bp. Hall.

15. And from the wicked their light is withholden, &c.] By a bold figure the wicked are here said to be deprived of their light, when the morning has dispelled the darkness; for darkness is light to them, whose "high arm" is said to be "broken:" because in the morning they lose their boldness, and hide themselves through fear; but in the night they are daring and resolute. Rosenmüller.

16. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? &c.] We now descend into the lower parts of the earth. For it should seem that by "the sea," or "deep," we are to understand the sea below ground, the waters of the great abyss: and that by "the gates of death," and "the doors of the shadow of death," is meant the entrance into Sheol, the world of departed spirits, which these men supposed to be placed under the waters of the abyss. Scott.

God, by the display of His omnipotence, not only shews Job what large amends He could make good men for all their sufferings in the great day of the resurrection; but hints to him by the question, that He could as easily do it before, and admit them to what degree of happiness He pleased immediately on their dissolution. "Hast thou," says God, "looked into Sheol, the intermediate state, the region of departed spirits? Hast thou seen how the souls of men are disposed of after death, and how amply the afflictions of good men may be made up to them there? What room then for such complaints as thou hast now been uttering?" This seems to be the drift of the question. In short, the great lesson which we are to learn from this Divine speech, and the decision here put to the controversy, is, that our disputes about the providence of God proceed from ignorance and folly; that the first duty of a creature is to resign himself to the will of his Creator; to do His commands with pleasure; receive His dispensations with submission; be thankful to Him for the good, and patient under the evil, that He sends; to consider life with its appendages as the free gift of God, which therefore we should employ in His service, be ready to give up freely when He calls for it, and trust to Him for a future happy state. Peters.

18. Hast thou perceived the breadth of the earth? &c.] Nay, so far from having penetrated into all the dark caverns of the earth, dost thou so much as understand all that grows upon the surface of it? Bp. Patrick. We now ascend from below the centre of the earth to its surface; from the region of death to the world of life. Scott.

19. Where is the way where light dwelleth? &c.] This question differs from that in ver. 12—15. That related to the morning, and its benefit to mankind: this to settling the precise boundary of light and darkness, that is, day and night. One half of the earth is enlightened, the other half is in darkness, at the same instant. Job is now asked, whether he was witness to that operation of creation, by which the limits of light and darkness were fixed, and knew the extent both of one and the other. The question is put in figurative language: Light and Darkness are represented as persons; each has its separate dwellingplace and peculiar jurisdiction; the bounds of one never encroach on those of the other. Scott.

20. That thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof,] Or "Surely thou canst guide (take) us to its border; yea, certainly thou canst shew the roads which lead to its house. Thou must know, for thou wast born at that time; as to the number of thy years, they are many." This is lofty irony. Heath, Scott.

22—38. Hast thou entered &c.] This whole passage relates to those changes in the state of the atmosphere, which we call the weather. Scott.

22. Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? &c.] Didst thou ever enter into My storehouse of meteors, which I have decreed to bring forth upon all occasions of My judgment upon men? Bp. Hall. The inspired poet still keeps in view the moral purposes, for which the Deity employs His natural works. "The time of trouble" may signify, not winter in general, but those severe winters, in which there falls such abundance of snow and hail, as does infinite damage to the fruits of the earth, to cattle, and to human kind. Scott.

24. By what way is the light parted,] The word should be rendered "lightning," as in chap. xxxvii. 3; on account of its accompaniments, wind, rain, and thunder. Bp. Stock.

Dost thou know how the lightning comes to break forth from the cloud; and how that vapour, there included, scatters with great violence a blustering wind upon the earth? Bp. Hall.

25. Who hath divided a watercourse &c.] Who hath caused the clouds to pour down stores of rain by drops on such and such places, as if it were guided by pipes or channels? Clark.

26. To cause it to rain—where no man is;] This circumstance, "where no man is," is dwelt upon, to shew the provision which the Creator makes for the sustenance of wild beasts. Compare Psal. civ. 10, 11; Joel ii. 22. This instance of the power and providence of God might also be intended to suggest, that He, who turns the barren wilderness into fruitful pasture, is equally able to change a miserable condition into a happy one. Such an instruction is a strong motive to confidence in God in the most desperate situation, as Job thought his own to be. Compare chap. v. 9—11; and see the note there. Scott.

28. Hath the rain a father?] Rather, "Who is the father of the rain?" and so it corresponds with the next sentence, "Or who hath begotten the drops of dew?" The first mechanical agents in the production of "rain" and "dew," are known only to Him, whose name is Wonderful. Scott.

30. The waters are hid as with a stone,] The waters, hardened into the substance of stone, and losing for a time their natural character, "hide themselves;" because no trace of water appears, while every thing is bound by frost. Rosenmüller.

The Son of Sirach has given a beautiful description of this wonderful operation and appearance of nature, Ecclus. xliii. 20. Scott.

—— the deep] This cannot here mean the sea. A frozen sea was never seen in Arabia, or its neighbourhood. Neither could such a phenomenon be so much as heard of in those days, when navigation had not reached to the high northern latitudes. The word signifies, in the Arabick language, any deep gathering together of water, whether fountain, river, or lake. A frozen lake might be known even in Arabia, or in some of the adjacent countries. See the remark on chap. xxxvii. 10. Scott.

31, 32. Canst thou bind &c.] See chap. ix. 9, and the note there. Canst thou alter the seasons of the year, or cause a restraint of the spring, summer, autumn, &c.? Canst thou bring forth those hidden stars of the south? or direct the northern constellations in their courses? Bp. Hall. He is now asked, whether he has power over the heavenly bodies, to direct their motions, control their action upon the earth, and prevent the seasons and weather which they are apt to produce. Scott.

31. — the sweet influences &c.] "The sweet influences" are the pleasant season of spring: "the bands" are the rigours of winter, when the earth is bound with frost. The chief attention of the Arabs was, not so much to the planets, as to the fixed stars; their rising and setting, and their supposed influence in producing rain, wind, heat, cold, and all other changes of weather. Scott.

32. Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth &c.] St. Chrysostom explains Mazzaroth of the twelve signs of the zodiack. Our marginal version adopts that explanation. Scott.

33. Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven?] Knowest thou what laws God hath made for the motions and influences of the heavens; and what power He hath given to their operations on the earth? Bp. Hall.

35. — Here we are?] This surprising figure of speech, which gives intelligence and a voice to the lightnings, expresses with great sublimity the punctuality with which inanimate creatures observe the laws prescribed to them, and perform the service enjoined them by their Creator. The author of Baruch has imitated this wonderful prosopopœia, chap. iii. 34. Scott.

37. Who can number the clouds in wisdom? &c.] With all the wisdom that thou hast, canst thou count the number of the clouds, whose showers thou art as unable to stop, as to make them run? Bp. Patrick.

—— who can stay the bottles of heaven, &c.] Canst thou "stay the bottles of heaven," when they have given as much rain as may fit the earth for bearing fruit, the light dust being now turned into lumps of earth? Caryl.

Or, as in the margin, "Who can cause the bottles of heaven to lie down?" The work of Providence described in these verses, is the collecting and arranging of the clouds in the most fitting season, and then disposing them in the most proper manner for emptying themselves in profitable showers on the arable lands. The clouds are compared to those earthen jars, in which the Eastern people keep their water and their wine; "the bottles," or pitchers, "of heaven." See 1 Sam. x. 3; Isai. xxx. 14; Lam. iv. 2. The disposing of the clouds in a proper manner for emptying themselves is denoted by the position into which a pitcher or jar is put for pouring out its contents: who can "lay along" the pitchers of heaven? This image is similar to the inclined urn, which the heathen poets place in the hand of a river-god. The urn represents the fountain from which the river flows: and what fountains are to rivers, the clouds are to rain. Schultens, Scott.

38. When the dust groweth into hardness, &c.] These showers are sent to soften the glebe, and prepare it for plowing, when it has been baked and hardened by the long drought of summer. Compare Psal. lxv. 9—13. Scott.

39. Wilt thou hunt &c.] This verse should have begun a new chapter: for we here pass to quite a new topick, the brute animals which inhabit the air, the land, and the water. The subject is continued with a few short interruptions unto the end of the Almighty's speech. Those species of animals are selected, in which the wisdom, power, and providential care of the Creator are most eminently displayed. The tendency of the descriptions is, to raise in our minds such admiration of the Deity, as will effectually extinguish discontent, and silence murmurings against His dispensations. Scott.

—— for the lion?] The word signifies "a lioness," properly when giving suck. Parkhurst. The question turns upon making provision for the lioness, and her family of sucking whelps. The wonderful providence of God effects this, by the tender feelings of parental affection which He has infused into this savage animal, and by the peculiar fierceness and swiftness which He has given to it, to hunt the prey that she may have a supply of milk for her young. Scott.

—— or fill the appetite of the young lions,] This is a different question. It relates to qualifying the young weaned lions to provide for themselves. Scott.

41. Who provideth for the raven his food?] The providence of God, particularly in the supplies afforded to the ravens, is divers times taken notice of in the Scriptures. Thus our Saviour, Luke xii. 24, "Consider the ravens, &c." It is a manifest argument of the Divine care and providence, in supplying the world with food and necessaries, that the ravens, accounted as unclean, and little regarded by man, destitute of stores, and that live by accidents, by what falleth here and there; that such a bird, I say, should be provided with sufficient food: especially if that be true which Aristotle, Pliny, and Ælian report, of their want of affection and cruelty to their young; that they expel them their nests as soon as they can fly, and then drive them out of the country. Dr. Derham.

The reason given why the raven is particularly mentioned as an object of the care of Providence, is because, by her clamorous and importunate voice, she particularly seems to be always calling upon Him. Hence in Greek, a verb, derived from the word which signifies a raven, means to ask earnestly. Dr. Young.

Perhaps the raven is mentioned here, instead of being introduced among other birds in the next chapter, because he lives on carrion, and may be supposed to feed on carcases which the lion leaves. The difficulty of meeting with such kind of food renders the Divine power more illustrious in preserving this species of creatures. Compare Ps. cxlvii. 9. Scott.

Chap. XXXIX. ver. 1. Knowest thou the time &c.] Canst thou understand or dispose of the conceptions and births of the wildest creatures? Bp. Hall. Not mere knowledge, but providential care and protection is intended here. "To know" is used in this sense, Ps. xxxi. 7, "Canst thou mark," rather, "Canst thou watch over and preserve the calving of the hinds?" that is, the hinds when they calve. Scott.

—— the wild goats of the rock] This animal is called also ibex, and in French bouquetin, which name means "goat of the rock." It is a species of wild goat, so called from the wonderful manner in which they mount to the top of the highest rocks; to which quality the sacred writers allude in the other two passages, besides this, where the word occurs, 1 Sam. xxiv. 2; Psal. civ. 18: and to this natural historians bear abundant witness. Johnston, in his History of Quadrupeds, says, "It is certain there is no crag of the mountains so high, prominent, or steep, but this animal will mount it in a number of leaps, provided only it be rough, and have protuberances large enough to receive its hoofs in leaping." And Buffon, after observing that this animal and the chamois greatly resemble each other, adds, "but the rock-goat, as being more nimble and strong, mounts to the very top of the highest mountains, whereas the chamois inhabits only the second stage." Parkhurst.

2. Canst thou number the months that they fulfil? &c.] "Canst thou number" is here equivalent to "Canst thou appoint the number:" see chap. xiv. 5. And "knowing" means operative providential care, as in ver. 1. Scott.

3. —their sorrows.] That is, their young ones, brought forth with severe throes. Caryl. It is observed by Bochart and others, that hinds bring forth their young with great difficulty. Dr. Durell.

4. Their young ones are in good liking, &c.] Their young ones are lusty and strong; they grow up in the open fields; they leave their mothers, and return to them no more. Bp. Patrick.

—— they grow up with corn;] The word rendered "corn" means the clear open field or country, as opposed to the dwellings and cultivation of men. The animals here mentioned do not thrive with corn, but with the few shrubs and hardy plants growing in the open country or desert: a circumstance which makes their preservation and "good liking" more wonderful. Parkhurst, Scott.

Perhaps "the hind" is associated in this passage with the "rock-goat," because the former inhabits the forest, and roams amid its wildnesses, as the rock-goat roams amid the fastnesses of the mountains. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

5. — the wild ass] This animal is found in considerable numbers in the deserts of Libya and Numidia; in the eastern and southern Tartary; in Persia, Syria, &c. "The wild asses," says Buffon, "differ from the tame ones, only by the effects of independence and liberty: they are more strong and nimble, more courageous and lively; but they are the same in the shape of their bodies." Parkhurst.

—— free?] This word does not here imply an antecedent state of bondage. It signifies freedom in opposition to slavery; an exemption from the servitude to which the domestick ass is made subject: which exemption is expressed in the next sentence by "loosing the bands of the wild ass." Scott.

6. Whose house I have made the wilderness,] See above, Parkhurst's note on ver. 5. The wild ass is a gregarious animal, for they go in herds to pasture and to watering; yet in Hos. viii. 9, he is said to be "solitary," because he frequents lonely places. Scott.

—— and the barren land] In the Hebrew, as the margin notices, the "salt places:" either salt marshes, or salt deserts. Professor Pallas, describing a female wild ass, brought to Petersburgh, says, "She preferred brackish water to fresh, and never drank of what was troubled. She loved bread sprinkled with salt, and sometimes would eat a handful of salt. I was told, that, when at Derbent, she always ran to drink of the Caspian sea, though fresh water was nearer to her. She also selected plants impregnated with saline particles, or those of bitter juices." This circumstance greatly adds to the expression and correctness of this passage. Animals, which inhabit the desert, must often be at a loss for water; and this animal, the Professor says, would often pass two whole days without drinking. Script. illust.

7. He scorneth the multitude of the city, &c.] The wild asses have their sight, hearing, and smelling, equally good; so that it is impossible to approach them in an open country. They are adapted to running, and of such swiftness that the best horses cannot equal them: all the ancient writers do justice to their fleetness, and their Hebrew name expresses this quality. Professor Pallas, Script. illust.

8. The range of the mountains is his pasture,] The Persians call this animal by a name signifying the mountain-ass; because he prefers the most arid deserts of the mountains. Professor Pallas.

9. — the unicorn] Most probably the rhinoceros; in the original, the reem. In Numb. xxiii. 22, (see the note there,) the strength of Israel is compared to "the strength of the reem." Job makes frequent allusion to his great strength, and ferocity, and indocility. He asks, "Will the reem be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib?" that is, Will he willingly come into thy stable, and eat at thy manger? And again: "Canst thou bind the reem with a band in a furrow, and will he harrow the valleys after thee?" In other words, Canst thou make him to go in the plough or harrow? The rhinoceros does not eat hay or grass, but lives entirely upon trees. Bruce. He is also extremely ill-suited to domestick labours; since, when of full age, he is perhaps as untameable and untractable as any creature living. Buffon says, "In Bengal, Siam, and other southern parts of India, where the rhinoceros is perhaps still more common than in Ethiopia, and where the natives are accustomed to train elephants, he is regarded as an irreclaimable animal, of which no domestick use can be made." Fragments to Calmet, Script. illust.

13. Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks?] The original word is one of the Hebrew names of the ostrich. The peacock was probably not known in Syria, Palestine, or Arabia, before the reign of Solomon, who first imported it. It was originally from India. Besides, the ostrich, not the peacock, is allowed on all hands to be the subject of the following parts of the description. Scott.

— Gavest thou the goodly wings &c.] The passage may be rendered thus from the original: "The wing of the ostrich is quivering or expanded: the very feathers and plumage of the stork." When the ostrich is full grown, the neck, particularly of the male, which before was almost naked, is now very beautifully covered with red feathers. The plumage likewise upon the shoulders, the back, and some parts of the wings, from being hitherto of a dark grayish colour, becomes now as black as jet; whilst the rest of the feathers retain an exquisite whiteness. They are "the very feathers and plumage of the stork:" that is, they consist of such black and white feathers as the stork is known to have. Dr. Shaw.

Or, "The wing of the ostriches is fluttered or quivered:" This camel-bird, as the Persians call it, cannot fly from the ground; but, assisted by the quivering motion of its wings, moves at an astonishing rate. But "is it like the wing of the stork and its plumage?" Is it, like that, employed in protecting and providing for the creature's offspring? No: "for she (the hen ostrich) depositeth her eggs in the earth, &c." Parkhurst.

14. Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, &c.] As for the stork, the lofty fir trees are her house, Ps. civ. 17: but the improvident ostrich depositeth her eggs in the earth. Scott. She deposits or trusts them there. Several natural historians have supposed the eggs of the ostrich to be hatched entirely by the sun; whereas the original word signifies actively, that "she heateth them," namely, by incubation. The ostrich lays from thirty to fifty eggs: the first egg is deposited in the centre; the rest are planted as conveniently as possible round about it. In this manner she is said to "lay," deposit, or trust, "her eggs in the earth, and to warm them in the sand; and forgetteth," as they are not placed, like those of some other birds, upon trees, or in the clefts of rocks, &c.

"that the foot" of the traveller "may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them." Dr. Shaw.

16. She is hardened against her young ones, &c.] A very little share of that natural affection, which so strongly exerts itself in most other creatures, is observable in the ostrich: for upon the least distant noise or trivial occasion, she forsakes her eggs or her young ones, to which perhaps she never returns; or, if she does, it may be too late, either to restore life to the one, or preserve the lives of the others. The Arabs meet sometimes with whole nests of their eggs undisturbed; some of which are sweet and good, others are addle and corrupted: others again have their young ones of different growths, according to the time it may be presumed they have been forsaken by their dams. They oftener meet a few of the little ones, no bigger than well-grown pullets, half-starved, straggling and moaning about, like so many distressed orphans, for their mother. Thus the ostrich may be said to be "hardened against her young ones, as though they were not her's; her labour," in hatching and attending them thus far, "being in vain, without fear," or the least concern of what becomes of them afterwards. This want of affection is also recorded, Lam. iv. 3. Dr. Shaw.

17. Because God hath deprived her of wisdom,] The want of that natural instinct to provide for, and nurse up, her young, which most other creatures are endowed with, is here attributed to God: "Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, &c." And the singular care of the Creator in this case is very remarkable, in supplying some other way the want of the parent animal's care and affection; so that the young should notwithstanding be bred up in those large and barren deserts of Arabia and Africa, and such like places, where those birds dwell: the most unlikely and unfitting, in all human opinion, to afford sustenance to young helpless creatures; but the fittest, therefore, to give demonstrations of the wisdom, care, and especial providence of the infinite Creator and Conservator of the world. Dr. Derham.

Considering the great voracity of this camel-bird, and the extreme barrenness of those parts of the desert which they chiefly frequent, it is wonderful not only how the little ones should be brought up and nourished; but even how those of fuller growth, and much better qualified to look out for themselves, are able to subsist. Dr. Shaw.

18. What time she lifteth up herself on high, &c.] Or, as the words may be translated, "when she raiseth herself up to run away," namely, from her pursuers, "she scorneth," or laughs at "the horse and his rider." Dr. Shaw. The ostrich usually appears in a couchant posture, but rises suddenly to her full height, when alarmed and preparing to move forward. Bp. Stock. When these birds are surprised by persons coming suddenly upon them, whilst they are feeding in some valley, or behind some rocky or sandy eminence in the deserts, they will not stay to be curiously viewed and examined. Nor are the Arabs ever dexterous enough to overtake them, even when they are mounted on their most esteemed horses. "They, when they raise themselves up for flight, laugh at the horse and his rider." They afford him an opportunity only of admiring at a distance the extraordinary agility and the stateliness likewise of their motions, the richness of their plumage, and the great propriety of ascribing to them "an expanded quivering wing;" see ver. 13, and the note. Nothing certainly can be more beautiful and extraordinary than such a sight. The wings, by their repeated, though unwearied, vibrations, equally serving them for sails and oars; whilst their feet, no less assisting in conveying them out of sight, are no less insensible of fatigue. Dr. Shaw.

Adanson, in his voyage to Senegal, speaking of two ostriches taken in Africa, gives this account of their motion, which he had particularly observed. "To try their strength, I made a full grown negro mount the smallest, and two others the largest. This burden did not seem to me at all disproportioned to their strength. At first they went a pretty high trot: when they were heated a little, they expanded their wings, as if it were to catch the wind, and they moved with such fleetness as to seem to be off the ground. Every body must have seen a partridge run, and must know that there is no man whatever able to keep up with it: and it is easy to imagine, that, if this bird had a longer step, its speed would be considerably augmented. The ostrich moves like the partridge, with both these advantages: and I am satisfied that those I am speaking of would have distanced the fleetest race horses that ever were bred in England." Parkhurst.

19. Hast thou given the horse strength? &c.] It is very difficult to express violent motions, which are fleeting and transitory, either in colours or in words. In poetry it requires great spirit in thought, and energy in style, which we find more of in the Eastern poetry, than in either the Greek or Roman. The great Creator, who accommodated Himself to those He vouchsafed to speak to, hath put into the mouths of His Prophets such sublime sentiments and exalted language, as must abash the pride and wit of man. In the Book of Job, the most ancient poem in the world, we have such paintings and descriptions in great variety. The description of the horse in particular, under all the disadvantages of having been written in a language little understood; of being expressed in phrases peculiar to a part of the world, whose manner of thinking and speaking seems to us very uncouth; and, above all, of appearing in a prose translation; is nevertheless so transcendently above all heathen descriptions, notwithstanding there are two very fine ones by Homer and Virgil, that hereby we may perceive how faint and languid the images are, which are formed by mortal authors, when compared with that which is figured, as it were, just as it appears in the eye of the Creator. In this description are all the great and sprightly images that thought can form of this generous beast, expressed in such force and vigour of style, as would have given the great wits of antiquity new laws for the sublime, had they been acquainted with these writings. I cannot but particularly observe, that whereas the classical poets chiefly endeavour to paint the outward figure, lineaments, and motions; the sacred poet makes all the beauties to flow from an inward principle in the creature he describes, and thereby gives great spirit and vivacity to his description. Steele.

—— hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?] Homer and Virgil mention nothing about the neck of the horse, but his mane. The sacred author, by the bold figure of thunder, not only expresses the shaking of that remarkable beauty in the horse, and the flakes of hair, which naturally suggest the idea of lightning; but likewise the violent agitation and force of the neck, which in the Oriental tongues had been flatly expressed by a metaphor less bold than this. Steele.

20. — the glory of his nostrils is terrible.] The disdainful snortings which he sends out of his nostrils in his pride and courage, are terrifying like thunder, ver. 19. Caryl. This is more strong and concise than that of Virgil, which yet is the noblest line that was ever written without inspiration; "And in his nostrils rolls collected fire." Steele.

5 Once have I spoken; but I will not answer: yea, twice; but I will proceed no further.

---

24. He swalloweth the ground &c.] This expression intimates the rapidity and eagerness of the horse. He is described as rushing forward to battle, and, as it were, devouring the intermediate space; that is, traversing it with such speed, as to appear to swallow it down with one effort. Rosenmüller.

"He swalloweth the ground" is an expression for prodigious swiftness in use among the Arabians, Job's countrymen, at this day. It is indeed the boldest and noblest of images for swiftness. Steele.

—— neither believeth he &c.] Neither doth he conceive any terrour at the signal for battle, but believeth it not for joy. Bps. Hall and Stock.

"He rejoiceth in his strength;" "he mocketh at fear;" "neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet;" "He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha;" are signs of courage, as was before said, flowing from an inward principle. There is a peculiar beauty in his "not believing it is the sound of the trumpet;" that is, he cannot believe it for joy; but when he is sure of it, and is "amongst the trumpets, he saith, Ha, ha;" he neighs, he rejoices. Steele.

It is natural, that when things come to pass which are most of all agreeable to our wishes, but beyond our hopes, we scarcely believe our senses that they have happened. Job, speaking of God, says, "If I had called and He had answered me, yet would I not believe that He had hearkened unto my voice," chap. ix. 16; whereby he at the same time intimates the Divine Majesty and awfulness, and his own humility and desperation. "If I laughed on them, they believed it not," says Job of his dependents, chap. xxix. 24: magnifying hereby his own extreme dignity and authority, blended with condescension; and their unmingled veneration towards him. By one and the same circumstance, applied to the war-horse, his ardour and eagerness and impatient thirst for the battle, are wonderfully depicted. "He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage; neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet: he saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha; and he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the shouting." From which passage, most distinguished by universal admiration, it is abundantly manifest, how greatly this poem excels in description; at the same time we may conclude, that in other instances the correctness and beauty of its representations would not be less evident, if we were equally well acquainted with the animals themselves and their properties. Bp. Lowth.

26. Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom,] Is it by thy appointment that the hawk stretches her wings, to fly into the warmer climates of the south? Bp. Hall.

Some of the genus of hawks are, as Bochart and others observe, birds of passage. The hawk therefore appears to be introduced here as a specimen of that astonishing instinct, which teaches birds of passage to know their times and seasons; when to migrate out of one country into another for the benefit of food, or a warmer climate, or both. The stork is of this kind, Jer. viii. 7. Scott, Parkhurst.

27. Doth the eagle mount up at thy command,] Fly directly upward, which no other bird is able to do? Clark. Buffon observes, that the eagle is of all birds that which mounts to the greatest height. Parkhurst.

28. She dwelleth and abideth on the rock,] To illustrate this passage, it may be remarked from Buffon, that the eagle usually constructs its aiery, which is flat, and more properly a flooring of sticks and twigs than a nest, between two rocks, in a dry and inaccessible place. Parkhurst.

29. From thence she seeketh the prey, &c.] The eagle is said to be of so acute a sight, that when she is so high in air that man cannot see her, she can discern the smallest fish under water. Dr. Young.

The eagle has an excellent sight, but little smell in comparison of the vulture: he therefore hunts only by view. Buffon.

30. Her young ones also suck up blood: &c.] The young eagle is wont (and who taught it him?) to suck in the blood of his prey; and where carcases are, thither, by a strange sagacity of nature, he is drawn to resort. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XL. ver. 2. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him?] Shall he that pleads against God's proceedings teach Him how to govern the world better? "he that reproveth God, let him answer it." Let him that censures God's actions answer what has been already advanced. Clark, Dr. Durell.

The design of this and of the other chapters is, to shew us how little we understand of the works of God; and that therefore it is the highest presumption to question the reasons and justice of His providence. Bp. Wilson.

5. Once have I spoken; &c.] I have spoken once and again foolishly, but I will not defend what I have unadvisedly said, nor proceed further in such presumptuous expressions and accusations of Thy providence. Clark.

The confession which Job makes of his own vileness and presumption, should teach us what effect ought to be produced in our minds by the wonderful works of creation; namely, that they ought to convince us of our own weakness and ignorance, and so humble us before God, that we may never think or say

7. Gird up thy loins &c.] See note on chap. xxxviii. 3.

8. Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? &c.] Is there any reason to suspect My care of mankind, who have shewn it so much about other creatures? Canst thou not defend thyself, but thou must also complain of Me? Must I be condemned that thou mayest be justified? Bp. Patrick. By "disannulling God's judgment" is meant "condemning God," as the latter sentence explains it. Job's complaints and manner of justifying himself amounted to charging God with injustice. Scott.

10. Deck thyself now with majesty &c.] The magnificent scenery in this and the four following verses presents to us the Almighty arrayed in the splendours of Divine majesty, exerting His supreme dominion, and manifesting His righteous vengeance by thundering and lightning on the heads of haughty tyrants, and hurling them down to the bottom of Hades. See Isai. xxx. 30. Job is ironically required to invest himself with the attributes of Deity, and to assume the glorious ensigns of Divine majesty; that he may execute judgment on proud oppressors, and other profligate men, of whose impunity and prosperity he had so loudly complained. Scott.

——array thyself with glory and beauty.] To understand those expressions in Scripture which speak of Jehovah being arrayed or clothed with majesty, strength, honour, or the like, we must recollect the glorious manner in which He vouchsafed to appear to His people in fire, light, and clouds. Parkhurst.

12. —tread down the wicked in their place.] In the very place of their exaltation. Scott. Permit no one of an infamous character to continue easy and undisturbed: put a stop as soon as possible to their vicious example. Chappelow.

13. Hide them in the dust &c.] Cast them down from their splendid elevation into the obscure abodes of death, as condemned malefactors. "To bind the face" is a phrase for treating a person as a convict condemned to die. See the note on chap. ix. 24. "The dust" is the grave, chap. xvii. 16; and the "secret" place is another expression for the sepulchre; or else it means the secret abodes of Sheol, the receptacle of departed souls. Scott.

14. —that thine own right hand can save thee.] That thou art self-sufficient, the author and preserver of thy own happiness; therefore a god, and a match for Me. This humiliating sarcasm makes way for another mortification: for the Almighty next sends him to two of His creatures, behemoth and leviathan; and bids him prove his high courage in an open encounter with either of them. Scott.

15. Behold now behemoth,] The learned Bochart contends, that the behemoth is the hippopotamus; that is, the sea-horse, or, more properly speaking, the river-horse; which the ancient Greek writers, and the Prænestine pavement described in Shaw's Travels, represent as an amphibious quadruped found in the Nile, and which is still sometimes to be met with in Upper Egypt. And he has supported his opinion with so much learning and plausibility, that I believe it has been generally embraced and acquiesced in by the learned since his time. It must be confessed, however, that most of the characters given of the behemoth correspond also to the elephant. Parkhurst.

—— which I have made with thee;] Rather, "near thee;" that is, in thy neighbourhood. As if God had said, There is no need to seek for arguments of My power from a distance, since they lie close at hand. Among the beasts which I have made in the Nile, which borders on thy country Arabia, how wonderful is the river-horse! Bochart. Or, "whom I made thy fellow-creature." This is a humbling stroke. Scott.

——he eateth grass as an ox.] That the river-horse, an aquatick animal, living for the most part at the bottom of the Nile, should eat grass as an ox, is a surprising and singular circumstance, and therefore not omitted by other authors. Bochart.

16. —his strength is in his loins, &c.] It is well known that the loins are the seat of strength: compare Nahum ii. 1; Ps. lxix. 24. As to the latter part of the verse, the river-horse is protected all over his body, no less in his navel and his belly, than in other parts, by a skin of impenetrable solidity and thickness. This is not the case with the elephant, whose softest and most vulnerable part is the belly. Bochart.

17. He moveth his tail like a cedar:] "He moveth his tail, which is as a cedar." The tail of the hippopotamus might be compared to a cedar, on account of its smoothness, roundness, thickness, and strength. Bochart. Buffon says, that "his tail is like a tortoise's, only incomparably thicker:" and Scheuchzer, that "though short, yet it is thick, and may be compared to the cedar, for its tapering, yea conical shape, its smoothness, thickness, strength, and rigidity." Parkhurst.

18. His bones &c.] "His (smaller) bones are compact bars of brass, his (larger, projecting) bones like a forged bar of iron." No doubt these words are intended to express the extraordinary hardness of the behemoth's bones; but it does not appear that the bones of the elephant are in this respect different from, or harder than, those of other animals: whereas, the bones of the hippopotamus are probably much harder than those of the elephant, if we may judge by the superiour hardness of his tusks: of which Buffon says, "they are very strong, and of a substance so hard as to strike fire with steel." Parkhurst.

The meaning is, that the bones of the river-horse are not, as in most fishes, mere cartilages, but like brass and iron, very hard, firm, and strong. They are, in fact, extremely strong: the tooth of this animal surpassing in hardness, and in the difficulty with which it is carved, that of the elephant, whose tooth is as hard as any part about him. Bochart. No creature is known to have stronger limbs than the river-horse. Harmer.

19. He is the chief of the ways of God:] That is, one of the most remarkable quadrupeds He hath made. The word "way" denotes the manner of God's acting or proceeding; also, as in this place, His works or actions themselves. See Prov. viii. 22. "Jehovah possessed me in the beginning of His way;" that is, of His work of creation. Parkhurst.

—— he that made him can make his sword to approach unto him.] That is, can put forth His power and destroy him. Caryl. Rather, the words may be rendered, "He who made him has made fast his weapon;" (Parkhurst;) alluding to the tusks of the hippopotamus, the fixed insertion of which is remarkable in this animal. Fragments to Calmet. The word, rendered "sword," properly means that sort of sword which the Greeks called harpè, and which was crooked or bent like a sickle. The river-horse is here said to be furnished with such a sword, because he has teeth standing out of his mouth, gently bent, sharp, and long, with which he cuts down and destroys the corn, &c. as with a harpè, or sword crooked like a sickle. The Greek poets and other writers speak of the teeth of the river-horse by this name; and describe his voracity in laying waste the fields. It is more agreeable to the general sense of the context to understand the words in this manner, than to suppose them to signify that God alone is able to destroy the animal by His power, as by a sword. Bochart.

20. Surely the mountains bring him forth food,] This is the true reason why the behemoth, though a water animal, is armed with such teeth as have been just noticed; namely, because he feeds, not so much in the water, as on land, where grass as well as corn is cut down with a sickle, or instrument of the like shape. By "the mountains" may be understood the hills and eminences bordering on the Nile. And they are the rather specified, by reason of the strangeness and wonderfulness of an aquatick animal feeding, not only on land, but in such a situation with other beasts and cattle. Bochart.

—— where all the beasts of the field play.] It appears to be the intention of this passage, to express the security of the inferiour creatures from injury by this inoffensive animal, which permits even their frolicks and sportiveness without interruption. Fragments to Calmet.

21. He lieth — in the covert of the reed, &c.] This is agreeable to the description which other writers give of the river-horse. Bochart. In the Prænestine pavement the river-horse is represented hiding and sheltering himself among the reeds of the Nile. He is properly an amphibious animal, living constantly in fens and rivers. Harmer.

23. — he drinketh up a river, and hasteth not:] That is, he drinks at his leisure, without fear. Caryl.

Rather, "Behold, the stream may press upon him, he will not be terrified; he will be secure, though Jordan rush against his mouth." So Bochart excellently renders this passage. Buffon, speaking of the hippopotamus, says, "He is pleased with being in the water, and stays there as willingly as upon the land. He remains a long time at the bottom of the water, and walks there as in the open air." To the same purpose Mr. Watson, in his Animal World Displayed, "The hippopotamus spends part of its life under water; it comes out of the water in an evening to sleep; and when it goes in again, it walks very deliberately in over head, and pursues its course along the bottom as easy and unconcerned as if it were in the open air. The rivers it frequents are very deep; and, when they are also clear, this affords a most astonishing sight." Other writers speak to the same effect. And, further to illustrate this passage, it may not be amiss to add from Maundrell's Travels, that, when he visited the river Jordan, March 30, "the water was very turbid, and too rapid to be swum against. For its breadth, it might be about twenty yards over: and in depth, it far exceeded his own height." Parkhurst.

24. He taketh it with his eyes: &c.] This verse may be thus rendered: "Though one seize him in a trap by the eyes or visage, yet his nose forces itself through the snares;" which agrees very well with what is said above of his vast force, and the impenetrability of his skin by iron. Dr. Durell.

Chap. XLI. The irony is continued. Job is now addressed as a man of prowess, sufficient to combat and subdue another creature, much more formidable than the behemoth, in regard of the armour with which it is furnished, both for defending itself and attacking its enemy. This creature is named Leviathan. The crocodile has found so powerful an advocate in Bochart, that all other claimants are put to silence. The characters in the description perfectly correspond to that animal, allowance being made for poetical ornaments and heightenings. The description is not intended merely for the purpose of embellishment. It has a nobler design. That design is clearly explained, ver. 10, "None is so fierce that dare stir him up: who then is able to stand before Me?" Hence Job is taught to tremble at his danger, in having provoked by his murmurs and litigation the displeasure of the Maker of this dreadful animal. His high spirit is now brought down, his conviction is completed, and his repentance and submission satisfy the Almighty. Scott.

Ver. 1. Canst thou draw out leviathan with an hook?] From this passage Hasselquist observes, that the leviathan "means a crocodile by that which happens daily, and without doubt happened in Job's time, in the river Nile; to wit, that this voracious animal, far from being drawn up by an hook, bites off and destroys all fishing tackle of this kind which is thrown out in the river. I found," adds he, "in one that I opened, two hooks which it had swallowed, one sticking in the stomach, and the other in a part of the thick membrane which covers the palate." Parkhurst.

The taking of the crocodile is most difficult. Diodorus says, they are not to be taken but by iron nets. When Augustus conquered Egypt he struck a medal, the impress of which was a crocodile chained to a palm tree, with this inscription, "No one has bound me before." Dr. Young.

The crocodile is of too great weight and magnitude to be drawn out of the river, as fish usually are, with an hook. And from the scaly quality, Ezek. xxix. 4, and the hardness of his coat, or because "his scales stick (so thick) together that they cannot be sundered," (below, ver. 17,) there is therefore no danger of having "his skin filled with barbed irons, or his head with fish spears," ver. 7. From these apposite characteristicks the crocodile may be well taken for the leviathan, as described in this chapter of Job, and elsewhere alluded to in the Holy Scripture: where the leviathan is called "the piercing serpent," or "dragon," Isai. xxvii. 1; where Pharaoh is called "the great dragon," or leviathan, Ezek. xxix. 3; where "the heads also of the leviathan," that is, of Pharaoh or of Egypt, are said to be "broken in pieces," Ps. lxxiv. 14; otherwise expressed in the preceding verse, by "breaking the heads of the dragons in the waters," or in the Red sea. Harmer.

—— or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down?] Rather, "or tie his tongue with a cord." Dr. Durell.

2. Canst thou put an hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?] Rather, "Canst thou put a rope about his nose, or bore his jaw through with a hook?" Dr. Durell. The former word in the original means a rope or muzzle, properly a rope made of bulrushes. The latter, which properly signifies a thorn, is also used for a hook, sharp like a thorn. Bochart. Or it signifies a clenched ring of iron, passed through the nose of a beast, in order the better to manage him by means of a rope fastened to it: as is still usual in the East with regard to camels and buffaloes. See 2 Kings xix. 28; Isai. xxxvii. 29. The question then is, "Wilt or canst thou put a rope in his nose?" that is, in a hole bored through his nose; "or bore his cheek through with a ring?" Compare Ezek. xxix. 4, where Pharaoh king of Egypt is described under the similitude of this same dreadful animal. Parkhurst.

4. Will he make a covenant with thee? &c.] In the same manner as the conquered are wont to redeem their lives from their conquerors at the price of their liberty. "A servant for ever;" that is, for the whole of his life. Bochart.

5. — wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?] That they may play with him. The crocodile is particularly hostile to boys and girls, who sometimes, approaching the Nile too incautiously, have fallen a prey to him. Ælian mentions several instances of the crocodile devouring children: and Maximus Tyrius relates a story of an Egyptian woman, who had a son of the same age with a young crocodile. He says, the animal was gentle, as long as it continued weak; but when it increased in size, it discovered its natural disposition, and killed the child. Bochart. See the note on chap. iii. 8.

6. — among the merchants?] The word seems to denote the associated merchants, or merchants companions, who belonged to the same caravan. Parkhurst.

7. Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons?] Canst thou pierce his skin with barbed hooks? Bp. Hall. This question is not applicable to the whale; but it is to the crocodile, whose skin is impenetrable to weapons. Bochart. See the note from Harmer on ver. 1.

—— fish spears?] Instruments, not very unlike the Eastern ox-goads, (see the note on Judges iii. 31,) have been used for catching fish; and were meant by our translators, when they employed the term "fish spears" in this place: but then they must have been sharper than goads, in order to secure the fish. So Camden, in his account of our native island, tells us, that those who live by the sides of Solway Frith hunt salmons, whereof there is great plenty there, with spears, on horseback. Harmer.

The weapons mentioned in this verse are undoubtedly such as fishermen used for striking large fish at a distance. Scott.

8. Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.] The latter clause would be clearer if it were rendered, "but remember that thou wilt have no other conflict;" for this is doubtless the sense. The note in the old version is, "if thou once consider the danger, thou wilt not meddle with him." Dr. Durell. Such dread will come upon thee, that thou wilt think of flight, rather than of battle, when by the very touch thou shalt have discovered that his skin is capable of resisting every stroke. Bochart.

9. Behold, the hope of him is in vain:] The hope of making him a prey is vain. Grotius. Or, the hope of him who shall have laid hands on the crocodile. Bochart.

10. None is so fierce that dare stir him up:] What is said of the lion, Gen. xlix. 9; Numb. xxiv. 9; is here said of the crocodile: "None is so fierce or so bold as to stir him up," when, satiated with the fishes which he has devoured, he reposes asleep upon the shore. Pliny and others describe this as the custom of the crocodile. Bochart.

11. Who hath prevented me, that I should repay him?] Who hath done Me any favour in helping Me to make or govern the world, or in furthering My actions, that I may repay it unto him? Bp. Hall.

The sentiment in this verse demonstrates the folly and impiety of contending with God, as Job had done. He is all-sufficient and independent, and therefore cannot be indebted to any for their service. He is the Proprietor of all beings; He therefore cannot injure any one by taking away his possessions and enjoyments: for He takes only what He gave. Submissive resignation to His disposals therefore is the duty of every reasonable creature. Scott.

12. — his comely proportion.] The comeliness of his form; that is, for fighting or combat: the advantage of his structure, both for his own security, and for destroying and devouring, &c. Parkhurst.

13. Who can discover the face of his garment?] Rather, "who can uncover the face of his garment?" for "the face of his garment" would by a common hebraism signify the upper or external garment. Dr. Durell. Who is able to turn over that skin, with which he is covered as with a garment? Bp. Hall. The crocodile never casts his skin, as serpents do. Bochart.

This obscure sentence seems to describe that terrible helmet, which covers the head and face of the crocodile. The translation might be, "Who can uncover his mailed face?" If in Job's days they covered their war horses in complete armour, the question may refer to taking off the armour, and leviathan's skin be represented by such an image. Scott.

—— who can come to him with his double bridle?] "Who can come upon him with the doubling of his rein?" that is, with a bridle having two reins. Parkhurst. Rather, "Within his double bridle who will come?" The expression used here means the double fold of his jaws. Bp. Stock. In Greek, as in Hebrew, those parts of the lips, which terminate on both sides at the jaw-bones, are called "bridles." Bochart. This interpretation of Bochart best agrees, not only with the structure of the preceding hemistich, but with the following verse. Parkhurst.

14. Who can open the doors of his face?] That is, his immense jaws, which he separates at pleasure with a vast and horrible opening, like folding doors. It has been said, that "when the crocodile begins to gape, in order to take in his prey, he becomes all mouth." Bochart.

—— his teeth are terrible round about.] Rather, perhaps, "the rows of his teeth are terrible." His mouth is said to be so large that he can take in a whole sheep: and he has thirty-six sharp pointed teeth in each jaw. Dr. Durell.

15. His scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal.] The latter clause should be rendered, "He is shut up close as with a seal." Dr. Durell. In this and the two following verses is described the compactness of the scales, by which the whole body of the animal is covered, as if by iron plates closely united together. This circumstance, which is notoriously true of the crocodile, cannot be applied to the whale, whose skin is smooth and free from scales. Bochart.

18. By his neesings a light doth shine, &c.] When he sneezeth, he maketh as it were a fire to break forth at his nostrils and eyes; and when thou beholdest his eyes, thou wouldest think that thou sawest the sun rising in the morning. Bp. Hall.

The former clause is nearer the literal truth than at first view may be imagined. The crocodile, say the naturalists, lying long under water, and being there forced to hold his breath, when he emerges, the breath long repressed is hot, and bursts out so violently that it resembles fire and smoke. The horse suppresses not his breath by any means so long, neither is he so fierce or animated: yet Virgil, the most correct of poets, ventures to use the same metaphor concerning him. This may afford a caution against a false opinion of the Eastern boldness from passages ill understood. As to the latter clause, "his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning," I think this gives us as great an image of the thing it would express, as can enter the thought of man. It is not improbable that the Egyptians stole their hieroglyphick for the morning, which is the crocodile's eye, from this passage. Dr. Young.

The Egyptian painters of hieroglyphicks, for the purpose of representing the morning, paint the eyes of the crocodile; because, as that animal emerges from the water, his eyes appear before the rest of his body. Bochart.

19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps, &c.] Much the same things as are said in this and the two following verses concerning the crocodile have been said by other writers concerning the river-horse. In fact, there is a relation between these two animals, and they resemble each other particularly in their mode of breathing: for, having kept in their breath a long time whilst under the water, they breathe with so much the more earnestness when they begin to emerge. As torrents which have burst their barrier, the breath, having been long repressed, then becomes so hot, and breaks forth with such violence, that it seems to vomit out flames from the mouth and nostrils. Bochart.

22. —sorrow is turned into joy before him.] Rather, "sorrow goeth before him;" that is, he causes sorrow wherever he goes. This animal, it is well known, occasions great ravages in a country. See ver. 25. Dr. Durell. The phrase is not unusual among the poets, who ascribe Anger, Rage, and Terrour, to Mars, the god of war, as his companions and attendants, who accompany and go before him on his way. Bochart.

The word, rendered "sorrow," signifies fainting from terrour; and the whole verse may be thus translated: "Strength dwelleth on his neck, and fainting exulteth before him;" that is, as soon as men see him, they immediately faint. But both the image and the expression in Job are wonderfully sublime. Parkhurst.

23. The flakes of his flesh are joined together:] "The flakes;" that is, the more prominent parts of his flesh. Bochart. "The ribs (or bones) of his body cleave fast together." Dr. Durell.

25. When he raiseth up himself, &c.] When he begins to shew himself on the top of the waters, the fearless mariners and seamen tremble, by reason of the dashing of the waves one against another, caused by his violent motion, which threatens them with death; they betake themselves to their devotions, confess their sins, and beg pardon that they may be cleansed from them, and call upon God for mercy, Jonah i. 5. Clark.

Or, "On his rising up the valiant shrink; on the breakings (of whatever he is assaulted with, see the following verses) they are out of their wits." So the French translation; "and they know not where, or whereabouts they are, seeing how he breaks every thing." Parkhurst.

26. —the habergeon.] The original word, which occurs only in this place, is supposed to mean a coat of mail; but this is evidently inconsistent with the context, which treats not of defensive, but of offensive armour. Bochart. It signifies a kind of strong javelin, spear, or halberd: and it seems to have been of a stronger make than either of the other weapons noticed in this verse, and therefore is mentioned after them. Parkhurst. It probably means a trident or fishing spear. Bruce.

28. —slingstones are turned with him into stubble.] Or, "He throweth about slingstones as stubble," he dasheth them about with as much ease. An extraordinary instance of the force of a crocodile is related by Maillet: "I saw one last year twelve feet long, which had not eaten for five and thirty days, having had his mouth closed during the whole of that time. With one stroke of his tail, he upset five or six men and a bale of coffee, as easily as I could upset six chess-men." What strength then must one of twenty feet have, and in its full strength, not weakened by so long a fast! Heath.

30. Sharp stones are under him: &c.] The meaning of this may be, that, on account of the hardness of his skin, the crocodile can recline at ease on rocks, stones, and the sharpest things. Bochart. The belly of the crocodile is penetrable by a bullet, and perhaps also by a sword. Nevertheless it is hard enough to be insensible of pain, when he lieth on sharp stones and ragged rocks, which are in the bed of the Nile. In that part of the Nile, where the cataracts are, and which the crocodiles mostly frequent, its bed is of granite marble. Scott.

31. — he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment.] "The sea," that is, the Nile; as in Isai. xi. 15: the Nile is often so called by the Arabian writers, on account of the size of the river, and because at certain times it is spread over the whole of the Delta, like a sea. "Like a pot of ointment," by reason of the mud and slime which he stirs up, when he agitates the waters; probably also with a view to the sweet smell, which many writers have noticed as belonging to the crocodile. Bochart.

34. He beholdeth all high things: &c.] That is, he looks upon them with disdain; he despises them: see Cant. i. 6. Many stories are on record of crocodiles destroying and devouring other animals, greatly their superiours in height: men, oxen, buffaloes, boars, horses, camels, &c. Bochart.

—— the children of pride.] Literally, "the sons of elation or height." The phrase plainly means, as Bochart observes, the larger and stronger kinds of animals or wild beasts. Parkhurst.

There is in this speech a most happy gradation. After a magnificent but just description of the terribleness of the river-horse, the Almighty is represented as going on with His expostulations, something after this manner. But dreadful as this animal is, barbed irons and spears have sometimes prevailed against him: but what wilt thou do with the crocodile? "Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish spears? The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold, &c." See verses 7, 26—29. What wilt thou do with this creature, O Job? This is to finish the expostulation in the strongest and most majestick manner. Harmer.

The argument of Omnipotence, insisted on in these four chapters, when duly considered, as Peters justly remarks, includes in it a full, perfect, and sufficient vindication of the ways of God with man. For if "He can do all things," and "nothing is impossible with God," He can have no temptation to do wrong; for "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man," Jam. i. 13; though for wise and salutary purposes, for correction, for discipline, for purification of heart and life, and preparation for a better world, He tries the best men, like Job, and proves them in the furnace of affliction, that "they may come forth like gold;" while, by His all-governing and all controlling providence, He restrains the craft and subtilty of the devil or man, working against them, to shake their faith, and "sift them as wheat;" saying to the former, as to the ocean originally, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." At the same time, of His infinite mercy and goodness, He is not severe to mark what they have done amiss, upon their hearty repentance and true faith: for "He knoweth whereof they are made, He remembereth that they are but dust." Dr. Hales.

Chap. XLII. Jehovah, having confounded all the false reasonings of Job, and sufficiently humbled him, proceeds now to condemn the principle maintained by the three friends, which He affirms "not to be right." As an atonement therefore for their behaviour, He commands them to offer a sacrifice for themselves; and, as some compensation to Job, they have the mortifying penance enjoined them of begging his prayers in their behalf. He, whom they had represented as the vilest of men, was the only intercessor whom God would accept. Job is at length not only restored to his former prosperity; but, as a recompence for his past sufferings, blessings flow in upon him in a double tide, which he enjoys to a very old age, and leaves to a numerous posterity. Heath.

Ver. 2, I know that thou canst do every thing, &c.] This complete submission contains, 1st, A full acknowledgment of God's almighty power and supreme dominion, ver. 2; by thus glorifying the sovereign authority of God, Job tacitly condemns himself for not having meekly submitted to it: 2dly, A like acknowledgement of the unsearchable wisdom of Divine Providence, with an explicit condemnation of himself for his objections and murmurings against it, ver. 3: 3dly, He humbly begs of God to vouchsafe a gracious audience to his petition, and to instruct him farther in his duty, ver. 4: 4thly, He declares that this visible manifestation of the Almighty to him had impressed him with a deeper and more reverent sense of the Divine perfection and majesty, than he had before conceived by means of instruction only, ver. 5: Lastly, he expresses his repentance in the strongest terms of self-condemnation and humble sorrow, ver. 6. This complete submission may not improperly be called the catastrophe of the poem: it is not indeed a change of Job's outward condition: it is an alteration infinitely more important and beneficial; an alteration in the temper and state of his mind. He is brought back to his duty, and his soul returns to its rest. The restoration of his health and prosperity quickly followed, and is the subject of the ensuing narrative, where the style changes to historical prose. Scott.

3. Who is he that hideth &c.] I am sensible of the justice of Thy reproof, (see chap. xxxviii. 2,) and confess my presumption in speaking of things above my reach, which I ought humbly to admire, not arrogantly censure. Bp. Patrick. Our own humiliation begins at the exaltation of God. Caryl.

6. Wherefore I abhor myself, &c.] This humble confession and self-abasement of Job was graciously accepted: it covered all his imperfections; his passionate complaints wrung from him by the extremity of sufferings, corporeal and mental; his despair and weariness of life; his frequent wishes for death; his eagerness to enter upon his trial; his earnest request, and even expostulations with his Judge, to bring him to it, or at least to acquaint him with the reasons of such severe afflictions. Such shades and blemishes in the character of this illustrious Patriarch argue somewhat of impatience in this heroick pattern of patience. But God is ever ready to pass over the frailties and infirmities of human nature, where there is a tried and resolute integrity, determined to adhere to God in all trials and temptations, whatever may be the result. Dr. Hales.

7, 8. — the Lord said to Eliphaz &c.] Here is a repetition of the same declaration, in express terms, by God Himself, that Eliphaz and his companions "had not spoken of Him the thing that was right," and that Job had. Now it is impossible to find any thing in their speeches, which should make the difference here supposed, if we set aside the doctrine of a future state. For in this view the others would really speak more worthily of God than Job, by endeavouring to vindicate His providence in the exact distribution of good and evil in this life: whereas Job's assertion, chap. ix. 22, that "this is one thing, therefore I said it, He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked," which is the argument that he insists upon throughout, would, upon this supposition, be directly to charge God with making no distinction between the good and bad; which in a ruler is an errour, that reflects both on his wisdom and on his justice.

But now take the other life into the account, and the subject will appear in a contrary light; and we shall easily see the reason why God approves of the sentiments of Job, and condemns those of his friends. For let us suppose the friends of Job to argue, which seems to be the general tendency of their arguments, that the righteous are never afflicted without remedy here, and the wicked never prosperous upon the whole in this life, which is a wrong representation of God's providence; and Job to argue on the other hand, that the righteous are sometimes afflicted here, and that without remedy, but shall be rewarded in a life to come; and that the wicked prosper here, but shall be punished hereafter; which is the true representation of the Divine proceedings; and here is a very apparent difference in the drift of the one discourse and of the other: for Job in this view speaks worthily of God, the rest unworthily.

The best moral argument, which mankind ever had, to believe a life to come, is this, on which Job insists: that good and evil are for the most part dealt out here promiscuously. On the contrary, the topick urged by his friends, and which they push much too far, that God rewards and punishes in this world, tends in its consequence, like that other opinion, which was held in after-times, that virtue is its own reward, to sap the very foundation of that proof, which we have from reason, of another life. It is no wonder therefore, that the sentiments of the one are approved, and those of the other condemned.

And, taking the matter in this light, we may be almost led to conclude, that as God bestowed upon Solomon all other temporal advantages in reward for his asking wisdom, so He restored Job to all his temporal prosperity and happiness, and gave him a long enjoyment and increase of it, as a recompense to him for having so well defended the doctrine of a future state. Peters.

9. — the Lord also accepted Job.] The Lord also heard the prayer that he made for his friends, and so accepted of his person and devotion, that He forgave their offence upon his intercession. Bp. Hall.

10. And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, &c.] And the Lord released that miserable affliction, under which Job had been held bound, when out of his meekness and charity he was content to pray for his persecuting friends. Bp. Hall.

To "turn the captivity," seems to have been a proverbial phrase for a happy reverse of condition. For certainly it here includes all that God did for this excellent man. Scott.

11. Then came there &c.] When Job had humbled himself, and God had accepted him, He quickly turned the hearts of his friends to regard him with kindness, Prov. xvi. 7. Clark.

—— every man also gave him a piece of money,] It was an ancient custom, which is still observed in the East, never to visit a person of distinction without paying him the compliment of a present. It is uncertain, whether one kind of present made to Job on this occasion, was a sheep, or a piece of money, that had the figure of a sheep stamped upon it. Scott. See the note on Gen. xxxiii. 19.

Before CHRIST about 1520. forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and full of days. Before CHRIST about 1520.

17. So Job died,] It has been urged as an objection against Job being the author of this book, that his death is mentioned at the conclusion of it. But this is easily accounted for, in the same way as the death of Moses recorded at the conclusion of the Book of Deuteronomy, which is generally believed to be an addition by some other hand. See the note there. The story, as told by Job himself, might probably conclude at the tenth, or be continued to the twelfth verse of this chapter. Peters.

The circumstance of the remote antiquity of this book, it being presumed to be prior to the Pentateuch, and therefore the oldest book in the world, stamps the highest value upon it, as a most faithful and authentick monument of the language, the learning, the manners, and the religion, of the earlier and purer patriarchal ages: it is a valuable voucher for all those historical facts and doctrines, which it notices jointly with the books of Moses, such as the creation of the world, the ministry of good angels, the agency of bad, the fall of Adam, the universal deluge, &c.: while the difference of the manner, and the new circumstances which it incidentally relates, not to be found in the Pentateuch, prove it to be also an independent voucher, which derived information from different sources or traditions, preserved in Aram's and Joktan's families. Dr. Hales.

There is one thing to be observed on the conduct of Job's friends, and their rash unkind censures of him, which may help to set the poem in a proper light. Their harsh and unfounded reproofs were made admirably subservient to the great design of Providence with respect to Job, and the end proposed by the Divine wisdom to exhibit him as a pattern to all succeeding generations. For neither could his sufferings have been so complete, nor consequently his patience so exemplary, had not God permitted this, which may be almost called the severest trial of all, to befall him. There is scarcely any thing, which a man of a generous mind is so little able to bear, as ignominy and reproach; especially the reproaches of those, who have been his friends. This therefore is a very delicate circumstance, that could not be omitted, if the afflictions of this good man were intended to be shewn in their proper light, so as to make his virtue, and the reward of it, the more conspicuous. Peters.

The grand moral of the book is to shew,

1st, That God sometimes permits the best men to be afflicted by Satan, and that most grievously, in this life, to prove their faith, patience, humility, and resignation to His will:

2dly, That this world is not a perfect state of retribution for virtue and vice: but that

3dly, All the inequalities, which are to be found here, will be completely redressed in a future state, at the general judgment, in which the good will be finally rewarded, and the wicked punished.

Job indeed was one of the best men that ever lived; but he was not exempt from the frailties and infirmities of human nature: and he failed in some measure under his last and sorest trial. Still, with all his imperfections, he will shine forth to the end of time an admirable example and an heroick pattern of piety and patience; to be exceeded only by that inimitable Standard of perfection, who, in His state of humiliation, was "meek and lowly of heart;" who was "in all points tempted like as we are," and that "by the devil," but yet "did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth;" and who was "perfected by sufferings" in this life, that He might be transcendently "exalted at the right hand of God:" the blessed "Seed of the woman," THE MAN JESUS CHRIST. Dr. Hales.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of Psalms, that is, the Book of Hymns, or Praises of the Lord, contains the productions of different writers. These productions are called however the Psalms of David, because a great part of them were composed by him. Some of them were perhaps penned before, and some after, the time of David; but all of them by persons under the influence of the Holy Ghost, since all were judged worthy to be inserted into the canon of Sacred Writ. Ezra probably collected them into one book, and placed them in the order which they now preserve. It appears that the 150 Psalms therein contained were selected from a much greater number, which, it may be presumed, were not suggested by the Holy Spirit. The authority of those, which we now possess, is established, not only by their rank among the sacred writings, and by the unvaried testimony of every age, but likewise by many intrinsick proofs of inspiration. Not only do they breathe through every part a Divine spirit of eloquence, but they contain numberless illustrious prophecies that were remarkably accomplished, and that are frequently appealed to by the evangelical writers. The sacred character of the whole book is established by the testimony of our Saviour and His Apostles; who in various parts of the New Testament apply the predictions of the Psalms as obviously apposite to the circumstances of their lives, and as expressly intended to describe them.

The Psalms are certainly not arranged with any regard to chronology. Nor are the titles prefixed to them always designed to point out the author, but often apply to the persons appointed to set them to musick. They likewise sometimes appear to be only names of instruments, or directions for the choice of tunes.

Moses may be considered as the first composer of sacred Hymns; all nations seem afterwards to have adopted this mode of expressing their religious sentiments, and to have employed hymns in celebrating the praises of their respective objects of worship, on the idea, derived perhaps from revealed truth, that they were acceptable to the Divine nature. The composition of sacred hymns was carried to great excellence by succeeding Prophets, but was improved to its highest perfection under David, who, if he did not introduce, certainly established the custom of singing them in the publick service, with alternate interchange of verse, as in our cathedral service. And the practice of Psalmody received the sanction of Christ and His Apostles, who themselves recommended the custom by their precept and example.

The version of the Psalms in our Bible, which was made by the translators employed under King James the First, is posterior to that printed in our Prayer Books, which was executed in 1539. This last, as very excellent and familiarized by custom, was retained in the Liturgy, though, being translated chiefly from the Greek, with some variation in conformity to the Hebrew, it does not so exactly correspond with the original, as does that in our Bibles.

The interesting life of David, who was the principal composer of the Book of Psalms, is described with peculiar minuteness in the historical books of Scripture; and many of his Psalms are so characteristick of the circumstances under which they were composed, that there cannot be a more engaging task, than that of tracing their connexion with the events of his history; of discovering the occasions on which they were severally produced, and of contemplating the feeling and descriptive sentiments which they contain. If in the successive scenes of his life we behold him active in the exercise of those virtues which his piety produced, we contemplate him in this Book of Psalms in a no less attractive point of view. We here find him a sincere servant of God, divested of all the pride of royalty; pouring out the emotions of his soul, and unfolding his pious sentiment in every vicissitude of condition. At one time we have the prayers of distress; at another, the praises and exultation of triumph. Hence are these Psalms admirably adapted to all the circumstances of life, and serve alike for the indulgence of joy, or the soothing of sorrow; they chase away despondence and affliction; and furnish gladness with the strains of holy and religious rapture. Dr. Gray.

Although David's main purpose in publishing these Divine hymns, setting them to suitable musick, and singing them in the publick worship of God, was to publish to the whole world his endless gratitude for the various and wonderful mercies of God bestowed upon him; yet had he a further, and, if possible, a nobler purpose, that of dispersing true religion throughout every part of his dominions; of inspiring the hearts of his people with a true and lively sense of gratitude to God, their Benefactor, Protector, and Saviour. David well knew, that true gratitude to God is the surest source of true religion, and of every duty enjoined by it: and that, when it is poured out for publick blessings, in which all partake, it naturally mixes with every social affection, and blends them, as it were, into its own being; and by these means becomes the very best bond of society. Therefore, by perpetually pouring out the praises of God in the most exalted and heavenly compositions, and taking all occasions to recount His endless mercies and deliverances wrought for His people from the beginning, he took the most effectual means to fill their hearts with gratitude to their great Benefactor; and, in consequence of that, to render them religiously observant of His laws; to make them humane, friendly, and affectionate to one another, and conscientiously faithful and dutiful to their sovereign. Dr. Delaney.

The Psalms are full of such exalted strains of piety and devotion, such beautiful and animated descriptions of the power, the wisdom, the mercy, the goodness of God, that it is impossible for any one to read them without feeling his heart inflamed with the most ardent affection towards the great Creator and Governour of the universe. Bp. Porteus.

The Psalms are an epitome of the Bible, adapted to the purposes of devotion. They treat occasionally of the creation and formation of the world; the dispensations of Providence, and the economy of grace; the transactions of the patriarchs, the exodus of the children of Israel; their journey through the wilderness, and their settlement in Canaan; their law, priesthood, and ritual; the exploits of their great men wrought through faith; their sins and captivities, their repentances and restorations; the sufferings and victories of David; the peaceful and happy reign of Solomon; the advent of the Messiah with its effects and consequences; His incarnation, birth, life, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, kingdom, and priesthood; the effusion of the Spirit, the conversion of the Gentiles, the rejection of the Jews; the establishment, increase, and perpetuity of the Christian church; the end of the world, the general judgment, the condemnation of the wicked, and the final triumph of the righteous with their Lord and King. These are the subjects by them presented to our imaginations. We are instructed how to conceive the subjects aright, and how to express the different affections, which, when conceived aright, they must excite in our minds. In the language of this Divine Book, the prayers of the Church have been offered up to the throne of grace from age to age. And it appears to have been the manual of the Son of God in the days of His flesh; who at the conclusion of His supper is generally supposed, and that upon good grounds, to have sung an hymn taken from it; who pronounced upon the cross the beginning of the twenty-second Psalm, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and expired with a part of the thirty-first in His mouth, "Into Thy hands I commend My spirit." Thus He, who spake as never man spake, chose to conclude His life, to solace Himself in His greatest agony, and at last to breathe out His soul, in the Psalmist's form of words rather than His own. No tongue of man, or angel, as Dr. Hammond justly observes, can convey a higher idea of any book, and of their felicity who use it right.

Let us stop for a moment to contemplate the true character of these sacred hymns. Greatness confers no exemption from the pains and sorrows of life. This the Israelitish monarch experienced. He sought in piety that peace which he could not find in empire, and alleviated the disquietudes of state with the exercises of devotion.

His invaluable Psalms convey those comforts to others which they afforded to himself. Composed upon particular occasions, yet designed for general use; delivered out as services for Israelites under the Law, yet no less adapted to the circumstances of Christians under the Gospel; they present religion to us in the most engaging dress; communicating truths which philosophy could never investigate, in a style which poetry can never equal. Calculated alike to profit and to please, they inform the understanding, elevate the affections, and entertain the imagination. Indited under the influence of Him, to whom all hearts are open, and all events foreknown, they suit mankind in all situations, grateful as the manna which descended from above, and conformed itself to every palate. The fairest productions of human wit, after a few perusals, like gathered flowers, wither in our hands, and lose their fragrancy; but these unfading plants of paradise become, as we are more accustomed to them, still more and more beautiful; their bloom appears to be daily heightened, fresh odours are emitted, and new sweets are extracted from them. He who has once tasted their excellencies, will desire to taste them again; and he who tastes them oftenest, will relish them best. Bp. Horne.

The Jews, at some uncertain period, divided the Book of Psalms into five sections or books, probably in imitation of the division of the Pentateuch. These divisions end respectively with the 41st, the 72nd, the 89th, the 106th, and the 150th. The four first books of this division terminate with the word Amen, and with a peculiar form of doxology, or praise to God, which was probably, in each instance, added by the collector of the Book of Psalms. Our present order of the Psalms is perhaps that, in which they were sung in the Temple; and this may account for the occasional repetitions. Dr. Gray, Travell.

PSALM I.

1 The happiness of the godly. 4 The unhappiness of the ungodly.

[a] Prov. 4. 14. [‖] Or, wicked.

BLESSED [a] is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ‖ ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

2 But his delight is in the law of the [b] Josh. 1. 8. Ps. 119. 1. LORD; [b] and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

[c] Jer. 17. 8. 3 And he shall be like a tree [c] planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not † wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. † Heb. fade.

4 The ungodly are not so: but are [d] like the chaff which the wind driveth away. [d] Ps. 35. 5. Is. 17. 13.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

1 The kingdom of Christ. 10 Kings are exhorted to accept it.

Psalm I. This Psalm was placed first as a preface to all the rest, being a powerful persuasive to the diligent reading and serious study of the whole book, and of the rest of the Holy Scriptures, taken from that blessedness which attends upon this study and practice. Poole.

Ver. 1. Blessed is the man &c.] In other words, Great is the happiness of that man, who hath not trod in the steps of the ungodly, or, if he hath at any time been seduced by them, did not persist, like those hardened wretches, in evil courses; much less proceed so far in his impiety, as to be one of that company who deride and scoff at religion. Bp. Patrick.

4. — like the chaff &c.] The method of winnowing their corn anciently, and as it is now practised in the East, was by throwing it up against the wind with a shovel. Dr. Shaw.

5. — shall not stand in the judgment,] That is, shall not carry their cause, but in the issue of things shall come off defeated and condemned by God and the world. Mudge. Or, shall not be able to justify themselves, or endure the wrath of the Almighty at the last day. S. Clarke.

6. — knoweth the way] Meaning, approveth the way. Dimock.

This Psalm, like the sermon on the mount, opens with a "beatitude" for our comfort and encouragement, directing us immediately to that happiness, which all mankind in different ways are seeking after. He who hath once brought himself to "delight" in the Scriptures, will find no temptation to exchange that pleasure for any which the world or the flesh can offer him. Such an one will make the oracles of God his companions by day and by night. He will have recourse to them for direction, in the bright and cheerful hours of prosperity; to them he will apply for comfort, in the dark and dreary seasons of adversity. And, by continual meditation in the sacred writings, he will as naturally improve and advance in holiness, as a tree thrives and flourishes in a kindly and well-watered soil. Bp. Horne.

Psalm II. This Psalm may be supposed to relate, in the first place, to David, whom God established upon the throne of Israel, notwithstanding the opposition of his enemies. It contains also an illustrious prophecy of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, which, in spite of every attempt, both of Jews and Gentiles, God has wonderfully established, even to the uttermost parts of the earth. It is appointed to be read on Easter-day, when our Lord, by His resurrection, took possession of this glorious kingdom. Travell, Bp. Patrick. The sole application of the illustrious prophecy contained in this Psalm to the Messiah was the unquestionable doctrine of the primitive Jewish church. Dr. Hales.

WHY [a] do the heathen ‖ rage, and the people † imagine a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against his anointed, saying,

3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

4 [b] He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.

5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and ‖ vex them in his sore displeasure.

6 Yet have I † set my king † upon my holy hill of Zion.

7 I will declare ‖ the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, [c] Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee.

8 [d] Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 [e] Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling.

12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. [f] Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

PSALM III.

The security of God's protection.

¶ A Psalm of David, [a] when he fled from Absalom his son.

[a] 2 Sam. 15. 15.

LORD, how are they increased that trouble me? many are they that rise up against me. 1023.

2 Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Selah.

3 But thou, O LORD, art a shield ‖ for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.

4 I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah.

5 [b] I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.

6 [c] I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.

7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

‖ Or, about.
[b] Ps. 4. 8.
[c] Ps. 27. 3.

Ver. 1. Why do the heathen &c.] That is, Why do the Jews and Heathens combine together to attempt, what they will never be able to accomplish? Travell.

2. The kings of the earth &c.] The kings and governours of the surrounding nations conspire together to oppose the decrees of Providence, and to prevent David from sitting upon the throne of Israel; in the same manner as the rulers of the Jews will conspire against Jesus Christ, the anointed Saviour. Travell.

3. Let us &c.] Let us, say they, break asunder their fetters, and cast away from us their yoke. Dr. Kennicott.

5, 6. Then shall he speak &c.] Their impious opposition will raise His just indignation, as if He had actually spoken to them from heaven, and said, Notwithstanding all your vain attempts, I have anointed David to be king over My people Israel; as in future times I will anoint One of his posterity to sit at My right hand upon the throne of glory. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

7. — Thou art my son; &c.] These words are eminently true of Jesus the Messiah in a prophetical sense, who was invested with the royal office, when He was raised from the dead, and exalted at God's right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, Rom. i. 3; Acts xiii. 33. Green.

12. Kiss the Son,] To "kiss" a person when appointed king, was among the Eastern people an act of homage. Thus Samuel, when he had anointed Saul king, "kissed him," that is, acknowledged him for his sovereign, 1 Sam. x. 1. Green. See the note on Gen. xli. 40.

"Kiss the Son," that is, submit to Him, worship and love Him; "lest He be angry," lest He turn that grace and favour which He has offered you into heavy displeasure, "and ye perish in the way," ye be suddenly cut off in the midst of your counsels. S. Clarke.

The confidence which David manifests in this Psalm, shews, in general, that attempts against the designs of God are vain; and that nothing can hurt those whom He loves, and has promised to bless. But the application which the Apostles make to our Lord of these words, "Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee," engages us more especially to consider this Psalm as it relates to the kingdom of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, which has been established in the world, in spite of all opposition from kings and the great men of the earth, and will subsist for ever. And since this kingdom is established among us, and we have the happiness to be Christ's subjects, let us submit ourselves to this glorious King; let us serve Him with humility and joy, and place all our trust and confidence in His favour and protection. Ostervald.

Psalm III. The title of this Psalm explains the occasion of it; and it is impossible an hymn could be composed with greater propriety, or nobler sentiments of religion, at a time when David was given over by many as absolutely lost, and his enemies thought it was beyond the power of God to save him. Dr. Chandler.

Ver. 2. — Selah.] It cannot certainly be known what is meant by this word; the most probable opinion is, that it was a note in musick. Bp. Patrick.

This Hebrew word is found seventy times in the Psalms, and three times in Habakkuk. One conjecture is, that it means "the end" or "a pause," and that the ancient musicians put it occasionally in the margin of their psalters, to shew where a musical pause was to be made, and where the tune ended. Calmet.

3. — the lifter up of mine head.] David means by this expression, that God would remove his distresses, and make him triumph over all his enemies. Dr. Chandler.

4. — out of his holy hill.] That is, out of the tabernacle or place of His religious worship, which was on Zion, called on that account His holy hill. Dr. Wells.

7. — for thou hast smitten] The Hebrew properly means. "Thou art wont to smite," "Thou smitest continually."

—— broken the teeth] As men of violence are frequently resem-

PSALM IV.

1 David prayeth for audience. 2 He reproveth and exhorteth his enemies. 6 Man's happiness is in God's favour.

‖ Or, overseer.

¶ To the ‖ chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

HEAR me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; ‖ have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

‖ Or, be gracious unto me.

2 O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

3 But know that the LORD hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the LORD will hear when I call unto him.

4 Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah.

5 Offer [a] the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the LORD.

[a] Ps. 50. 14. & 51. 19.

6 There be many that say, Who will shew us any good? LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 [b] I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

[b] Ps. 3. 5.

PSALM V.

1 David prayeth, and professeth his study in prayer. 4 God favoureth not the wicked. 7 David, professing his faith, prayeth unto God to guide him, 10 to destroy his enemies, 11 and to preserve the godly.

bled to wild ravenous beasts, so the power or means made use of by such men to oppress others, are fitly denoted by the teeth, cheekbone, or jaws, &c.; these being the parts, whereby beasts of prey chiefly devour their prey. Hence, to break the teeth, cheekbone, &c. of an enemy, is frequently used in Scripture to denote the depriving an enemy of his power to hurt. Dr. Wells.

8. — thy blessing is upon thy people.] Rather, May Thy blessing be upon Thy people. Green.

The example of king David in this Psalm should teach us, that all our security depends upon God's protection, of which neither the power nor malice of our enemies can deprive us, if we repose our trust and confidence in Him. We should therefore pray to Him, that He would not suffer us to be misled by any worldly designs or stratagems, but that He would be our shield, our comforter, and supporter, and make the world see that salvation belongeth only to Him, and that His blessing is peculiar to His people. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm IV. When, or upon what occasion David penned this Psalm, is not certainly known, though the matter of it makes it probable, it was in the same (or the like) distress wherein he composed the foregoing. Bp. Patrick.

— chief Musician] That is, the master or director of the sacred musicians and musick of the temple: of whom see 1 Chron. vi. 31, and xv. 16. Poole.

— Neginoth,] Stringed instruments played on with a bow. Dr. Kennicott.

By these words, "To the chief Musician, &c." he seems to mean, I recommend this Psalm to the care and ordering of the master or director of the sacred musick in the temple, and him who plays most skilfully upon stringed instruments. S. Clarke.

Ver. 1. — O God of my righteousness:] O my righteous God. Bp. Hare, Edwards. Or the expression may mean, O God, who art to do me justice, to whom I apply for justice. Mudge, Merrick. O God, the witness and defender of my righteous cause. S. Clarke.

—— enlarged me] Set me free from distress. Street.

2. O ye sons of men, &c.] O ye wicked men, how long will ye defame my government? how long will ye carry on your vain attempts, and go on in lying and spreading false calumnies against me? Dr. Wells. Otherwise, by "my glory" he may mean, "God who is my glory:" for so God is called, Psalm iii. 3, and cvi. 20. David was accustomed to glory, and with good reason, on account of his steadfast worship of the true God, and of His favour towards him. This zeal for God's service was made a subject of disgrace and ridicule by the wicked. Le Clerc.

4. Stand in awe, and sin not:] The rendering of the Greek is, "Be ye angry, and sin not;" that is, Though you be angry, take care you do not sin. So St. Paul (Ephes. iv. 26.) recites it. Dr. Wall.

5. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness,] That is, act righteously, which is the most acceptable sacrifice. Dr. Wells.

6. There be many &c.] This seems to relate to the righteous, who, in times of calamity and persecution, like the friends of distressed David, are tempted to despond, on seeing no end of their troubles. Bp. Horne.

—— lift thou up &c.] Manifest Thy love and favour to me and mine. S. Clarke.

7. Thou hast put &c.] Other men do not so much rejoice in their vintage and harvest, when it is most abundant, as I do in the assurance of Thy favour towards me. Bp. Hall.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1st, That however our enemies seek to oppress us, yet God, whose power no man can resist, hath chosen to Himself, and will take to His love, those who are godly, and that when they cry unto Him, He will hear them. 2dly, That we ought to "commune with our own hearts," which, in the language of Scripture, is to retreat from the world, and give ourselves up to private meditation and reflection. And the design of this self-communion is, to restrain us from vice; to cherish and improve the seeds of virtue; to give us leisure for examining into the state of our souls; to stamp upon our hearts a love for God, and a reverence for His laws; to make us, in short, "stand in awe and sin not." 3dly, That in God alone is rest, in Him security, in Him tranquillity. We ought therefore to pray to our heavenly Father, that, amidst all the storms and troubles of this life, we may lie down and sleep in peace, looking up to Him for safety, succour, and protection. Bps. Nicholson and Porteus.

Psalm V. David most probably composed this Psalm, when he was persecuted by Saul or Absalom, and their adherents. Edwards.

— Nehiloth,] That is, organs or other wind-instruments. Dr. Wells.

5 The foolish shall not stand † in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.

‖ Or, from their counsels.

11 But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because † thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.

¶ To the chief Musician on Neginoth ‖ upon Sheminith, A Psalm of David.

‖ Or, upon the eighth.

O [a] LORD, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

[a] Ps. 38. 1.

2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; for I am weak: O LORD, heal me; for my bones are vexed.

3 My soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

4 Return, O LORD, deliver my soul: oh save me for thy mercies' sake.

5 [b] For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

[b] Ps. 30. 9. & 88. 11. & 115. 17. & 118. 17. Is. 38. 18.

6 I am weary with my groaning; ‖ all the night make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears.

‖ Or, every night.

7 Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.

8 [c] Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.

[c] Matth. 7. 23. & 25. 41. Luke 13. 27.

9 The LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.

Ver. 3. — and will look up.] Toward heaven, the throne of Thy glory, from whence I hope for help. Bp. Wilson.

5. The foolish] The wicked. S. Clarke.

6. — that speak leasing:] That make it their business to raise and disperse false and scandalous reports of me. S. Clarke.

8. Lead me, &c.] Guide me, O Lord, in the plain path of truth and righteousness, lest, if I err from it, my enemies rejoice and triumph. Travell.

9. — their throat is an open sepulchre;] They utter mischief with open mouths, gaping, like noisome tombs, to swallow up the innocent. Travell.

10. Destroy thou them,] Concerning passages of this imprecatory kind in the book of Psalms, it is to be observed, that they are not spoken of private and personal enemies, but of the opposers of God and His anointed; nor of any among these, but the irreclaimable and finally impenitent; and this by way of prediction rather than imprecation; which would appear, if the original verbs were translated, as they should be, in the future tense. The verse before us would then run thus: "Thou wilt destroy them, O God; they shall perish by their own counsels: Thou wilt cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions, for they have rebelled against Thee." Bp. Horne.

These four things are remarkable in this Psalm: 1st, The fervency and confidence with which good men call upon the Lord in their necessities. 2d, Their zeal for His service, and the joy and reverence with which they adore Him, in places set apart for publick worship. 3d, God's abhorrence and detestation of sin, and especially of pride and deceit; and the punishment reserved for the proud and unjust. And lastly, His favourable protection of all those that fear Him, and trust in Him. Ostervald.

Psalm VI. In this Psalm are described two conditions of the writer: in the first, he complains of some grievous disorder, heightened by the malicious joy of his enemies, from which he prays to be relieved; in the second, his prayer is answered, and he triumphs in the disappointment of his enemies. Mudge. This being one of the penitential Psalms, is appointed to be used on Ash-Wednesday, and is suitable to the condition of those, who are any ways afflicted or distressed, in mind, body, or estate. Travell.

— Neginoth upon Sheminith,] The harp of eight strings. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 2. — my bones are vexed.] That is, shaken, or made to tremble. Bp. Horne. My pain reaches to my bones and inward parts. S. Clarke.

3. — but thou, O Lord, how long?] But Thou, O Lord, how long wilt Thou thus afflict me? Dr. Wells.

5. For in death there is no remembrance of thee;] For the dead are utterly unable to commemorate Thy wonderful works, and propagate the memory of them to posterity. Bp. Patrick.

7. — it waxeth old] That is, dim, or is grown stiff with weeping. Bp. Wilson, Green.

8. Depart from me, &c.] Away with your idolatrous insinuations, as if the God of Israel could not deliver His servant: He hath heard his prayer, and will deliver him from death, and from your expectation of triumphing in his fall. Green.

—— ye workers of iniquity;] Ye that put your trust in idols. Bp. Wilson.

We are all God's children, and reproof and correction is as due to children from their parents, as nourishment; they cannot prosper without it: crosses and afflictions are God's chastisements, without which we cannot be, if we are His children. Therefore the pious and godly man does not, must not pray, that all things may succeed according to his own wish, and that he may know

10 Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

PSALM VII.

1 David prayeth against the malice of his enemies, professing his innocency. 10 By faith he seeth his defence, and the destruction of his enemies.

¶ Shiggaion of David, which he sang unto the LORD, concerning the ‖ words of Cush the Benjamite.

about 1062. O LORD my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me:

2 Lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is † none to deliver.

† Heb. not a deliverer.

3 O LORD my God, if I have done this; if there be iniquity in my hands;

4 If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me; (yea, I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy:)

5 Let the enemy persecute my soul, and take it; yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the dust. Selah.

6 Arise, O LORD, in thine anger, lift up thyself because of the rage of mine enemies: and awake for me to the judgment that thou hast commanded.

7 So shall the congregation of the people compass thee about: for their sakes therefore return thou on high.

8 The LORD shall judge the people: judge me, O LORD, [a] according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me.

13 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death; he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.

nothing but prosperity in this world: all that he prays is, that those afflictions, which he must pass through, may not fall upon him out of God's anger, and that His displeasure may not pursue him beyond that adversity. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm VII. David is said to have composed this Psalm concerning the words, or the matter of Cush the Benjamite. Whether Saul, or Shimei, or any one else, be intended under this name, it is sufficiently clear, that David had been maliciously aspersed and calumniated by such a person; and that the Psalm was written to vindicate himself from the imputation, whatever was the nature of it. Bp. Horne.

Shiggaion] This word denotes a wandering song, or a Psalm ascribed to David, as composed by him in the time of his wanderings, when he was falsely accused by his enemies, and hunted by Saul, as a partridge on the mountains. Fenwick. Or it may mean a song expressing grief. Dr. Kennicott, Street.

Otherwise it is thought to be the name of a certain kind of song, to the tune of which this Psalm was to be sung. S. Clarke.

Ver. 2. Lest he tear &c.] Lest mine enemy tear, &c. Green.

3. — done this;] With which I am falsely charged. Bp. Wilson.

4. If I have rewarded &c.] David probably alludes to the circumstance of Saul's life having been twice preserved by him, when he had been pressed by his attendants to embrace the opportunity of taking it away. See 1 Sam. xxiv. and xxvi. Bp. Horne.

6. — awake for me to the judgment &c.] Inflict that punishment upon mine enemies which Thou hast commanded should be inflicted upon malicious oppressors and persecutors. Dr. Clarke.

7. So shall the congregation — compass thee about:] So, by seeing justice done to me through Thy special Providence, shall the congregation of the people be induced to resort unto Thee to do them justice. Dr. Wells. "Compass Thee about" with praises for Thy goodness to me, and for the manifold blessings they shall enjoy under my government. S. Clarke.

—— return thou on high.] When God seems to take no notice of the transgressions of men, it is as if He descended from the place of His power, and from His judgment-seat; but when He visits and judges their iniquities, He seems to elevate Himself on high, or to return to His judgment-seat. Edwards.

9. — trieth the hearts and reins.] That is, knoweth intimately the very thoughts and desires of all men. Bp. Horne.

11. God judgeth the righteous,] The meaning is, God will maintain the cause of the righteous. Dr. Wells.

12. If he turn not, he will whet &c.] If the wicked will not repent, God will whet &c. Dr. Wells. "Whet his sword," prepare and speedily execute His judgments upon him. S. Clarke.

14. Behold, he travaileth &c.] See the folly of these wicked plots and contrivances against my life, which shall all miscarry, and deceive the expectation of this wicked slanderer. Travell.

15. He made a pit,] This alludes to the method of catching wild beasts in pits covered over slightly with reeds or small branches of trees. Dr. Shaw.

We learn from this Psalm, that the wickedness of the ungodly shall come to an end; that God lets them alone, and bears with them for a time; but if they persist in their wickedness, He prepares for them the punishments they deserve, and will make the evil which they design for others fall upon their own heads. These are powerful motives to induce us to adore the justice of God: to improve by His forbearance and longsuffering; and to avoid every thing that may expose us to His vengeance. Ostervald.

PSALM VIII.

God's glory is magnified by his works, and by his love to man.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm of David.

O LORD our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

[a] Matth. 21. 16. † Heb. founded.

2 [a] Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou † ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

[b] Job 7. 17. Ps. 144. 3. Hebr. 2. 6.

4 [b] What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

5 For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour.

[c] 1 Cor. 15. 27. † Heb. Flocks and oxen all of them.

6 Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; [c] thou hast put all things under his feet:

7 † All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field;

8 The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

9 O LORD our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth!

PSALM IX.

1 David praiseth God for executing of judgment. 11 He inciteth others to praise him. 13 He prayeth that he may have cause to praise him.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben, A Psalm of David. 1018.

I WILL praise thee, O LORD, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

† Heb. thou hast made my judgment. † Heb. in righteousness.

4 For † thou hast maintained my right and my cause; thou satest in the throne judging † right.

5 Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

Psalm VIII. The scope and meaning of this Psalm seems plainly to be this: to display and celebrate the great love of God to man, not only in his creation, but especially in his redemption by Jesus Christ; whom, as He was man, He advanced to the honour and dominion here mentioned, that He might carry on that great and glorious work. Thus Christ is the principal subject of this Psalm, of whom it is interpreted, both by Christ Himself, Matt. xxi. 16, and by His holy Apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 27; Hebr. ii. 6, 7. Poole.

In a prophetical sense, it is understood of Christ's victory over Satan. Reeves.

This Psalm is suited to the service of the Ascension-day, when we commemorate so signal a proof of the Divine love, as the exaltation of our nature, in the second Adam, to the right hand of the Majesty on high. Travell.

— upon Gittith,] Some have supposed this expression to denote, that this Psalm was to be sung to a harp which David brought with him from Gath: others, to a musical instrument used at the time of the vintage. Both may be true: the instrument bearing this name might have been used by the people of Gath; and the Jews might have adopted it from them, and afterwards it might have become the favourite instrument amidst the festivity and dances of the vintage. Street.

Ver. 2. Out of the mouth &c.] Thou art pleased to make choice of the meanest and most humble persons, and even very children in age, to sing hosannas to the Son of David, Matt. xxi. 16, to acknowledge Thy power and majesty. And this Thou hast done, that they whose pride makes them resist and despise Thee, may be thus visibly punished; and the power of the devil destroyed. Dr. Hammond.

3—6. When I consider &c.] When, on the one hand, I survey the glorious bodies in the heavens, and compare them with man, I am induced to think degradingly of him, and to wonder why he should be the object of Thy care. When, on the other hand, I consider the rank of being in which Thou at first placedst man, making him but a little below the angels, I correct myself for having made too degrading a comparison of him, and adore Thee for Thy providential care of him at present, and for the dignity to which Thou didst advance him, when Thou madest him the head of the visible creation. Green.

4. — visitest him?] With Thy presence and protection. Bp. Wilson.

The following prayer is so well adapted to the sentiments contained in this Psalm, that it may be added in the place of practical reflection. O our God, since Thou hast been so mindful of us, never suffer us to be unmindful of Thee: since Thou hast shewed Thy mercy in visiting and redeeming us, never let us shew ourselves unthankful for this Thy visitation and redemption. Suffer us not to abuse Thy creatures which Thou hast given us for food, nor Thy gifts bestowed for clothing, nor wantonly and cruelly to make use of our dominion. But give us grace so highly to esteem Thy rich mercies, and with such temperance and sobriety to use Thy creatures, that Thy name thereby may still be more magnified, Thy bounty exalted, Thy providence more declared, Thy honour enlarged, Thy person glorified, and our souls at last saved by the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Bp. Nicholson.

Psalm IX. This Psalm consists of two parts; a thanksgiving, and a prayer. Upon what particular occasion it was composed, is not known; probably, to celebrate the victories gained by David over the neighbouring nations, after God had exalted him to be king in Zion. Bp. Horne.

This and the two following are the proper Psalms appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

— Muth-labben,] Some suppose Labben to be the name of a prince or chief in the enemy's army; and Muth-labben to mean "the death of Labben," in celebration of which this Psalm may have been composed. Dimock. Or it may be the title of a tune or instrument. S. Clarke.

Ver. 3. When mine enemies &c.] Rather, It was Thou who madest my enemies turn their backs, and through the dread of Thee they fell and were destroyed. Bp. Patrick.

6 O ‖ thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them.

‖ Or, The destructions of the enemy are come to a perpetual end: and their cities hast thou destroyed, &c.

6. O thou enemy, &c.] As for the enemy, they are utterly destroyed; they are become everlasting desolations, for their cities Thou hast erased, the memory of them as well as themselves is perished. Edwards.

12. When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them:] When He calls His enemies to account for the blood of His people, which they unjustly shed or coveted. S. Clarke.

To "make inquisition for blood," is not to inquire after blood spilt, but to sit as inquisitor or judge on all capital crimes, where the blood of the offender is due to justice. "Them" refers to the "humble" or afflicted, at the end of the verse. Mudge.

14. — in the gates of the daughter of Zion:] That is, in the solemn assemblies of Thy people, the inhabitants of Zion. S. Clarke.

15. — in the pit] See the note on Psalm vii. 15.

16. — Higgaion.] A meditation, or a fit subject of meditation. Fenwick.

Or possibly the word here means an interlude of soft whispering notes, as Selah another of bolder and louder ones. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott.

17. — into hell,] By the word "hell" in this place is meant the region of the dead; and the Psalmist seems to foretell that the wicked will descend to the grave by some great and signal overthrow. Mudge, Edwards.

The Psalmist here teaches us, that God will reign for ever, and will judge the world with righteousness; that He will render to the wicked according to their works; that all those who forget Him shall perish; that He will not suffer the wicked always to prevail; that He never forsakes those that seek Him; and that the expectation of the sorrowful shall not be in vain. These are feelings which we should always retain, which should fill us with trust in His name, and strongly engage us to fear Him. Ostervald.

Psalm X. Some have supposed this Psalm to have been occasioned by foreign enemies making inroads into the country; and others by domestick ones in the court of Saul. Mudge, Rosenmüller.

Ver. 2. — the poor:] This word here means, the humble, the afflicted, and helpless. Bp. Wilson.

3. For the wicked boasteth &c.] The first part of this verse points out that alarming symptom of a reprobate mind, a disposition to exult and glory in those lusts which are the shame and disgrace of human nature, whether the world or the flesh be their object. The latter clause is differently rendered, as implying either that "the wicked blesseth the covetous, whom God abhorreth," or that "the wicked, being covetous, or oppressive, blesseth himself, and abhorreth the Lord." Either way, an oppressing, griping, worldly spirit is characterized, with its direct opposition to the Spirit of God, which teaches that sin is to be confessed with shame and sorrow; that in God alone man is to make his boast; and that it is more blessed to give than to receive. Bp. Horne.

5. His ways are always grievous; &c.] That is, always troublesome and injurious to all about him. S. Clarke. As for God's laws and judgments, he never lays them to heart; and he despises and contemns all his opposers. Dr. Hammond.

PSALM XI.

1 David encourageth himself in God against his enemies.
4 The providence and justice of God.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David. about 1060.

IN the LORD put I my trust: how say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?

2 For, lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may † privily shoot at the upright in heart.

† Heb. in darkness.

3 If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 [a] The LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

[a] Hab. 2. 20.

5 The LORD trieth the righteous: but the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth.

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and ‖ an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.

‖ Or, a burning tempest.

---

10. He croucheth, &c.] He will meanly crouch and counterfeit any thing that will serve his purpose; so that the helpless may fall into his power. Travell.

12. — the humble.] Or rather, "the afflicted," as in the margin. Street.

13. — Thou wilt not require it.] The wicked concludes from God's patience, that He will never punish him. Bp. Patrick.

15. Break thou &c.] This may be either a prayer, or a prediction, implying that the time will come, when the power of Jehovah will dash in pieces that of the enemy, by the demolition either of sin or the sinner, until wickedness be come utterly to an end, and righteousness be established for ever in the kingdom of the Messiah. Bp. Horne.

18. To judge the fatherless &c.] Thy gracious assistance shall assert the right of those who are helpless and oppressed; so that their insolent persecutors, whose sordid minds cling entirely to this world, may be prevented from doing them further mischief. Travell.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1st, That to behold the righteous cause oppressed, and good men seemingly deserted by Heaven, is apt to offend the weak, and oftentimes stagger those who are strong. 2dly, That prosperity begets presumption in the wicked; and he, who has been long accustomed to see his designs succeed, begins to think it impossible they should ever do otherwise. The longsuffering of God, instead of leading such an one to repentance, only hardens him in his iniquity. 3dly, That though "the wicked saith in his heart, Thou wilt not require it," the faithful know assuredly, that God beholds all that travail and vexation which some inflict, and others sustain, upon the earth; and that He will infallibly recompense to the former their deeds, to the latter their sufferings. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XI. This Psalm seems to have been composed by David, when, in order to avoid the evil designs of Saul, his friends advised him to flee to the mountainous parts of Judea. Edwards.

In the first verse David expostulates with his friends for advising him to fly to the mountainous parts of Judea, as the only safe retreat from Saul. In the second and third verses, he subjoins the reasons which his friends assigned for their advice. In the four last, he replies to the advice of his friends, telling them that the God of heaven, who searcheth the heart, would protect the innocent. Green.

Ver. 3. If the foundations be destroyed, &c.] When the fundamental laws of the land, such as stipulate protection to the subject, are subverted by the prince, who ought to be the guardian of them, what has the persecuted subject to trust to? or what can he do, but, as in a state of nature, fly to the fastnesses of the mountains for security? Green. Had David been guilty of any crime, he ought to have had a fair trial by the laws: but Saul tried to assassinate him, contrary to justice, and to the fundamental law of all nations. Dr. Kennicott.

4. The Lord is in his holy temple, &c.] The meaning is, that the Lord is the supreme and righteous Ruler of all affairs; that He knows the most secret designs of men, and can disappoint them. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

6. — snares,] Or, "burning coals." Bp. Horne. By this word, live coals, or simply the lightning, seems to be understood. Bp. Lowth.

—— fire and brimstone,] These terms are evidently borrowed from the history of Sodom and Gomorrah. St John also, at the conclusion of his prophecy, Rev. xx, describing the destruction of the ungodly, refers to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, which, as St. Jude informs us, "are set forth for an example," or figure, "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," Jude ver. 7. Bp. Horne. They mean dreadful judgments in this world, and eternal vengeance in the world to come. S. Clarke.

—— the portion of their cup.] It being the custom, in old

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XII.

1 David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God. 3 He comforteth himself with God's judgments on the wicked, and confidence in God's tried promises.

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of delay in help. 3 He prayeth for preventing grace. 5 He boasteth of divine mercy.

¶ To the ‖ chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

‖ Or, overseer.

HOW long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;

4 Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

5 But I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.

6 I will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

PSALM XIV.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience. 7 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

times, to set before each guest a certain portion of liquor for his share; it is very common in Scripture to describe the different allotments, which the providence of God dispenses to good and bad men, by the image of a cup. Travell.

This Psalm furnishes us with an example of the confidence which the righteous have in the Lord their God, who is their sure refuge, even when they are in the most deplorable condition, and know not what will become of them. It also teaches us, that God has His throne in the heavens; that He sees and knows both the good and the wicked; that His soul hates those that love unrighteousness; that He will cause the fire of His vengeance to fall upon them; and, as He is perfectly just Himself, He loves justice above all things, and always favours the upright. Ostervald.

Psalm XII. This Psalm is a complaint of the corrupt manners of that age, especially, as is probable, of the court of Saul; so that it was hard to find an honest plain-dealing man, in whom one might confide. Bp. Patrick.

It was probably written on the occasion of Saul's evil administration, and the persecution of David and other good men. S. Clarke.

— Sheminith,] See the note on the title to Psalm vi.

Ver. 2. They speak vanity] Or falsehood. Mudge.

4. Who have said, &c.] Who have said, We will prevail by false accusations, we are not afraid to speak or affirm what we please; for who can call us to account for what we say, however false it may be? Dr. Wells.

7. — from this generation] From this kind of scornful oppressors. S. Clarke,

8. The wicked walk &c.] It must needs be, that wicked men should abound every where, when the worst men are exalted and preferred to places of honour and command. Bp. Hall. The vile men, whom David here complains of as advanced to power, were probably his persecutors in the days of Saul, such as Doeg, Cush, &c. Green.

For the consolation of the afflicted and poor in spirit, God hath promised in this Psalm, to "arise, and set them in safety," or place them in a state of salvation. Such all along has been His promise to the Church, which, by looking back to the deliverances wrought of old for the servants of God, is now encouraged to look forward and expect her final redemption from the scorn and insolence of infidelity. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XIII. In this Psalm David, being in danger from his enemy, entreats the Lord to deliver him, and rejoices in hopes of His salvation. Green.

Ver. 2. — shall I take counsel in my soul,] That is, Shall I be perplexed in my soul, not knowing which way to turn? Bp. Horne.

3. — lighten mine eyes, &c.] Give me wisdom to find out proper measures for my safety, and cheer my spirits; lest I die with grief, or my enemy destroy me. Dr. Wells.

4. — when I am moved.] Or overcome by them. Dr. Wells.

It is observable, that this, and many other Psalms with a mournful beginning, have a triumphant ending; to shew us the prevailing power of devotion, and to convince us that prayer brings with it the comforts of heaven, and revives our weary spirits, in the gloomy seasons of sorrow and temptation. Bp. Horne.

¶ ‖ Michtam of David.

‖ Or, A golden Psalm of David.

Psalm XIV. David here complains of the impiety and general corruption of the people who had led the Israelites into captivity; describes their terrours: and begs of God to bring back His captive people to their own land. Green.

Ver. 2. The Lord looked down &c.] Contrary to the opinion of the wicked, the Lord has all along "looked down from heaven upon the children of men." Dr. Wells.

4. — eat up my people as they eat bread,] That is, cruelly devour my people without fear or remorse. Bp. Hall.

5. There were they in great fear: &c.] In the parallel place, Ps. liii. 5. after the words, "There were they in great fear," are added these, "where no fear was;" which certainly connect better with what follows, "for God is in the generation of the righteous." David is supposed to be speaking primarily of Israel's defection from him to Absalom, and here to be assigning the motive of that defection in many, namely, fear of the rebels' growing power, and distrust of his ability to protect them; which fear, he observes, was groundless, because his cause was the cause of God, who would not fail to appear in its support and vindication. Bp. Horne.

6 Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor,] Laughed at his dependence upon God. Bp. Wilson.

7. Oh that the salvation &c.] This pious wish is uttered by David, that it would please God, who dwelleth in Zion "between the cherubims," Ps. lxxx. 1, to send from thence, as from His throne, deliverance to His people; redeeming them from the oppression and captivity under which they laboured. Fenton.

The works of God are so visible to all the world, and afford such manifest indications of the being and attributes of the infinite Creator, that they plainly argue the vileness and perverseness of the Atheist, and leave him inexcusable. For it is a sign a man is a wilful perverse Atheist, that will impute so glorious a work, as the creation is, to any thing, yea, a mere nothing, (as chance is,) rather than to God. It is a sign the man is wilfully blind, that he is under the power of the devil, under the government of prejudice, lust, and passion, not right reason, that will not discern what "every one can see, what every man may behold afar off," Job xxxvi. 25, even the existence and attributes of the Creator from His works. Dr. Derham.

Psalm XV. In this Psalm the author describes a citizen of Zion; or what is necessary and requisite in the conduct and behaviour of a member of the Jewish church. Edwards. This seems to be a contrast to the preceding Psalm: it is appointed to be used on the Ascension-day, as it contains the character of one, who should be qualified to ascend into the hill, and dwell in the presence of God, whither our Saviour Christ is gone before. Travell.

Ver. 1. Lord, who shall abide &c.] O Lord, who is the man that shall be admitted to the tabernacle on Thy holy mountain? or who shall have the privilege of worshipping therein? Travell. Who shall be accounted a true member of the kingdom of grace here, and of glory hereafter? S. Clarke.

4. — He that sweareth &c.] He that promises by an oath to do a thing, and does accordingly, though it be to his own hurt, and breaks not his oath. Dr. Wells.

5. He that putteth not out his money to usury,] That is, to any poor brother Israelite, God having forbidden usury in this case: see Deut. xxiii. 19, 20. Dr. Wells.

—— shall never be moved.] Shall never fail of God's favour. Dr. Wells.

The following prayer is a just improvement of the above Psalm:

Gracious God, who hast vouchsafed to let us know upon what conditions we may be received into Thy protection and eternal favour; give us grace to practice those virtues Thou hast enjoined us; make us to love justice in all our actions, and uprightness in all our words; make us as tender in the wrongs and injuries done to our neighbours, as if they were done to ourselves; infuse into our hearts an abomination of all vice, by how great persons soever countenanced; and a love and reverence for virtue, and of virtuous men, in how little esteem soever they are in this world: and let us do all this out of our true love of Thee, and of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XVI. In this Psalm David declares his full trust and confidence in God for protection and assistance; and renders Him thanks for his security in this life, and for the hopes of a happy immortality in the next. The latter part contains a clear prophecy of the resurrection of our Lord Christ, to which St. Peter and St. Paul directly apply it, Acts ii. 25, and xiii. 35. Travell.

Ver. 2.—my goodness extendeth not to thee;] Or, my good things are not needful for Thee: they would be a sacrifice of no value; else I would give them Thee. The best sacrifice I can offer to Thee is beneficence to Thy saints and servants. Green.

4.—drink offerings of blood] This alludes to sacrifices in which the blood of men was offered. Bp. Patrick. A principal ceremony is here put for the whole of idolatry. Gerard.

—— nor take up their names into my lips.] David here declares that he will have no conversation with idolaters, nor swear by the name of their gods. Bp. Wilson.

6. The lines are fallen &c.] That is, my lot and portion, or kingdom, is appointed unto me in a pleasant country. Bp. Wilson, Dr. Wells. They used with cords to measure their grounds in surveys, Amos vii. 17: and hence, by a figure, a measuring cord comes frequently to signify any space or portion of land that belongs to a person. Dr. Hammond.

7.—my reins] That is, my inward thoughts and affections. S. Clarke.

8. I have set the Lord always before me:] As my God, and my support. Green.

9.—my glory] By this word he meant his tongue. The Psalmist, as applying his own tongue to the best purpose, the praise of God, had reason to call it his glory. Merrick.

—— my flesh also shall rest in hope.] David here declares that he would lay down his body in the grave, in a certain hope of his resurrection to immortality. Bp. Hall.

10. For thou wilt not leave &c.] I know, that Thou, O God, wilt not forsake me in distress; nor even when I die, wilt Thou suffer me to remain for ever in the grave.—So also, when that Holy Person, who shall hereafter submit to death for the sake of mankind, is laid in the grave, I am well assured Thou wilt raise Him from thence, before His body be in the least corrupted. Bp. Patrick, Travell. Thou wilt not abandon my life to the grave. This may signify either, Thou wilt not suffer the grave to exert its dominion over me too soon, that is, immaturely; or, to maintain it over me too long. In the former sense David seems to have meant it of himself: in the latter it is applicable to our Lord, whom God raised up the third day, having loosed the bonds of death, because it was not possible He should be holden of it. Green.

—— thine Holy One] Meaning David in the literal sense, and in the spiritual the Messiah, in whom the prophecy was fulfilled. See it applied to Him by St. Peter, Acts ii. 25, &c. Green.

We are here to observe the sentiments of the children of God, and their happiness. As to their sentiments, David teaches us, by his example, that they always trust in God; that they love and esteem the pious and virtuous above all; that they avoid the company and errours of the wicked, and adhere inviolably to the pure service of God. As to their happiness, this Psalm teaches us that it is very great; that God Himself is their portion and inheritance; that He is on their right hand that they may never be moved; that the sense of their happiness makes them rejoice and praise God continually; and that they are even convinced that God will not abandon them to the power of death. Lastly, this Psalm foretells that Christ should not see corruption, but be exalted to heaven, where He reigneth over all things, and has prepared for all true believers joys that never shall expire. Ostervald.

Psalm XVII. In this prayer David humbly represents to God his innocence in those things whereof he was accused, probably of seeking Saul's life and the kingdom; and therefore beseeches Him to grant him deliverance from his persecutors and calumniators. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1.—out of feigned lips.] Deceitful dissembling lips. S. Clarke.

2. Let my sentence come forth from thy presence;] Let me be tried and judged by Thee, to whom I make my appeal from the unjust accusations of men. S. Clarke.

3.—in the night;] That is, when the heart is freest from disguise. Green.

—— shalt find nothing;] Canst find in me no wicked design. Such were the appeals of David to God, for his innocence under the persecution of Saul. And what stronger appeals can be made? Green. See the old translation.

4. Concerning the works of men, &c.] Though as to what others are wont to do in like circumstances, I know it is usual not to scruple at means for self-preservation; yet from the respect I have

PSALM XVIII.

David praiseth God for his manifold and marvellous blessings.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of [a] this song in the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

[a] 2 Sam. 22.

I WILL love thee, O LORD, my strength.

2 The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, † my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

to Thy commands, I have kept me from following others in using violent and murderous practices for my safety. Dr. Wells.

8. — as the apple of the eye,] By the apple of an eye is meant its pupil. Dr. Wells. See note at Deut. xxxii. 10.

9. — who compass me about.] The allusion here is to huntsmen, who, spying game, go round to see how they may most advantageously pitch their nets to take it. Dr. Kennicott.

10. — inclosed in their own fat:] That is, bloated, and puffed up with pride. Bp. Wilson. The meaning is, that pride is the child of plenty, begotten by self-indulgence; which hardens the hearts of men against the fear of God, and love of their neighbours: rendering them insensible to the judgments of the former, and the miseries of the latter. Bp. Horne.

10, 11. They are inclosed &c.] By changing the situation of a single letter in the original, which has probably been misplaced by the copyists, these verses may be explained thus: "They draw close their cords; with their mouth they speak exultingly, We have succeeded now. They come about me, they set their eyes stooping down upon the earth." The image here is taken from hunters, and the circumstances follow very properly. They compassed him about; they inclosed him in their net; "we have succeeded at last," they said; they came round him; they stooped down and looked earnestly at him; their eyes fixed, like a lion that is just leaping at his prey. Mudge.

13. Arise, O Lord, disappoint him, &c.] The Psalmist, having characterized those who pursued after him to take away his life, now intreats God to "arise," or appear in his cause; to "disappoint," or "prevent" the enemy in his designs; and to "cast him down," to overthrow and subdue him. The next words may be thus rendered; "Deliver my soul from the wicked by Thy sword, from men by Thy hand, O Lord, from the men of the world:" the expressions, "sword, and hand of Jehovah," being frequently used to denote His power and vengeance. Bp. Horne.

—— which is thy sword:] Which is the instrument Thou employest for the execution of Thy judgments. S. Clark.

14. — whose belly thou fillest &c.] Whose bellies Thou fillest with Thy stores, or abundance of temporal blessings; whose children are fed to the full, and who leave the rest of their substance to their little ones. Green, Bp. Horne.

15. As for me, I will behold &c.] He either prays that he may keep on, or is confident that he shall keep on, in a way of righteousness, and enjoy the presence of God, and be satisfied every morning with the image or idea of God. Mudge.

—— when I awake,] He appears to say this with reference to the resurrection of the just. Dr. Hammond.

The confidence with which David calls upon the Lord in this Psalm, and the hope he possessed that God would have regard to his innocence, shews the great happiness of the good; since they can in all conditions apply themselves to God with assurance, knowing that He will always be their protector. The last words of this Psalm should raise our thoughts to the desire and expectation of eternal life, which the righteous shall enjoy after the resurrection. Osterwald.

Psalm XVIII. The departure of the children of Israel from Egypt, the passage of the Red sea, and the appearance of God on mount Sinai, are subjects from which the Hebrew poets have taken the most sublime part of their imagery: and as these historical facts, and the images taken from them, have a certain connexion with each other, it often happens that more than one of them are made use of, and they are united and blended together in order to increase the dignity and grandeur of the subject; of which we have an example in this Psalm. Bp. Lowth, Street. The sublimity of the figures used in this Psalm, and the consent of ancient commentators, even Jewish as well as Christian, but above all the quotations made from it in the New Testament, prove that the kingdom of the Messiah is here pointed at, under that of David. Bp. Horne. There is no doubt that after David had first composed this Psalm, he reviewed it, and made some small alterations in it; which is the reason of the trifling differences between this Psalm as it stands here, and as it stands in 2 Sam. xxii. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 2. — horn of my salvation,] See note on 1 Sam. ii. 1.

and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.

5 The | sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me.

6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then the earth shook and trembled: the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8 There went up a smoke † out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He bowed the heavens also, and came down; and darkness was under his feet.

10 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail stones and coals of fire.

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of | many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 He brought me forth also into a large place: he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness: according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also upright † before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.

24 Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands † in his eyesight.

25 With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt | shew thyself forward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people: but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For thou wilt light my | candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have | run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

5. The sorrows of hell &c.] David here means that such sorrows as had almost brought him to the grave, compassed him about: and his enemies came so wonderfully close to him as not to leave him any room to escape them by flight. Dr. Wells.

—— the snares of death] These 'snares' or cords 'of death,' or the grave, allude to the ancient manner of hunting, which is still practised in some countries, and was performed by surrounding a considerable tract of ground by a circle of nets (compare Ps. xci. 3.) and afterwards contracting the circle by degrees, till they had forced all the beasts of that quarter together into a narrow compass: and then it was that the slaughter began. Patrick.

7. Then the earth &c.] The Psalmist seems here to allude to a terrible tempest, which fell upon his enemies, and made the very earth tremble under them. Bp. Patrick. This and the following verses are highly poetical: and must be understood to signify, that the deliverance of David was the effect of the Divine power miraculously exerted. Fennel.

8. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils.] The ancients placed the seat of anger in the nose, or nostrils, because when the passion grows warm or violent, it discovers itself by the heated, vehement breath which proceeds from them. This description of a smoke arising out, and a fire breaking forth from, the nostrils of God, denotes, by a poetical figure, the greatness of His anger and indignation. Dr. Chandler.

10. — he rode upon a cherub, &c.] He was attended, and as it were, carried by angels as in a chariot, and did move very swiftly: yea He did move as swift as the wind, and a rapid wind did accompany His descent. Dr. Wells.

11. He made darkness &c.] The meaning is, that He and all His heavenly attendants were surrounded with thick dark clouds. Dr. Wells.

12. — coals of fire.] The word rendered "coals of fire" signifies living, burning coals. Where the lightning fell, it devoured all before it, and turned whatever it touched into burning embers. Dr. Chandler.

13. The Lord also thundered &c.] This alludes to the manner of God's destroying the Egyptians by drying up the channels of the sea, that deep on which the earth is said to be founded, and so engaging them however much, and then bringing the waters upon them. This poetical description is preparatory to David's deliverance which follows. Fenton.

16. — many waters.] Solemn and great calamities are frequently expressed in Scripture under the figure of a deluge of waters. Bp. Lowth.

18. They prevented me] That is, came on me suddenly, unawares, when I was unprovided and helpless. Bp. Patrick.

19. — a large place.] Meaning a state of liberty. Bp. Patrick.

21. — and do wickedly &c.] That is as the perverse Thou wilt shew Thyself to adversaries. Fenton.

28. — light my candle.] Give me light and joy. Bp. Wilson.

29. For by thee &c.] Through Thee I break the troops of the enemy, through my God I leap over walls, that is, can the surest cities of my enemies. Ainsworth. Bp. Wilson.

30 As for God, his way is perfect: [a] the word of the LORD is [b] tried: he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 [c] For who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and [d] thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that [e] my feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast [f] subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies: that I might destroy them that hate me.

41 They cried, but there was none to save them: even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.

42 Then did I beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people: and thou hast made me the head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 [g] As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me: [h] the strangers shall [i] submit themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall fade away, and be afraid out of their close places.

46 The LORD liveth: and blessed be my rock: and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that [j] avengeth me, and [k] subdueth the people under me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies: yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the [l] violent man.

49 [m] Therefore will I [n] give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 [o] Great deliverance giveth he to his king: and sheweth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore.

30. His method my, &c.] He maketh me able to stand on the sides of mountains and rocks, (which were anciently used as fortresses in time of war.) The feet of the sheep, the goat, and the hart, are particularly adapted to standing on such places. Street.

34. —so that a bow of steel, &c.] Probably this sentence should be read, agreeably to some of the ancient versions, Thou makest my arms like a bow of brass. Edwards. Bp. Lowth.

The ancients had the art of giving a temper to brass which made it as hard and solid as steel; and made various kinds of weapons and armour of brass. Calmet.

35. —thy gentleness, &c.] That is, Thy kindness maketh me great. Street.

36. Thou hast enlarged, &c.] David means, that God had opened a free course for him to victory and triumph, and had also endued him with strength to run that course. Bp. Horne.

40. —given me the necks of mine enemies:] The word, here translated "neck," is the back part of the neck; and therefore equivalent to back, as the Greek translates it. The passage may therefore be rendered, As for my enemies, Thou givest me their back; that is, puttest them to flight. Modern. Bp. Lowth.

45. The strangers shall fade away, &c.] Foreign nations shall wax faint and tremble in their strong holds. Edwards.

48. —from the violent man.] He certainly means from Saul. Dr. Lowman.

50. —to his anointed.] To Christ, the spiritual David, and to all true Christians, which are His seed. Bp. Wilson.

From the first words of this hymn we learn, that the Divine favours and deliverances should inspire us with the most tender and sincere affection, and lead us to praise God continually. David's account of the extreme dangers he had been exposed to, and the wonderful power of God displayed in his deliverance, shews, that no whatever extremities we fall, we should never despair of God's assistance, if we fear Him, that His power is greater than man's, and that He never wants means to deliver those who hope in Him. Lastly, David's zeal, expressed in the latter verses of this Psalm, proves that it is not sufficient to praise God in private for His mercies, but we ought to proclaim His praises and lovingkindness to the utmost of our power, that His holy name may be glorified by us, and by all men. Universal.

Psalm XIX. This Psalm descends gradually from an opening uncommonly splendid and sublime, to a gentler and more moderate strain, and the softest expressions of piety and devotion. The whole composition abounds with great variety of both sentiment and imagery. The glory of God is demonstrated in His works both of nature and providence. The piety of it is so natural, and yet so exalted; so easy to be understood, so adapted to move the affections, that it is hardly possible to read it with any attention, without feeling something of the same spirit by which it was composed. Bps. Lowth and Sherlock.

From a citation which St. Paul hath made of the fourth verse, it appears, that, in the exposition of this Psalm, we are to raise our thoughts from things natural to things spiritual: we are to contemplate the publication of the Gospel, the manifestation of the Light of life, the Sun of righteousness, and the efficacy of evangelical doctrine. In this view the ancients have considered the Psalm, and the Church hath therefore appointed it to be read on Christmas-day. Bp. Horne.

PSALM XX.

1 The church blesseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob † defend thee.

2 Send † thee help from the sanctuary, and † strengthen thee out of Zion.

† Heb. set thee on an high place.
† Heb. thy help.
† Heb. support thee.

Ver. 2. Day unto day uttereth speech,] The return of the sun from one day unto another day tells us that there is a God; and the like return of the moon or stars, or darkness from one night unto another night, teaches us the same. Dr. Wells.

3. There is no speech &c.] They are not endowed, like man, with the faculty of speech; but they address themselves to the mind of the intelligent beholder in another, and that, when understood, a no less forcible way; the way of picture, or representation. Bp. Horne.

4. Their line is gone out &c.] Rather, Their sound is gone out into all the earth, and their report, &c. Dr. Waterland and Old Translation. The meaning is, they proclaim the Divine glory in plain and intelligible characters, to the remotest parts of the earth; as the Gospel shall be proclaimed hereafter by the preaching of the Apostles, Rom. x. 18. Travell.

—— a tabernacle for the sun,] The nuptials of the Jews, and other Eastern nations, were celebrated with great magnificence and splendour. They were held under a tent, or canopy, erected for that purpose, to which custom David here alludes; as he does in the next verse to the custom of the bridegroom's going out at midnight with lamps and torches. The passage will receive great light from our Saviour's parable of the wise and foolish virgins. Dodd.

8. — pure,] The original word should be translated as it is in the Greek, "clear" or "bright." Bp. Lowth, Dr. Kennicott.

9. — clean,] That is, pure, or free from all alloy of superstition. Green.

10. More to be desired &c.] The Divine law is far more precious than the richest treasures upon earth; and more delightful to him who practises it, than the most luxurious sensual pleasures. Travell.

—— and the honeycomb.] Or, as in the margin, the dropping of the honeycomb, which is the choicest part of the honey. Green.

Pliny says, "In all kinds of honey, that which flows of itself as wine and oil, and is called acœton, that is, without sediment, is most commended." And Homer mentions "honey spontaneously distilling," as peculiarly sweet. Parkhurst.

12. — his errors?] That is, sins of ignorance and infirmity; or, as it follows, those secret faults which escape our notice. Green.

13. — presumptuous sins;] Wilful and deliberate sins. Dr. Wells.

—— the great transgression.] The meaning of this expression may be, rebellion and final apostasy from God. Bp. Horne. Or, idolatry. Dr. Kennicott. Or it may be taken generally, any great transgression. Dr. Wells.

King David here mentions two principal means by which God has made Himself known to us; which are, the works of nature, and His word. Let us therefore make a good use of both these means; meditating upon the marvellous works of God, which afford us such proofs of His power and wisdom; but particularly let us apply ourselves to the reading and meditating on His word. David's high encomiums on God's word inform us, that it is a sure, evident, and unerring rule of faith and practice; that it is of infinitely more value than the most excellent things of this world; that it was given to enlighten and sanctify us, to rejoice and comfort the heart; that the fear of the Lord procures perfect happiness to those who are possessed with it, and that there is great reward in the keeping of His holy commandments. Ostervald.

Psalm XX. The first verses of this Psalm are spoken by the people, or rather the priests of the temple, upon the king's coming to offer sacrifice, before he set out upon some expedition: in the sixth, the high priest, upon seeing the sacrifice consumed to ashes, joined perhaps with the other usual signals of favour, breaks out in the expression, "Now I know, &c." The last again are spoken by the people or priests as a chorus. Mudge.

This and the following are two of the Psalms appointed to be used in our Inauguration service.

Ver. 2. Send thee help &c.] Send thee help from the holy heavens, and from His sanctuary, which is a type and figure thereof; and strengthen thee out of Zion, where He hath by His command appointed the holy ark of His covenant to be placed, and from whence He gives answers and directions to all thy actions. Bp. Hall. See note at Exod. xxvi. 33.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and † accept thy burnt sacrifice. Selah.

† Heb. turn to ashes: or, make fat.

4 Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed; he will hear him † from his holy heaven † with the saving strength of his right hand.

7 Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the LORD our God.

8 They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save, LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE king shall joy in thy strength, O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

2 Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

3 For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

4 He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.

5 His glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For thou hast † made him most blessed for ever: thou hast † made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

† Heb. set him to be blessings. † Heb. gladded him with joy.

7 For the king trusteth in the LORD, and through the mercy of the Most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore ‖ shalt thou make them turn their † back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

‖ Or, thou shalt set them as a butt. † Heb. shoulder.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 23 He praiseth God.

---

3. — accept] The Hebrew expression is, "turn to ashes," (see the margin;) and if we look to the period under the law, we shall find this the usual method of signifying the Divine acceptance of the sacrifice. Dr. Magee. See the note on Gen. iv. 4.

5. — in the name of our God] To the honour of God, as the conqueror.

—— we will set up our banners:] In token of triumph; which among other ways was celebrated by the setting up of banners or trophies. Poole.

9. Save, Lord: &c.] We ought to read this according to the Greek translation: O Lord, save the king; and hear us when we call. Mudge, Calmet.

It appears from this Psalm, that a nation should pray for the prince whom God hath set over them, and interest themselves in the advantages or deliverances which God grants to their governours: also that it is the favour and protection of God which makes the glory and safety of the people, and of kings; that it is to that favour, and not to their own strength and power, they are to attribute their good success; and therefore, that kings and their subjects should strive above all things to obtain the favour of God. Ostervald.

Psalm XXI. This is a Psalm of triumph and thanksgiving for victory. It is generally considered as describing, under the figure of David, the exaltation, glory, and majesty of Christ, who completely triumphed over death. The fourth, fifth, and sixth verses, are indeed particularly applicable to our blessed Redeemer. It is appointed by the Church to be used on the Ascension-day. Travell.

Ver. 3. For thou preventest him &c.] Didst crown him with manifold blessings both more and sooner than he either desired or expected. Poole.

4. He asked life of thee, &c.] David had in the days of Saul only asked for "life;" and God had given to him and his posterity, "length of days for ever and ever." Mudge.

9. Thou shalt make them &c.] The meaning is, they shall as certainly perish, as if they were cast into a fiery oven; the Lord, who is justly incensed against them, shall utterly consume them with a sharp and unavoidable destruction. Bp. Patrick.

10. Their fruit] That is, their offspring. Green.

12. — shalt thou make them turn their back,] Or, as in the margin, Thou shalt make them a mark to shoot at. Green.

—— thine arrows] The judgments of God are called His "arrows," being sharp, swift, sure, and deadly. Bp. Horne.

From this, as from the preceding Psalm, we learn that God defends just and pious kings who call upon Him and trust in Him; whereas He throws down and destroys unrighteous princes, and especially such as oppose the establishment of His kingdom, and the designs of His providence. Ostervald.

Psalm XXII. This Psalm contains a most full and clear prophecy of our blessed Saviour's passion, and the propagation of His Gospel. It is entitled a Psalm of David; and I doubt not but that the greatest part of it related primarily to David himself. It contains a most pathetick and poetical description of his own sufferings and calamities; but expressed in such figures as were most literally fulfilled in the sufferings of Christ. Archdeacon Randolph.

¶ To the chief Musician upon ‖ Aijeleth Shahar, A Psalm of David.

MY [a] God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far † from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and † am not silent.

16 For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: [d] they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18 [e] They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

19 But be not thou far from me, O LORD: O my strength, haste thee to help me.

It is very properly appointed to be used on Good Friday, as it contains a wonderful prophecy of our Saviour's sufferings; and He Himself repeated the first verse of it while He was hanging on the cross. Travell.

— Aijeleth Shahar,] Or, hind of the morning. The morning-hind was probably a well-known song, which gave name to a particular tune, if not instrument; not unlikely of the melancholy kind, as possibly it might describe a poor hind pursued by hunters. Mudge.

Ver. 1. My God, my God, &c.] Christ, the beloved Son of the Father, when hanging on the cross, complained in these words, that He was deprived, for a time, of the Divine presence and comforting influence, while He suffered for our sins. If the Master thus underwent the trial of a spiritual desertion, why doth the disciple think it strange, unless the light of Heaven shine continually upon his tabernacle? Bp. Horne.

—— the words of my roaring?] He means the words of his complaint. Bp. Patrick.

3. — inhabitest the praises of Israel.] That is, dwellest in the tabernacle, where the praises and thanksgivings of Israel are offered to Thee for mercies granted them. Edwards, Bp. Horne.

7. All they &c.] From this verse to the twentieth, the words are prophetical of Christ, and literally fulfilled in Him. See Matth. xxvii. 39. Dimock.

12. Many bulls &c.] Mine enemies, who are as furious and formidable as the bulls fed in the rich pastures of Bashan, beset me on every side. Green. See note at Numb. xxxii. 1.

14. I am poured out like water,] He means that his flesh has no consistency, or is loose as water. Green.

15. My strength is dried up &c.] In other words, I am quite exhausted and dried up, like a piece of a broken pot: so extreme is my thirst, that I am scarce able to utter my complaints; but am just upon the point of expiring and returning to the dust of the earth. How exactly was this prophecy verified in the person of our blessed Lord, when He sweat as it were great drops of blood, and endured all the agonies of the cross! Travell.

—— my tongue cleaveth to my jaws;] Parching thirst, here expressed by the Psalmist, is one of the usual concomitants of extreme grief of mind, or torture of body. Dr. Hales.

16. For dogs have compassed me: &c.] A multitude of malicious people have beset me fiercely as dogs, and got me into their power in order to wound and destroy me. Dr. Hammond. Thus these words may be figuratively applied to David; but they were literally fulfilled in the Saviour of the world, whose feet and hands His enemies pierced through with nails on the cross. Green.

17. I may tell all my bones: &c.] The skin and flesh were distended by the posture of the body on the cross, that the bones, as through a thin veil, became visible, and might be counted; and the holy Jesus, forsaken and stript, naked and bleeding, was a spectacle to heaven and earth. Bp. Horne.

18. They part my garments &c.] This was so far true of David, that his enemies spoiled his goods, and rifled his substance. But it is particularly remarkable, that at our Saviour's crucifixion the soldiers divided His garments among them, and His coat being without seam, they would not rend it, but cast lots for it; and thus, as the Evangelists themselves tell us, this Scripture was fulfilled. Such exact agreement in these minute circumstances could not occur casually; and it carries with it a striking proof of the interposition of God, and a strong confirmation of the truth of the Gospel. Archdeacon Randolph.

21. Save me from the lion's mouth: &c.] The faith of David was as exemplary as his piety. God seems to have inspired him with a comfortable assurance that his prayers were heard. "For Thou hast heard me," says he, "from the horns of the unicorns." Archdeacon Randolph.

—— unicorns.] The animal here meant is probably the rhinoceros. It has one horn upon its nose, which is very strong, and grows to a considerable length. Green. See the note on Numb. xxiii. 22.

David's confidence in God's grace.

25. — I will pay my vows] That is, offer the sacrifice which I vowed. Mudge.

26. The meek shall eat &c.] Of this sacrifice the humble or afflicted, he says, should eat, and praise God for the mercy He had shewn to His servant. The latter part of the verse is addressed to them; "your heart shall live for ever:" take courage and fear not, God will never desert them that fear Him. Mudge.

29. All they that be fat &c.] It is here foretold that the "fat ones of the earth," the great, the opulent, the flourishing, the nobles and princes of the world, should be called in to partake of the feast, and join in the Christian worship and service. Rich, as well as poor, are invited; and the hour is coming when all the race of Adam, as many as sleep in the "dust" of the earth, unable to raise themselves from thence, quickened and called forth by the voice of the Son of Man, must bow the knee to the King Messiah. Bp. Horne, Archdeacon Randolph.

29—31. — and none can keep alive &c.] The Greek version and some other ancient versions probably give the true reading of these clauses: "My soul shall live, and my posterity shall serve God. My seed shall be reckoned to the Lord in the generation which shall come. And they shall declare His righteousness to a people which shall be born; for He, the Lord, hath done it." The words thus read and translated are a plain prophecy of the propagation of the Gospel, and calling of the Gentiles. Abp. Secker, Archdeacon Randolph.

31. — he hath done this.] That is, He hath fulfilled His promises and Divine predictions. Michaelis.

We are presented in this Psalm with a very plain prophetick description of our Lord's sufferings and profound humiliation. Here we read those very words which He uttered at His crucifixion, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Here we see pourtrayed the insults offered to Him by the Jews while He hung upon the cross, His hands and His feet pierced, His garments divided by lot, and the principal circumstances described of His passion and death. God was pleased that all these things should be foretold by David, to the end that, when they came to pass, we might have the clearest proof of His being the true Messiah. The contemplation therefore of this Psalm ought on the one hand to strengthen our faith in Jesus the Saviour of the world; and on the other hand, to quicken our hopes in Him, while it sets before us the glory to which God has exalted Him after His sufferings, and which He now enjoys at the right hand of the Father. Ostervald.

Psalm XXIII. The sweetness of many of the Psalms in composition, sentiment, diction, and arrangement, has never been equalled by the finest productions of heathen poetry. And I must confess I never met with any image so truly pleasing and delightful, as the following description of the Deity in the character of a shepherd. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 3. He restoreth my soul:] When I am ready to faint, He refreshes me and brings me to life again. Mudge.

4. — the valley of the shadow of death,] A valley overspread with the horrours of darkness and of death. Green.

—— thy rod &c.] Thy protection will dispel all my fears. Green.

5. — thou anointest my head &c.] The overflowing of a cup, and the being anointed with sweetsmelling oils, are the usual emblems of a feast, and are made use of in Scripture as the images of plenty and prosperity. Travell.

The natural homage which such a creature as man bears to an infinitely wise and good God, is a firm reliance on Him for the blessings and conveniences of life, and an habitual trust in Him for deliverance out of all such dangers and difficulties as may befall us. The man who always lives in this disposition of mind, when he reflects upon his own weakness and imperfection, comforts himself with the contemplation of those Divine attributes which are employed for his safety and welfare. He finds his want of foresight made up by the omniscience of Him who is his support. He is not sensible of his own want of strength, when he knows that his Helper is almighty. In short, the person who has a firm trust on the Supreme Being, is powerful in His power, wise by His wisdom, happy by His happiness. He reaps the benefit of every Divine attribute, and loses his own insufficiency in the fulness of Infinite Perfection. Addison.

Psalm XXIV. The bringing of the ark of God to mount Zion by David, 1 Chron. xv, gave occasion to this Psalm. The removal of the ark was celebrated in a great assembly of the people, and with suitable splendour during every part of the ceremony. The Levites led the procession, accompanied by a great variety of vocal and instrumental musick; and this ode appears to have been sung to the people when they arrived at the summit of the mountain. The opening is expressive of the supreme and infinite dominion of God, arising from the right of creation. Bp. Lowth. The ascension of our Lord into heaven is represented by the carrying of the ark up to mount Zion; and the sublime description in the four last verses, of the entrance of the King of glory, is highly applicable to Him: it is therefore appointed to be read on the Ascension-day. Travell.

Ver. 2. — he hath founded it upon the seas, &c.] He hath settled it so firmly, and established it above the waters, that they cannot overwhelm it. Bp. Patrick.

3. — who shall stand in his holy place?] Who shall serve God acceptably in the place which He hath sanctified to His service? Poole.

4. — who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity,] That is, he who hath not put his trust in false gods. Bp. Lowth.

5. — righteousness] By this word here is meant a just recompense. Bp. Wilson.

6. — thy face, O Jacob.] Or rather, as in the margin, "Thy face, O God of Jacob." Bp. Hare. See the note on Psalm xvii. 15. The Israelites were required to worship at the sanctuary of God three times a year. Bp. Lowth.

7. Lift up &c.] We may now conceive the procession to have arrived at the gates of the tabernacle. While the ark is brought in, the Levites, divided into two choirs, sing alternately the remainder of the Psalm. Indeed it is not impossible that this mode of singing was pursued through every part of the ode; but towards the conclusion the fact will not admit of a doubt. Bp. Lowth. The lifting up the head is an image adapted to a portcullis; the head of which, as it is lifted, rises up conspicuous above the gate. Mudge.

We learn from this Psalm, that God, who created the earth, is the supreme and almighty King thereof, and that His glory and power ought to be celebrated for ever; also, that those only will be admitted into the presence of the Lord who walk uprightly, who are sincere and faithful in all their behaviour, who avoid fraud and deceit, who call upon the Lord and seek His face. Osterwald.

Psalm XXV. David seems to have written this Psalm after the commission of some grievous sin, or in some great distress; which brought to mind all the offences of his youth, and made him earnestly beseech God to pardon them, and to deliver him from his enemies. Travell.

Ver. 3. — let them be ashamed &c.] Pour shame upon the face of those which rise up against me spitefully, without any just cause or provocation on my part. Bp. Hall.

8. — teach sinners in the way.] That is, penitent sinners. Dr. Wells.

9. The meek will he guide &c.] He will never fail to assist and direct in the ways of virtue, those who are truly humbled before Him for their sins. Dr. Hammond.

10 All the paths of the LORD are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.

11 For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great.

12 What man is he that feareth the LORD? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose.

13 His soul † shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth.

15 Mine eyes are ever toward the LORD; for he shall † pluck my feet out of the net.

16 Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted.

17 The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses.

18 Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins.

19 Consider mine enemies; for they are many; and they hate me with † cruel hatred.

20 O keep my soul, and deliver me: let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in thee.

21 Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on thee.

3 For thy lovingkindness is before mine eyes: and I have walked in thy truth.

4 [b] I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

5 I have hated the congregation of evil doers; and will not sit with the wicked.

10. All the paths &c.] They, who observe and keep His commandments, will find abundant goodness and faithfulness in the ways of the Lord, who will order all things for their good. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

12. — that he shall choose.] That he ought to choose. Dr. Kennicott.

14. The secret of the Lord &c.] The counsel and covenant of the Lord to them that fear Him, is to make known or reveal to them His will. Dr. Hammond. Or by the word "secret," may be meant, God's love and favour, which is called His "secret," Job xxix. 4; Prov. iii. 32; and that very fitly, because it is known to none but him that enjoys it. Poole.

17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged:] This should rather be translated, "Relieve the sorrows of my heart." Dr. Kennicott, Bp. Lowth.

20. — let me not be ashamed;] That is, disappointed. Bp. Wilson. Compare Job vi. 20.

21. — for I wait on thee.] For I trust in thee. Mudge.

22. Redeem Israel, &c.] After imploring forgiveness of his sins, that the people might not be visited for his sake, and after expressing his personal penitence and sorrow, David concludes with a prayer for the deliverance of his country.

After the example of David, the pious and devout Christian, who really and in truth puts his entire confidence in God, is never weary or ashamed of that confidence. If he finds that his prayers are not so graciously heard, as that he receives all that he hath prayed for, he receives yet an unspeakable comfort by having done as he ought to do; and though he prospers not as he would wish, yet if he prays as he should, he hath made a good progress towards his own deliverance; and hath raised a good defence against any affliction that invades him: nor will he be frighted out of his innocence by the promises, or threats, or tyranny of his proud oppressors. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XXVI. It is generally agreed, that this Psalm was composed on account of some injurious charge brought against David by some of Saul's courtiers. Dimock.

Ver. 1. Judge me,] Give sentence in my favour. Street.

2. Examine me, &c.] David here begs of God, who knew the secret thoughts of his mind, and the inclinations of his will, to search deeply into them, and prove his integrity. Bp. Patrick.

4. — vain persons,] False and treacherous persons. Bp. Patrick.

6. I will wash &c.] David means, that he would cleanse his heart and hands from all the impurity of his sins; and then that he would approach to God's altar, and offer his sacrifice. Bp. Hall.

—— wash mine hands] It was a custom among the Jews for those who brought sacrifices to be offered, to wash their hands before they laid them upon the heads of the victims. Lewis.

It was a common usage for the Jews always to wash before prayers; and the priests in particular were not to perform any office in the sanctuary, till they had poured water from the laver and washed in it. It is to this that David here alludes. Fenton.

—— compass thine altar,] Among other ceremonies connected with the feast of tabernacles, it was usual on the seventh day for the people to compass the altar seven times, carrying branches in their hands, and singing hosannas. Lewis.

8. — the place where thine honour dwelleth.] That is, the tabernacle, where God had made His glory to dwell among them. Bp. Patrick.

12. My foot standeth in an even place:] That is, I stand in a sure place, so that I need not fear to fall. Bp. Wilson.

vency. But the care this pious king took to purify himself before he went unto the altar of God, should convince us, that in order to appear in the presence of God, we should be pure, and lead a holy life. Lastly, we should join with David in the prayer which he offers up to God at the end of this Psalm, and beseech Him to preserve us from being like the wicked, lest we share with them in the punishments that are prepared for them. Ostervald.

Psalm XXVII. David, being persecuted by his enemies, and in danger of his life from false witnesses, testifieth in this Psalm his entire confidence in the protection of the Almighty; beseecheth Him to continue His favour; and is persuaded He will never forsake him. Green. He probably composed it upon the occasion of Saul's persecution of him. Rosenmüller.

Ver. 2. — to eat up my flesh,] This expresses the utmost malice of his enemies, assailing him with the fury of wild beasts.

3. — in this will I be confident.] I will still have confidence in God's assistance. Dr. Hammond.

4. — that I may dwell &c.] David's prayer was, that he might perpetually attend upon the service of God, and enjoy the sweet pleasure the Lord there imparts to His people, and receive His directions from the tabernacle. Bp. Patrick.

—— the beauty of the Lord,] By "the beauty of the Lord" he means the cheering countenance of God, whose presence was more conspicuously manifested in His temple. Edwards.

5. — pavilion:] The word, here translated "pavilion," signifies originally a shepherd's cot or shed, made of the boughs and branches of trees: and is applied to any habitation, provided it be private; as a lion's den, a king's palace; and also to the holy tabernacle, as it is in this place. When therefore David says, that God should "hide him in His pavilion," he means that God would keep him as safe, as any one should be, whom a king should receive into his tent, so that his enemies would not dare to hurt him. Rosenmüller.

—— in the secret of his tabernacle] That is, in as safe a place as the Holy of Holies, which is called God's secret, Ezek. vii. 22. Poole.

8. — Seek ye my face;] These are words which his heart dictated as from God. Mudge.

—— Thy face, Lord, will I seek.] I will apply to Thee by prayer. Bp. Wilson.

12. — false witnesses are risen up &c.] As this passage is strictly prophetical of the Messiah, much light is thrown on it from Mark xiv. 56. Dr. Kennicott.

13. — in the land of the living.] In this present life. Bp. Patrick.

14. Wait on the Lord:] Wait the Lord's time with patience. Bp. Wilson.

In this Psalm we are to remark, 1st, That those who fear God and trust in Him, are never afraid of men; but are calm and unshaken, even when reduced to the most deplorable condition. 2dly, That the most inestimable advantage, and the greatest consolation we can enjoy in this world, is, to meet often in the house of God, there to praise and adore Him, and to receive the testimonies of His favour. 3dly, That when God does incline our hearts to seek His face, we should improve the mercy, and not slight the gracious invitation. Ostervald.

Psalm XXVIII. In this Psalm David intreats God to defend him from the malice and artifice of his heathen enemies, and from the judgments that should fall upon them. He then praises God for the care He had taken of him, trusts in His assistance, and prays for the prosperity of the Israelites. Green.

Ver. 1. — them that go down into the pit.] Those that are abandoned to destruction. Bp. Patrick.

3. Draw me not away with the wicked,] Cast me not off with them. Bp. Wilson.

4, 5. Give them according &c.] In these verses, as indeed in most of the imprecatory passages, the imperative and the future tenses are used promiscuously; "Give them — render them — He shall destroy them." If therefore the verbs in all such passages were uniformly rendered in the future, every objection against the Scripture imprecations would vanish at once, and they would appear clearly to be what they are; namely, prophecies of the Divine judgments, which were afterwards to take place. Bp. Horne.

8. The Lord is their strength, &c.] It is the Lord who gives courage and strength to His servants, and protects him whom He hath appointed king over His people. Bp. Patrick.

A prayer collected out of the above Psalm: O heavenly Father, we humbly beseech Thy goodness, when we cry unto Thee, to hear our supplications; for if Thou turn away Thine ear, and neglect to give us audience in these our pressures and afflictions, the men of Thy hand will prevail against us, and bring down our life into the pit. We acknowledge before Thee that our ways have been perverse, our works wicked, and the imagination of our hearts only vain and evil continually: yet, O Lord, we desire to be holy; render therefore unto us, not according to our deserts, but according to Thy great mercies. Bp. Nicholson.

Psalm XXIX. In this Psalm the supreme dominion of God, and the awfulness of His power, are demonstrated from the tremendous noise, and the astonishing force of the thunder, which the Hebrews, by a bold but very apt figure, denominated "the voice of the Most High." It is enough to say of it, that the sublimity of the matter is perfectly equalled by the unaffected energy of the style. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.] In other words, Worship ye the Lord in that beautiful and glorious sanctuary, where He exhibits His presence to His people. Bp. Hall. See the margin.

3. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters:] That is, the thunder, called here the voice of the Lord, is upon the waters collected in the clouds. Green.

5. — the cedars of Lebanon.] See note at 1 Kings v. 6.

6. He maketh them also to skip &c.] This description is figurative and poetical. The figures are rather too strong for a modern language; but they are agreeable to that of the Hebrews, in which they have a singular beauty. Calmet.

7. — the flames of fire.] That is, the flashes of lightning. Mudge.

8. — the wilderness of Kadesh.] The wilderness of Kadesh was part of that wilderness through which the Israelites passed in their way to Canaan. See Numb. xiii. 26. Bp. Horne. It was the frontier of Idumea and Paran. Calmet.

9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve,] The terrour of this voice causeth the hinds to cast their calves for fear. Bp. Hall.

—— and discovereth the forests: and in his temple &c.] The storm strips the trees of their leaves, and opens the recesses of the forest. Travell.

While His temple remaineth unshaken by these tempestuous blasts, and all His pious worshippers there securely sing the praises of His glorious majesty and power. Bp. Patrick.

Other commentators explain this difficult verse differently: The voice of Jehovah maketh the oaks to tremble; and maketh bare the trees of the woods. Bp. Lowth, Abp. Secker.

And in His temple every thing proclaimeth His glory. By "His temple" may be meant the heavens. Bp. Hare.

The practice of the great duty of praising God for His works, and for His mercies, will preserve in our souls a constant and 10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

PSALM XXX.

1 David praiseth God for his deliverance. 4 He exhorteth others to praise him by example of God's dealing with him.

1042. ¶ A Psalm and Song at the dedication of the house of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

2 O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 O LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

4 Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks ‖ at the remembrance of his holiness.

5 For † his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure † for a night, but † joy cometh in the morning.

6 And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 LORD, by thy favour thou hast † made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

‖ Or, to the memorial.
† Heb. there is but a moment in his anger.
† Heb. in the evening.

† Heb. settled strength for my mountain.

8 I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

9 What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? [a] Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;

12 To the end that ‖ my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. O LORD my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

2 Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou † my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake lead me, and guide me.

lively sense of His glorious perfections; which will be a means of making us truly religious, and will make all other religious duties easy and pleasant to us. His almighty power will make us dread offending Him; the sense of our dependence upon Him, and His continual care over us, will incline us to love Him with all our heart and soul; and the grateful remembrance of His past mercies will make us put our whole trust in Him for the time to come. Bp. Wilson.

Psalm XXX. This Psalm of David is plainly expressive of his gratitude to God for delivering him from his foes, and rescuing him from his distresses. And as it appears, 2 Sam. v. 11, and 1 Chron. xiv. 1, that Hiram, king of Tyre, sent materials and workmen to build an house for David about the time when the Lord had confirmed him king over Israel, I apprehend that this hymn might have been composed on that occasion. Street.

A Psalm and Song at the dedication &c.] An ode on taking possession of the house built for David. Street.

Ver. 3. O Lord, thou hast brought &c.] When I was just at the point of death, Thou hast preserved me from the very brink of the grave. Travell.

4. — give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.] The meaning is, Celebrate His holy name. Green.

5. — is life:] Life is often put for a long and happy time, as in Psalm xxxiv. 12; and for an eternal and immortal duration, 2 Tim. i. 10; Jam. i. 12. Poole.

6, 7. And in my prosperity &c.] There should not be a full stop at the end of the sixth verse; but after the words "stand strong" in the seventh. The word rendered "prosperity" denotes peace and tranquillity, arising from an affluent prosperous condition. When God had settled him quietly on the throne, he thought all his troubles were over, and that he should enjoy uninterrupted happiness; that God had "made his mountain so strong, that it should never be moved:" that is, had placed him secure from all danger. Dr. Chandler.

7. — thou didst hide &c.] He means, that when God withdrew His protection, displeased with his presumption, and the security he had fondly promised himself, he was immediately disturbed by fresh troubles, and his dream of uninterrupted tranquillity vanished. Dr. Chandler.

9. What profit is there &c.] What service, said I, can I do Thee, when I am dead? Shall my ashes be able to please Thee, or to declare the truth of Thy promises? Bp. Patrick.

This religious song of thanksgiving is particularly adapted to persons who have escaped great danger. Those whom God has thus delivered ought to celebrate His goodness, and invite all men to celebrate it with them. But above all, we ought to take notice of the instructions here given us concerning the usefulness of afflictions. Even the best of men sometimes forget themselves in prosperity: but God makes use of adversity to inspire them with a holy fear, to bring them to a sense of their duty, and to oblige them to have recourse to Him; and then He is reconciled and hears their cry, changing their sorrow into joy, and their complaints into songs of praise. Ostervald.

Psalm XXXI. David being pursued by his enemies, probably in his retreat from Keilah, 1 Sam. xxiii, intreats the Lord in this Psalm to deliver him. He then returns thanks that his prayers are heard. Green.

Ver. 3. — for thy name's sake lead me,] The Psalmist here beseeches God to glorify Himself, by guiding his steps so that he might escape the danger which threatened him. Bp. Patrick.

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and ‖ let them be silent in the grave.

5. Into thine hand I commit my spirit:] David, in his distresses, might by these words express his resignation of himself and his affairs into the hands of God: but it is certain, that Christ actually did expire upon the cross with the former part of this verse in His mouth, Luke xxiii. 46. Bp. Horne.

—— thou hast redeemed me,] David means, that it was God who had often rescued him out of his difficulties. Bp. Patrick.

6. — lying vanities:] That is, Gentile practices, of consulting auguries and divinations, which deceive their expectations. Dr. Hammond. Or by this expression may be meant, strange gods. Dr. Kennicott.

23. — plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.] Will fully punish in due time the insolent oppressor. Dr. Wells, Bp. Wilson.

The considerations that make the soul cheerful in the hour of affliction, are, that God is merciful; that as He is not ignorant, so neither is He unmindful of our troubles: that He is a friend, who "knows" us in adversity, no less than in prosperity: that He hath not subjected us to the necessity of being overcome by our spiritual enemies; but hath, "with the temptation, made a way for us to escape." Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXII. It is generally supposed that David wrote this Psalm after the pardon he obtained for his adultery with Bathsheba, and his murder of Uriah. Rosenmüller. This being a penitential Psalm, is appointed for Ash-Wednesday. Travell.

— Maschil.] This word seems to signify, as in the margin, a Psalm of instruction or recollection. The Psalms which have this title are generally of a moral nature, and are designed to convey some salutary advice, (as this, ver. 8,) and to dispose the mind to attention and reflection. Mudge.

Ver. 3. When I kept silence,] While I neglected to confess my sin I had no rest; my mind and conscience persecuted me day and night. Bp. Wilson.

4. — my moisture is turned &c.] The following description of a Syrian summer, by Dr. Russell, is the most beautiful comment that can be met with on this passage: "From the end of May (if not sooner) not so much as one refreshing shower falls, and scarce a friendly cloud appears to shelter from the excessive heat of the sun, till about the middle of September. The verdure of the spring fades before the middle of May; and before the end of that month the whole country puts on so parched and barren an aspect, that one would scarce think it capable of producing any thing, there being but very few plants which have vigour enough to resist the extreme heat." Harmer.

6. — in the floods &c.] That is, when calamities (which are here represented under the image of floods of water) are sent abroad into the world, they shall not come near the good man. Green.

7. — thou shalt compass me about &c.] Thou shalt give me occasion to sing unto Thee many songs of deliverance. Dr. Wells.

8. I will instruct thee &c.] Hearken then unto me, thou that art in search of godly wisdom: I will give thee counsel, and direct thee to the wisest and safest course of life; I will have thee continually under my care and inspection. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

9. — lest they come near unto thee.] The rendering should be, agreeably to some of the ancient versions, "else they will not come near thee." Dr. Hammond, Green.

11. Be glad in the Lord,] It seems probable that this verse ought to be the first of the following Psalm. Bps. Lowth and Hare, Dr. Kennicott.

Outward calamities, and inward pangs of conscience, are the strokes of God's hand, designed to humble the sinner, and lead him to confession; and in the infliction of these, such severity is sometimes necessary, that the patient is brought to death's door, before a turn can be given to the disease: but the pain of a blow upon an ulcerated part, however exquisite, is well compensated if, by promoting a discharge, it effect a cure. Encouraged, by the example and declaration of David, to hope for mercy on confession of sin, it is foretold in this Psalm, that humble penitents shall be led to make their prayer unto God in the acceptable time, and in the day of salvation, while He "may be found:" that so they may be forgiven, and preserved from great and overwhelming calamities; from the fears of death, and the terrours of judgment. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXIII. This Psalm is an acknowledgment of the great power, and wisdom, and goodness of God in His works of creation and providence; wherein all are obliged to sing praises to His name, and faithfully to serve and depend on Him. Dr. Hammond. It was probably composed on the occasion of some special benefit received from God. Reeves.

Ver. 2. — with harp: — with the psaltery] The harp among the Jews was played upon with a bow; the psaltery with the fingers. Rosenmüller. He mentions these instruments, because they were used in the publick worship and praises of God in the tabernacle. Poole.

—— with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.] This should be rendered as it is in the Greek, "on the ten-stringed lute." Green.

3. — a new song;] The "new song" shews the Psalm to be composed upon a new occasion. This appears likewise from the tenth verse, which speaks of some grand defeat given to the projects of the heathen. Mudge.

4. — all his works &c.] That is, all His works are done agreeably to His word or promises. Dr. Wells.

6. By the word of the Lord &c.] The meaning is, that the whole body of the heavens, and all that is in them, were created by His bare speaking of the word, commanding that they should have a being. Dr. Hammond.

22. — according as we hope in thee.] We desire Thy mercy on no other terms, and in no other degree, but in proportion to the sincerity of our trust. Dr. Kennicott.

This Psalm engages us to make these reflections: 1. That it is a duty highly reasonable, as well as delightful, to praise God; but that none but upright men can discharge it in a becoming manner. 2. That we ought to praise God, because He has created the world by His almighty power, and because He governs it wisely and justly by His providence. 3. That if it was a great advantage to the Israelites to be the people whom God had chosen for His inheritance; the favour which God has vouchsafed us, in admitting us into His church, and entering into covenant with us, is a still more glorious privilege. 4. That God has a perfect knowledge of all that passes in the world, that He sees all the thoughts and actions of men; the recollection of which should engage us to walk before Him in holiness and righteousness. Lastly, we should observe that the true way to have God our friend, is to trust in Him, to fear Him, and without ceasing to apply to Him for mercy. Ostervald.

Psalm XXXIV. The title informs us, that this Psalm was composed by David when he was sent away from Abimelech on his feigning himself mad. See 1 Sam. xxi. 13. But the name there given to the king of Gath is Achish. Hence Dr. Kennicott conjectured, that Abimelech was the common title of the king of Gath, (as Pharaoh of Egypt,) and Achish his particular name. Street. This Psalm, which was perhaps composed for the use of those who resorted to David, contains the noblest encouragements to piety and virtue, from an assurance, that all such as are so devoted are the immediate care of almighty God; as all those of a contrary character are His abhorrence, and the sure marks of His vengeance. And surely this Psalm, considered in this light, is one of the noblest, the best-turned, and best-judged, and best-adapted compositions that ever were penned. Dr. Delaney. It should be remarked, that the twentieth and twenty-first verses are of particular importance, as containing the famous prophecy, that "not a bone of the Just One (Messiah) should be broken," John xix. 36. Dr. Kennicott.

Ver. 5. They looked unto him, &c.] The Greek, and other ancient versions, render this verse, "Come unto Him, and be enlightened; and let not your faces be ashamed." Dr. Wall.

—— and were lightened: &c.] The meaning is, that the humble looked unto God for David's protection, and received that light, that is, that comfort and joy from Him upon his return in safety, which diffused itself throughout their whole hearts; so that "their faces were not ashamed," or, as the word signifies, "not put to the blush for shame," by being disappointed as to their hope on his account. Dr. Chandler.

1 David prayeth for his own safety, and his enemies' confusion. 11 He complaineth of their wrongful dealing. 22 Thereby he inciteth God against them.

¶ A Psalm of David.

PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 [a] Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

[a] Ps. 40. 14. & 70. 3.

5 [b] Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

[b] Job 21. 18. Ps. 1. 4. Isai. 29. 5. Hos. 13. 3.

6 Let their way be † dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

salvation vouchsafed to the faithful, is here signified; whether we suppose that by "the angel of Jehovah," is meant the presence of Christ in the church militant; or the ministration of created spirits to the heirs of salvation, as in the case of Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 17. Bp. Horne.

8. O taste] Seriously consider and make trial, by a steadfast fidelity to God in all troubles. Dr. Wells.

9. — his saints:] His servants. Bp. Wilson.

11. — ye children,] Ye that are humbly disposed to be taught as children. Dr. Wells.

21. — shall be desolate.] This should be rendered with the Chaldee Paraphrase, "shall be condemned to die." Green, Rosenmüller.

This Psalm is among the noblest and most edifying: David here teaches us, both by his instructions and example, that when God grants us any favour, we should not only thank Him for it, but invite other men to praise Him with us; that the Lord never fails to hear and deliver those who call upon Him in their distress; that His eyes are always over the righteous, whom, if exposed to many misfortunes, He delivers at the last; whereas He sets His face against the wicked for their destruction. Ostervald.

He who seeketh the Lord shall find Him; and he who hath found Him, can want nothing. Faith, hope, charity, temperance, purity, patience, and contentment, are the true riches; and the lack of them the poverty most to be dreaded. Moreover, God is never wanting to provide for His servants, what He seeth needful and best in matters temporal. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXV. This Psalm, from the contents of it, seems to have been composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul, and falsely accused by Doeg, and others of his enemies; from whom he begs of God for deliverance. Edwards. This Psalm, though in some measure applicable to David, the author of it, is more strictly so to Jesus. See John xv. 25. Dimock.

Ver. 2. — shield and buckler,] The word, here rendered "shield," seems to denote the lesser kind of shield; and that translated "buckler," the great shield. Edwards.

4. Let them be confounded &c.] Concerning this and the like imprecations, which may seem strange and severe, it must be considered, 1. That they did not proceed from any passionate or revengeful spirit in David towards his enemies; from which how free he was, appears not only from his own words here, ver. 12—14, but from the whole course of his life, and the frequent instances mentioned in his history of his meek and merciful carriage to his enemies when they were in his power. These imprecations, therefore, proceeded from his zeal for God, and for piety and justice; to which they shewed themselves to be constant and implacable adversaries: and by the direction of the prophetical Spirit of God, wherewith he was endued; which Spirit did exactly know the condition of his enemies; and that those, against whom they were levelled, were hardened and incurable. 2. That they contain nothing but a prayer to God, that He would accomplish His own threatenings, and execute His own law of retaliation, of "eye for eye, and tooth for tooth;" and so bring upon them the evils which they designed against him. Which also was of great and good use, both to glorify God's justice, and to warn and reform other sinners by the terrour of their example. 3. That they may be taken only for predictions. Poole. See the note on Psalm v. 10.

6. Let their way be dark &c.] So that none of them may be able to escape on account of the darkness and slipperiness of their way: but that all of them may be easily overthrown by the pursuing angel. Rosenmüller.

23 Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my LORD.

24 Judge me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, † Ah, so would we have it: let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

† Heb. Ah, ah, our soul.

26 Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

27 Let them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour † my righteous cause: yea, let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

† Heb. my righteousness.

28 And my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness and of thy praise all the day long.

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous estate of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

7. — in a pit,] See the note on Psalm vii. 15.

10. All my bones shall say,] By this figure David means to declare, that he would praise God with all the strength of his body, as well as power of his soul. Dr. Wells.

11, 12. False witnesses — spoiling of my soul.] This was never more literally true of David, than it was of the holy Jesus, when, standing before Pontius Pilate, He received no other return from the Jews for all the gracious words which He had spoken, and all the merciful works He had done among them, than that of being slandered and put to death. Bp. Horne.

12. — to the spoiling of my soul.] Attempting to rob me of my life. Green.

13. — my prayer returned &c.] The meaning seems to be, My prayer returned with blessings on my own head. Merrick. The sentence may perhaps be better explained thus, "My prayer rested or settled in my bosom;" that is, I was never without a prayer for them in my breast. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott. The Hebrews used various attitudes in prayer; the one here alluded to was that used in great grief, at which time they prayed with the head inclined on the bosom. Rosenmüller.

15. — and I knew it not;] This may mean, that the perfidy of his enemies was unknown to him; he suspected no such thing from them. Rosenmüller.

16. With hypocritical mockers &c.] Together with these were profane flatterers and buffoons; and their rage against me was as violent as if they could have devoured me. Bp. Patrick. Or the passage should perhaps rather be rendered, "They vilified me with profane scoffs and taunts; and ceased not to gnash upon me with their teeth." Edwards, Green.

17. — my darling from the lions.] Deliver my dear and precious life from these cruel and brutish enemies. Bp. Hall.

19. — that hate me without a cause.] This is applied to Christ by Himself, John xv. 25. Bp. Wilson.

21. — our eye hath seen it.] They openly avow that they themselves have been eyewitnesses of my treasonable practices. Dr. Wells. Or the meaning may be, We have seen what we wished, we have had our will. Green.

24. Judge me,] Vindicate me. Green.

What David in this Psalm says against his enemies, must not be misunderstood. Nor must we believe that we are allowed to wish evil to those who do evil to us, or to rejoice when that evil happens to them. We are to consider, that the enemies of David were enemies to God Himself; and that David, being a Prophet, and having an express promise of the Divine assistance, might denounce destruction to them: but, in his heart, he did not wish it to befall them, and he was even afflicted at the evil which did befall them, as he himself testifies in this Psalm. Ostervald.

Psalm XXXVI. There are three parts of this Psalm: the first, in which the author describes the treacherous and false contrivances of wicked men: the second is the address of the good man to God, in which he acknowledges all those attributes, which are the support of righteous men, to be infinite and boundless; and from thence his assurance of being supported: the last, as the consequence of this, represents the downfall of the wicked. Mudge.

Ver. 1. The transgression of the wicked &c.] The transgressions of a bad man shew plainly, in the apprehension of a good one, that the former is destitute of the true fear of God. Abp. Secker. Or differently, thus; "The wicked man, according to the wickedness of his heart, saith, There is no fear of God before mine eyes." Bp. Lowth.

Or this passage may be rendered, with some ancient versions; "The wicked man hath an oracle of rebellion in his heart." The wicked man hath no regard to the oracles of God; he hath one in his heart which dictates nothing but rebellion. Mudge, Green.

2. — he flattereth himself &c.] He sooths himself in his own conceit, and cunningly imagines that he shall not be discovered: yet at length shall his iniquity come to light, and make him hateful to all men. Bp. Patrick.

5, 6. Thy mercy, O Lord, &c.] This passage is truly sublime. Here the mind of the Psalmist seems to exert its utmost faculties in vain to describe the attributes of God, whose unparalleled magnitude mocks its feeble endeavours; and to this end it employs the grandest imagery that universal nature can suggest: and yet this imagery, however great, proves totally inadequate to the purpose. Bp. Lowth.

8. — the fatness of thy house;] By this expression is meant all God's blessings, both temporal and spiritual. Bp. Hall.

9. — in thy light shall we see light.] The images of light and darkness are commonly made use of in all languages to imply or denote prosperity and adversity, agreeably to the common sense and perception which all men have of the objects themselves. But the Hebrews employ those figures more frequently, and with less variation than other people. Bp. Lowth.

10. — thy righteousness] Rather, Thy beneficence or bounty. Street.

11. — remove me.] Or cause me to fall. Dr. Wells.

12. There are the workers &c.] The expression used in the original, represents strongly before the eyes the sudden downfall of the wicked. Upon the very spot where they practise their treachery, they receive their downfall. Mudge.

We have here represented to us the behaviour of wicked men, who fear not God, and sooth themselves in their sins, instead of hating them; and the very different conduct of the righteous, who adore the justice of God, and are grateful for His favours. The use we should make of this Psalm is, to avoid the sentiments of the wicked, and to cleave to God by a sincere love and holy fear; to the end that we may rejoice in Him with the righteous, and say with David, "O God, how excellent is Thy lovingkindness!" Ostervald.

Psalm XXXVII. In this Psalm David seems to intend to prevent the scandal or offence against religion, which might be taken from observing the wicked in prosperity, and the godly under affliction. Dr. Wells. He may be supposed speaking to himself, or exhorting others to trust in God from his own example. Dimock.

Ver. 1. Fret not thyself &c.] In other words, Be not vexed at the prosperity of the wicked, neither be provoked by it to accuse the providence of God, nor wish thyself in their situation. Bp. Patrick.

5. Commit thy way &c.] We are exhorted here to commend our honest designs to God, and to leave the event to Him, in full confidence that He will direct it for the best. Travell, Bp Patrick.

27 Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.

28 For the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

‖ Or, goings.

31 The law of his God is in his heart; none of his ‖ steps shall slide.

32 The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

‖ Or, a green tree that groweth in his own soil.

35 I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like ‖ a green bay tree.

36 Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

10. — thou shalt diligently consider &c.] When thou seekest for his place, there shall not be found any footsteps of his prosperity. Dr. Wells.

12. — gnasheth upon him &c.] Could even tear him with his teeth. Bp. Wilson.

13. The Lord shall laugh &c.] The Lord, who takes notice of all his secret plots, shall laugh him to scorn; for, howsoever the foolish wicked man flatters himself in the conceit of his safety, yet the all-wise God sees that his destruction is at hand. Bp. Hall.

18. The Lord knoweth &c.] The actions of good men are seen, and will not fail of being rewarded by God; not only with the comforts of this life continued to them and their posterity, but with a never-failing possession in heaven. Dr. Hammond.

20. But the wicked shall perish, &c.] They shall vanish away into smoke; as the fat of lambs, which is laid upon the altar in sacrifice, so shall they be suddenly consumed. Bp. Hall.

27. — dwell for evermore.] "Dwell in the land for ever." That is, enjoy a long and prosperous life in the land, with great tranquillity and peace. Bps. Hare and Patrick. Thou shalt never be exiled from the land which God hath given thee. Rosenmüller.

33. The Lord will not leave &c.] God will find means to clear his innocence, though he be pronounced guilty by his enemies. Dr. Wells.

—— nor condemn him] Nor suffer him to be condemned. Edwards.

35. — like a green bay tree.] This should rather be rendered, as in the margin, "like a flourishing tree in its native soil." Green.

The original simply signifies, "a native tree;" a tree growing in its native soil, not having suffered by transplantation: such a tree spreads itself luxuriantly. Script illust. Expos. Ind.

36. Yet he passed away, &c.] Yet, firm as he seemed to stand, he vanished on a sudden like a cloud: I looked about for him, to see whether he might not, like a tree, be transplanted to some other spot; but there was no such man to be seen. Bp. Patrick.

37 Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his pitiful case.

¶ A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any † rest in my bones because of my sin.

† Heb. peace, or, health.

4 For mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness.

6 I am † troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

† Heb. wried.

7 For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also † is gone from me.

† Heb. is not with me.

11 My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my † sore; and ‖ my kinsmen stand afar off.

† Heb. stroke.

‖ Or, my neighbours.

12 They also that seek after my life lay snares for me: and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

13 But I, as a deaf man, heard not; and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

---

38. — the end of the wicked shall be cut off.] They and their posterity shall be destroyed. Dr. Hammond.

The design of this whole Psalm is, to convince men of the justice of God's dealings with all His people; to persuade them not hastily to conclude or judge of the ways of Providence, but to wait to see the end; not to depend upon their own reason, but to apply to God for light and satisfaction; for human reason being too short to pass judgment upon the ways of an infinitely wise and just God, would only lead men into doubts and fears, and rash censures of His providence. Bp. Wilson.

The "meek," mentioned at ver. 11, are they, who bear their own adversities, and the prosperity of their enemies, without envy, anger, or complaint. For these there is a possession in the kingdom and city of the Prince of "peace," which "the Lord the righteous Judge shall give them at that day." "Blessed are the meek," saith that Lord and Judge Himself, "for they shall inherit the earth," Matth. v. 5. In the mean time, they, and they only, possess the present earth, as they go towards the kingdom of heaven, by being humble, and cheerful, and content with what their good God has allotted them. They have no turbulent, repining, vexatious thoughts that they deserve better; nor are vexed, when they see others possessed of more honour, or more riches, than their wise God has allotted for their share. But they possess what they have with a meek and contented quietness; such a quietness as makes their very thoughts pleasing, both to God and themselves. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXVIII. This is another of those Psalms; which are called penitential, and therefore applicable to Ash-Wednesday: it was composed by David under some great affliction and anguish of mind. It is not certain whether he here describes the state of his mind under various images, chiefly borrowed from bodily diseases and pains; or whether he was actually afflicted with sickness: very probably he was suffering from both. His complaints strongly express the anguish he felt from the conviction of his sinfulness, the displeasure of God, the coldness of his friends, and the insults of his enemies. He humbly supplicates the pardon of God, confesses his guilt, and, with patience and resignation, declares his hope and confidence to be only in the Divine favour. Travell.

— to bring to remembrance.] That is, either that by this humble and mournful prayer he might prevail with God to remember and pity him; for now He seemed quite to have forgotten him: or that, by reviewing this Psalm afterwards, he might call to mind his former danger and misery, and God's wonderful mercy in delivering him from them; which all are too apt to forget. And that others also might remember and consider what God had done for him; first in chastening, and then in restoring him: and might make use of his example for their benefit. Poole.

Ver. 2. — thine arrows &c.] The arrows, and the hand of God, are His judgments on sin; those internal pangs which pierce the soul, and those external afflictions which weigh down the spirits. Bp. Horne.

4. For mine iniquities are gone over mine head:]. That is, my sins have brought so many evils upon me, that they overwhelm me like a flood. Bp. Patrick.

5. — because of my foolishness.] Meaning, the affliction had been justly brought upon him by his sin foolishly committed. Bp. Hall.

9. — all my desire is before thee;] That is, Thou knowest all my wants. Dr. Wells.

11. My lovers and my friends &c.] This passage is very similar to the words of Job xix. 13, and following verses, in which he complains of being deserted by his friends and companions; many other parts of this Psalm are also like the words and circumstances of Job. Rosenmüller.

13. — heard not; &c.] The meaning is, that he took no notice of their designs; only in a patient and humble silence commended himself to the care of God. Bp. Hall.

This Psalm offers to our consideration these three things: 1. It represents to us the sentiments of a penitent sinner, humbled under the load of his sins, and a sense of the Divine displeasure: these sentiments are expressed in this prayer; "O Lord, rebuke me not in Thy wrath: neither chasten me in Thy hot displeasure."

14 Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whose mouth are no reproofs.

‖ Or, thee do I wait for.

15 For ‖ in thee, O LORD, do I hope: thou wilt ‖ hear, O LORD my God.

‖ Or, answer.

16 For I said, Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me: when my foot slippeth, they magnify themselves against me.

† Heb. for halting.

17 For I am ready † to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me.

18 For I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin.

† Heb. being living, are strong.

19 But mine enemies † are lively, and they are strong: and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.

20 They also that render evil for good are mine adversaries; because I follow the thing that good is.

21 Forsake me not, O LORD: O my God, be not far from me.

† Heb. for my help.

22 Make haste † to help me, O LORD my salvation.

¶ To the chief Musician, even to [a] Jeduthun, A Psalm of David.

I SAID, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep † my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me.

† Heb. a bridle, or, muzzle for my mouth.

2 I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was † stirred.

† Heb. troubled.

3 My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue,

4 LORD, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know ‖ how frail I am.

‖ Or, what time I have here.

2. What is said in this Psalm is very proper for the instruction and consolation of those who are afflicted with pains and diseases, or in any other manner: David teaches them by his own example to look upon the evils that befall them, how severe soever they be, as a just correction for their sins; and to ask God pardon for them. 3. If they suffer by the malice and injustice of men, they should imitate David in his humility, patience, and meekness; and wait with resignation till God, who never forsakes the innocent, is pleased to deliver them. Ostervald.

Psalm XXXIX. The foundation of this Psalm is much the same with the foregoing: the author laboured under some great illness; he knew it due to his sins; he was afraid therefore to speak in the presence of the wicked, lest he might say any thing of which they might take advantage: at last, however, he could hold no longer, but bursts forth into an acknowledgment of the weakness and vanity of man in the hands of God; confessing that, whatever he might think heretofore, he has now no longer any expectation but from God, whom therefore he supplicates for mercy. Mudge. This Psalm is with the utmost propriety appointed by our Church to be used at the burial of the dead, as a funeral is indeed the best comment upon it. Bp. Horne.

—Jeduthun,] Jeduthun is mentioned as a singer in 1 Chron. xxv. 3. This Psalm was perhaps composed by David to be sung by that Jeduthun. Street.

Ver. 2. I was dumb &c.] I refrained from speaking what was good; from giving God the glory with relation to my illness, by acknowledging His greatness and justice, and the nothingness and sinfulness of man.—This seems to shew that the reason why he would not speak at all before his enemies was, because he did not care to give them an occasion of triumph, as he must by acknowledging his own weakness and sin: but he could not bear this restraint; it grew worse and worse, and therefore he burst out, &c. Mudge. There is a time to keep silence, because there are men who will not hear; there are tempers savage and sensual as those of swine, before whom the treasures of heavenly wisdom are not to be cast. This consideration stirreth up fresh grief and trouble in a pious and charitable heart. Bp. Horne.

4. Lord, make me to know &c.] Teach me, O Lord, to consider my end, and what is the measure of my days, that I may be sensible how short my life is. Green.

5. —mine age is as nothing before thee:] That is, my age is as nothing in Thy sight; or, when compared with Thy duration. Green, Merrick.

6. —in vain:] In the pursuit of transitory things. Bp. Wilson.

7. —what wait I for?] What can I depend on for happiness? Bp. Wilson.

——my hope is in thee.] I will not impatiently desire any thing in this world: but my hope is in Thee, as the only true and lasting good. Dr. Wells.

8. —the reproach of the foolish.] That is, a matter of scorn and insult to the sneerer and atheist, who is the fool described by the Psalmist; and who is indeed eminently so above all others. Mudge.

11. —thou makest his beauty to consume away &c.] See the note on Job iv. 19.

and even guilt, as the impatient do, they find their way, if any one can be found, out of every perplexity. By excluding eager hopes and high desires of earthly good, this pious principle excludes also jealous envy, keen resentment, tormenting fears, bitter disappointments, and final dislike of every thing. He that gives himself up into the hands of God, with unfeigned approbation of the Divine conduct in whatever may befall him, will act as he ought on all emergencies, with uprightness and alacrity, with courage and honour; will suffer with a composed and even temper; will thus give testimony to the efficacy of religion, and vindicate the dispensations of Providence to mankind. Abp. Secker.

Psalm XL. In this Psalm David thankfully acknowledges God's goodness to him, in delivering him from some special and imminent danger. He then declares his resolution to serve God faithfully and cheerfully, by fulfilling His will to the utmost of his power, and by teaching it to others. He commends himself to God's merciful Providence, beseeching Him to finish what He had begun, by continuing to be his deliverer. The circumstance of three verses of this Psalm, being quoted in the tenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, proves that they are a direct prophecy of Jesus Christ, who only could fulfil the will of God completely, and who came into the world for that very end; as well as to declare His righteousness to the great congregation of the whole world. This application of the Psalm makes it highly suitable to Good Friday. Travell.

Ver. 2. He brought me up &c.] David means, that God delivered him, when he was fallen into such deep distress, that he was quite unable to help himself. Bp. Patrick.

3. — shall see it,] Shall see this great deliverance. Dr. Wells.

4. — respecteth not the proud, &c.] The proud and those who incline to lies are, on one side, the haughty daring atheists, who laugh at all application to any power above; and on the other, those who put their confidence in idol superstitions, which are all lie and deceit. Mudge.

6. — mine ears hast thou opened:] This phrase seems to signify, the fitting and disposing the ear to hear God's will. It is remarkable, that the Greek version, as well as the quotation from it in Heb. x. 5, instead of the phrase, "Mine ears hast Thou opened," reads, "A body hast Thou prepared Me:" intimating the great superiority of Christ's death to the sacrifices of the law. Travell, Edwards.

—— burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required.] That is, considered independent of that holiness of life, without which sacrifice never could have been acceptable to a holy and righteous God. Dr. Magee.

7. — Lo, I come: &c.] Lo, I come to make an offering of myself by a sincere obedience unto Thee; as Christ will also actually do, by offering up His body to be a sacrifice for the sins of the world: In the volume of the book of the law it is thus written, or required of all truly religious persons, particularly of kings, and so of me in both respects, to be careful to offer a due obedience to Thy will, as well as to legal sacrifices. Dr. Wells.

—— in the volume] Or "roll," of the book. See Jer. xxxvi. 2, &c. It is well known that the ancient Jewish books did not, like ours, consist of distinct leaves bound together; but were, as the copies of the Pentateuch used in the Jewish synagogue still are, long scrolls of parchment, rolled upon two sticks, with the writing distinguished into columns. Parkhurst.

9. I have preached &c.] I have proclaimed Thy mercy and goodness to me before Thy people, in their full assemblies. Bp. Patrick.

12. — mine iniquities] He means the evils which his iniquities had brought upon him. Bp. Hall. By this expression, as relating to Christ, is meant, the iniquities of mankind which He had taken upon Himself. Bp. Wilson.

The Church, like her Redeemer, is often poor and afflicted in this world, but Jehovah thinketh upon her, and is solicitous for her support; she is weak and defenceless, but Jehovah is her help and her deliverer. With such a Father, and such a Friend, poverty becometh rich, and weakness itself strong. In the mean time, let us remember, that He who once came in great humility, shall come again in glorious majesty. "Make no long tarrying, O our God." Bp. Horne.

14 [b] Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil.

15 Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha.

16 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy salvation say continually, The LORD be magnified.

17 But I am poor and needy; yet the LORD thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

We learn from the third verse of this Psalm, that though an exemption from sorrow and sickness is not promised to the children of God, yet strength and comfort are given unto them from above, to support and carry them through their trials; and they who, in the days of their health, have by their alms given rest to the bodies, or by their counsels restored peace to the consciences, of others, shall have the bed of pain made easy unto them, by the hand of their heavenly Father. Bp. Horne. The end of the first Book of Psalms.

Psalm XLII. This Psalm was most probably composed by David, when he was driven by Absalom from Jerusalem. Dr. Wells. The author of this elegant complaint, exiled from the temple, and from the publick exercise of his religion, to the extreme parts of Judea, persecuted by his numerous enemies, and agitated by their reproaches, pours forth his soul to God in this tender and pathetick composition. The ardent feelings of a devout heart are admirably expressed, while the memory of former felicity seems to aggravate his present anguish. The extreme anxiety of a mind, depressed by the burden of sorrow, and yet at the same time impatient under it; overcome by an accumulation of evils, yet in some degree endeavouring to resist them, and admitting, through the dark cloud of affliction, a glimmering ray of hope and consolation, is finely depicted. Bp. Lowth.

— the sons of Korah.] These were probably an eminent order of singers in the house of God. See 1 Chron. ix. 19, and xxvi. 1. Poole.

5 [a] Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

Ver. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night,] He means that his grief at his forced absence from God's house was so great, that he was obliged to vent it by tears continually. Dr. Wells.

4. When I remember &c.] I pour out my soul within me while I call to mind these things; how I went to the tabernacle, walking in solemn pace to the house of God, amidst the multitude keeping holiday, with the voice of praise and thanksgiving. Green.

5. — for I shall yet praise him &c.] This passage should be read as it is in the last verse of this and of the next Psalm. Bps. Hare and Lowth.

6. — from the hill Mizar.] The word "Mizar" signifies little. It might be the name of some hill beyond Jordan, or possibly some little hill now in view. The general sense of the verse is, "I will remember Thee, whatever dangers surround me, and whithersoever I am driven." Archdeacon Randolph.

7. Deep calleth unto deep] That is, one calamity invites and brings on another. Rosenmüller.

There is no metaphor more frequent in the sacred poems, than that by which sudden and great calamities are expressed under the figure of a deluge of waters. This metaphor seems to have been remarkably familiar to the Hebrews, as if directly taken from the nature and state of their country, which was subject to sudden and heavy floods. Bp. Lowth.

10. As with a sword &c.] The reproaches of my enemies are as cutting as a sword. Bp. Patrick.

11. — the health of my countenance,] The restorer of my drooping spirits. Bp. Wilson.

In the first verse of this Psalm, the thirst, which the "hart" experienceth, when chased in sultry weather over the dusty plains, is set before us as a representation of that ardent desire after the waters of eternal comfort, which the temptations, the cares, and the troubles of the world, produce in the believing soul. Bp. Horne.

By due reverence and affection to God's worship, and to His church, we bring ourselves by degrees to that true and entire love of God Himself, to which so many pretend, and so few attain; to that high value and estimation of Him and of His presence, that we really contemn and despise all the pleasure and profit of this world, and the world itself, for interposing and obstructing our immediate resort to His heavenly mansion. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XLIII. This Psalm, in all probability, was composed by the same author as the former, and upon the same occasion. Bp. Patrick. Nothing can be imagined more natural to a man of David's character, and under the circumstances in which he was placed, than that solemn appeal to the Divine justice, against a vile son, and a wicked people, with which this Psalm begins; or the earnest supplication for relief and restoration which follows it; or that lively expression of hope, and confidence in the Divine protection, which concludes it. Dr. Delaney. More than thirty manuscripts confirm the opinion of Bp. Lowth, that this and the preceding are one Psalm. Street.

Ver. 3. O send out &c.] In other words, O let Thy gracious favour, and the truth of Thy promises, be my sure guide to conduct me to Thy holy mountain, where Thou hast fixed Thy dwellingplace. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

We learn from this Psalm, that if the Prophet begged of God to deliver him from the malice of his enemies, it was chiefly with a view to return to the tabernacle, that he might praise God, and express his joy, love, and gratitude. And the complaints and sighs which he uttered, because he could not come into the house of God, should engage those who have the liberty to serve God in religious assemblies, gladly to improve so inestimable a blessing. Ostervald.

Psalm XLIV. This Psalm appears to have been composed at a time when the Jewish state suffered grievously from their enemies, and many were carried into captivity; though the state itself still subsisted, and the publick worship of God was maintained. It is not unlikely that Hezekiah was the author of it; and that perhaps, soon after the blasphemous message of Rabshakeh, 2 Kings xviii. 13, &c. Mudge.

11. Thou hast given us &c.] Like sheep for the slaughter. Green.

12. Thou sellest thy people &c.] That is, Thou permittest them to be held cheap and vile, and to be sold into slavery by their enemies, for little or nothing; a situation far more to be dreaded than the sword of the executioner. Bp. Horne.

14. Thou makest us a byword &c.] A proverb of wretchedness among the heathen, who shook their heads at them in mere contempt and derision. Bp. Patrick.

15, 16. My confusion is &c.] I am confounded with the continual marks of our disgrace, and am so ashamed, that I am unwilling to shew my face: nor do I hear any thing but reproachful words against us, and blasphemy against Thee, O God; such is the insolence of the enemy, and so insatiable is his revenge. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

19. — in the place of dragons,] That is, in the wilderness; in a wild desolate place, where were serpents and other noxious animals. The inspired author seems here to refer to some former distress of the Jewish nation. Edwards.

22. Yea, for thy sake &c.] But our sufferings for the truth testify our fidelity to Thee; for it is our perseverance in religion which daily exposes us to the horrours of death. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

25. — our soul is bowed down &c.] The weight of our misery is so great, that it hath sunk us into this dejected condition, so that we have no strength left to help ourselves. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

Like the Israelites of old, we should in our afflictions comfort ourselves with the consideration of the goodness of the Lord, and the evident proofs He has in all ages given of His power and mercy. As they acknowledged that their fathers had become masters of the land of Canaan, not by their own strength, but by the power of God; we should likewise give God the glory of all the blessings we enjoy. Ostervald.

Psalm XLV. This is a very remarkable Psalm, supposed to have been originally written on occasion of Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh king of Egypt. But indeed many of the expressions in it are of so exalted a nature, that they cannot with any propriety be applied to any one but our Saviour; so that it may well be said, as our Lord doth in another case, "Behold, a greater than Solomon is here!" Accordingly it has been generally understood to be a prophetical song, foretelling the marriage of Christ with His spouse the Church. St. Paul (Heb. i.) expressly applies the sixth and seventh verses of this Psalm to our Saviour. It is very properly appointed to be used on Christmas-day, when we commemorate His actual coming into the world. Travell.

— Shoshannim,] By this term we may understand all those instruments which had six strings. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. My heart is inditing &c.] My heart is full and ready to overflow with an important and glorious subject, which I have meditated, and am ready to utter in honour of king Solomon; who is but a shadow of that great King whom we expect. Travell.

—— a ready writer.] That is, a well-instructed writer; a writer prepared and ready, by a perfect knowledge of the subject he undertakes to treat. Bp. Horsley.

2. Thou art fairer &c.] Thou, O king, art lovely above all other persons, thy speech is most acceptable and persuasive, because the Lord loves thee, and has poured His choicest blessings upon thee: yet do these but faintly represent the eternal blessings, which He will bestow on that great King, who shall be "in favour with God and man," and who shall make all men "wonder at the gracious words which proceed out of His mouth." Bp. Patrick.

3. Gird thy sword &c.] Put on thy royal ornaments, and the ensigns of thy power, that thou mayest appear with such splendour and majesty, as may serve for an emblem of that sovereign authority, in which the Lord of all the world shall hereafter appear among men. Bp. Patrick.

4. And in thy majesty &c.] May thy kingdom be every way so prosperous, by promoting all manner of virtue among thy subjects, and by terrifying thy enemies, that it may prove a lively emblem of the happy government of the Lord Christ: whose kingdom shall prevail over all, when He goes forth, like a great conqueror in His triumphal chariot, not to enslave men's persons, but to settle the true faith among them; to make them humble and meek, just and charitable: and for the accomplishing of this glorious work, Thy mighty power, O Lord, shall instruct Thee to perform miraculous and amazing things. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

5. Thine arrows are sharp &c.] Thy power shall be sufficient to subdue thy greatest enemies; so shall the grace of Christ be mightily successful in bringing the Gentile world into subjection to His kingdom. Dr. Hammond.

6. Thy throne, O God, &c.] The kingdom of the Messiah is never to have an end. And herein is Solomon a type of Him: the kingdom of Judah, now settled on him, shall endure till the time of the Messiah's coming, and entering on His immutable kingdom. Dr. Hammond.

7. Thou lovest righteousness, &c.] Thou, O Christ, lovest righteousness and hatest iniquity; therefore God the Father hath advanced Thee above all angels and men, and exalted Thee to reign for ever at His own right hand. And herein also was Solomon a type of the Messiah, whose preference of wisdom to wealth was highly rewarded by God, beyond all other men. Dr. Hammond.

8. All thy garments &c.] Thy wedding garments, worn by thee on this joyful occasion, scatter through the royal apartments, richly inlaid with ivory, a fragrance of the sweetest perfumes: in like manner shall the heavenly graces of Christ be diffused, as a sweet odour over His faithful servants. Travell.

—— myrrh, and aloes, and cassia,] Perhaps these were the drugs, with which the oil for the anointing the kings of Israel and Judah was prepared. Two of them, the myrrh and cassia, are the same with those from which the oil for the consecration of Aaron and his sons was commanded to be made. See Exod. xxx. 23, 24. Street.

9. Kings' daughters &c.] Thy court was attended by kings' daughters; and next to thyself was placed the royal bride, clad in garments embroidered with gold: an image of Christ's spouse, the Church, which shall hereafter "sit" with Him "in heavenly places," (Ephes. ii. 6,) arrayed in the garments of righteousness and salvation. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

10. Hearken, O daughter, &c.] Understand, and consider seriously, O royal bride, the happiness of being married to such a prince; and let not the thoughts of thy own country and family dwell too much upon thy mind: in like manner must the true Christian, when brought to Christ, renounce the world, and even his dearest connexions, for His sake. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

12. And the daughter of Tyre &c.] The people of the rich and there with a gift; even the rich among the people shall intreat † thy favour.

† Heb. thy face.

13 The king's daughter is all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold.

14 She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework: the virgins her companions that follow her shall be brought unto thee.

15 With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought: they shall enter into the king's palace.

16 Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth.

17 I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore shall the people praise thee for ever and ever.

PSALM XLVI.

¶ To the chief Musician ‖ for the sons of Korah, A Song upon Alamoth.

GOD is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.

2 Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into † the midst of the sea;

† Heb. the heart of the seas.

3 Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.

4 There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most high.

5 God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, † and that right early.

† Heb. when the morning appeareth.

6 The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, the earth melted.

7 The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is † our refuge. Selah.

† Heb. an high place for us.

8 Come, behold the works of the LORD, what desolations he hath made in the earth.

neighbouring city of Tyre shall come and bring presents; the most powerful among them shall solicit thy favour; as the kings of the earth shall hereafter bring their glory and honour into the church, Rev. xxi. 24. Bp. Patrick.

13. The king's daughter &c.] The bride of our prince is no less adorned with all excellent qualities of mind, than her body is with rich and splendid attire: so the ornaments of those that are born of God in the Christian church shall not be so much "that outward adorning of wearing of gold, as the hidden man of the heart, which is in the sight of God of great price," 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Bp. Patrick.

14. She shall be brought &c.] She shall be brought home unto the king with magnificent pomp, in embroidered raiment; and the virgins, that attend upon her, shall accompany her: in like manner shall Christ receive His spouse the Church, adorned with a robe of righteousness; and all they, who in afterages shall be acknowledged by Christ as His disciples, shall altogether form one glorious train of attendants. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

16. Instead of thy fathers &c.] And may this be the happy fruit of thy marriage, that, instead of thy royal ancestors in Egypt, thou mayest be the mother of children, who shall be rulers in all countries subject to king Solomon: so shall the Church continually bring forth children unto Christ, "whom He shall make kings and priests unto God; and they shall reign on the earth," Rev. v. 10. Travell.

17. I will make thy name &c.] By this song I will make thy name to be mentioned with honour throughout all ages, which shall celebrate thy praise, as long as the world shall last: and much more shall the name of Christ, and His blessed union with His Church, be celebrated with perpetual praises. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

As we are not apt to consider Christ Himself aright, and thereby may probably fail in prescribing good rules to ourselves for the performance of our duty to Him, so we have as little regard what service we are to do, and what reverence we are to pay to that dear spouse of His, the Church: many too superstitiously contracting all their devotion to her ivory palaces, and to her raiment of needlework, to outward forms and ceremonies, and to the pomp of Divine worship, without much considering the inward operation and effect of religion; and others as licentiously and profanely, under pretence of being "all glorious within," contemn all outward preparation for, and ornament of, God's service; and because Christ's Church consists of the multitude of believers, and that He looks principally upon the heart as the seat of religion, they will allow Him no other temple to be served in, and believe both churches and priests of no use to the exercise of their devotion. Whereas, though the "king's daughter be all glorious within, her clothing is" likewise to be "of wrought gold;" inward sanctity appears the more beautiful, for the outward decency and lustre that attends it. And Christ Himself, though He expects and requires the duty of the heart, and to be served by all persons, and in all places, yet He reserves some offices in His service for a peculiar people, more particularly dedicated to it, and vouchsafes more especially to reside in those places which are more solemnly dedicated to, and consecrated for, His worship. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XLVI. This appears to be a thanksgiving Psalm for some victory or deliverance. Street. Probably it may have been composed in the reign of Jehoshaphat. See 2 Chron. xx. Rosenmüller.

—for the sons of Korah, A Song upon Alamoth.] The word Alamoth has by some been understood to specify the musical instrument, which was used to accompany the singing of the Psalm. But it also signifies virgins or maidens. The meaning of the title therefore may be, "An ode by the sons of Korah together with virgins." Street.

Ver. 3, 4. Though the waters &c.] The sense is, Though the numerous forces which are come up against Jerusalem should, like a tempestuous sea, roar and rage, and threaten her with utter destruction; yet the small forces that guard her, which for their stillness may be compared to the soft flowing stream of Siloah, shall by the help of her God protect her. Green.

6. The heathen raged, &c.] How concise and energetick are these expressions of the Divine power! Bp. Horne.

—— he uttered his voice,] Alluding to the demonstration of God's power visibly exerted in the cause of Israel—and the inhabitants of the earth melted, as it were, with fear. Rosenmüller.

9. — he burneth the chariot &c.] Alluding to the heathen custom of burning the arms of those they had conquered, in honour of their gods, and as a sign of peace. Bp. Lowth.

10 Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

11 The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah.

3 He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.

4 He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.

5 God is gone up with a shout, the LORD with the sound of a trumpet.

8 God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

GREAT is the LORD, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness.

2 Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the LORD of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it for ever. Selah.

---

10. Be still, and know &c.] In this verse there is a change of person; and Jehovah Himself is introduced, as commanding the world to cease its opposition, to own His power, and to acknowledge His sovereignty over all the kingdoms of the nations. Bp. Horne.

As we are continually beset by troubles, either bodily or spiritual, so we continually stand in need of a city of refuge and strength, into which we may flee and be safe. Religion is that city, whose gates are always open to the afflicted soul. We profess to believe this: do we act agreeably to such profession? Bp. Horne.

Psalm XLVII. This Psalm was probably composed and sung on occasion of bringing the ark, either into the tabernacle on mount Zion by David, or thence into the temple by Solomon. And the ark being a type of Christ, as mount Zion was of heaven, the carrying of the ark up to that mount may be considered as a type of Christ's ascension into heaven: and accordingly this Psalm is appointed by the Church to be used on Ascension-day. Dr. Wells, Travell.

Ver. 4. He shall choose &c.] Or, He hath chosen the good land of Canaan to be our inheritance. Dr. Wells.

—— the excellency of Jacob] Meaning the land of Israel. Mudge.

5. God is gone up &c.] The ark, which is the emblem of the special presence of God, is gone up into the holy place on mount Zion with a shout of joy and praise. Dr. Wells. This carrying up of the ark mystically represents Christ's ascension into heaven, as may be gathered by comparing this with Eph. iv. 8, where the like words, uttered concerning the ark upon the same occasion, Psalm lxviii. 18, are directly applied to Christ's ascension. Poole.

9. The princes of the people &c.] This verse plainly describes the kings of the Gentiles as acceding to the Church, as becoming with their subjects, through faith, "the people of the God of Abraham," and a part of the sacred flock. Bp. Horne.

This Psalm should excite us to praise God, and to celebrate His glory with holy transports, as He is the King of the whole earth, and deserves the adoration of all men; but above all, because He has chosen us to be His people and His inheritance. But we should also apply this Psalm to the times of the Gospel, and especially to our Lord's ascension to the glory of His kingdom, and to the happiness which the several nations of the earth now enjoy in being accounted the people of God. Ostervald.

Psalm XLVIII. This Psalm is appointed by our Church to be used on Whit-Sunday, because, under images taken from the earthly city Jerusalem, are celebrated the glory, the beauty, and the strength of the Christian Church, that city and temple of Messiah. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 1. —the mountain of his holiness.] That is, mount Zion, the holy spot which He has set apart for the place of His worship. Dr. Wells, Travell.

2. —the joy of the whole earth,] The joy of all the land of Judah then, and afterwards of the whole earth: because the law was to come out of Zion. Bp. Nicholson.

—— on the sides of the north,] On the north side. Old Translation.

3. God is known &c.] God has made Himself known in her towers to be our defence. Edwards.

5. They saw it, &c.] The meaning is, that when the kings of neighbouring countries had united together and marched their forces against it, they were astonished at its strength and beauty; and, being seized with sudden amazement, they made haste to escape. Travell.

7. Thou breakest the ships &c.] The meaning evidently is, that as the east wind shatters in pieces the ships of Tarshish, so the Divine power struck the heathen kings with terrour and astonishment. Bp. Horne.

8. As we have heard, &c.] In other words, What we have

9 We have thought of thy lovingkindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: thy right hand is full of righteousness.

11 Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad, because of thy judgments.

12 Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof.

heard from them of old time, we have now seen verified with our own eyes, in the salvation of this holy city, which is the city of the God of the armies of heaven, and which we trust He will protect in future ages. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

10. According to thy name, &c.] Wherever Thy name is known and Thy works are declared, there, O Lord, shall Thy praises be extended over all the world; and the righteousness of Thy judgments shall be everywhere acknowledged. Travell.

11. — the daughters of Judah] All the lesser cities of Judea. Bp. Wilson.

13. Mark ye well her bulwarks, &c.] Observe the outworks, and consider all the stately buildings, and mark how entire they are, and unhurt by the enemies' attacks; that the memory of so great a blessing may be recorded to future generations. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

The reflection we are to make upon this Psalm is, that the Church has often been attacked by the kings and nations of the world, who had conspired together to destroy it; but that God has always watched over it, and rendered the conspiracies of its enemies vain, and turned them to their own confusion. This Psalm assures us, that the Church is the dearest thing to God upon earth; that He dwells in the midst of it; that He encompasses it with His protection; and that He will always support it. These promises are still better suited to the Christian than to the Jewish Church, and ought to convince us of our happiness, in being members of Christ's Church, and to fill all sincere Christians with steadfast hope and confidence in God. Ostervald.

Psalm XLIX. The object of this very difficult Psalm seems to be, to expose the folly of those who place a confidence in their power and wealth, when, after all, neither of these can ransom their souls from death and their bodies from the tomb; while the author professes himself to believe, that God will redeem his soul from the power of the grave. Street.

Ver. 3. My mouth shall speak &c.] I am going to utter things of most important concern, even weighty matters, which my heart has deeply pondered. Travell.

I will speak such things as shall teach men to be truly wise, and to judge and determine prudently in all things. Rosenmüller.

4. I will incline mine ear &c.] I myself will diligently attend to the lesson I am going to unfold, and the important instruction shall be accompanied with the melody of musick. Travell.

5. Wherefore should I fear &c.] Why should I give way to fear and despondency in the time of calamity, when the wickedness of my wealthy and powerful adversaries compasses me about, to supplant and overthrow me? Bps. Horne and Lowth.

—— of my heels] Rather, "of my supplanters;" "of those who endeavour to supplant me." Parkhurst.

7. None of them &c.] None of them, with all his wealth and power, can save his dearest friend from the grave, or preserve him alive when God calls him. Bp. Patrick.

8. (For the redemption &c.] The redemption of a man's life is too difficult and precious a thing for a man to undertake; so that it must ever be a vain attempt. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

11. Their inward thought is, &c.] Nevertheless, worldlyminded men secretly please themselves with the hopes, that their habitations and estates shall continue in their family from age to age; they indulge themselves in the idea of an imaginary immortality, by giving their own names to their lands. Travell.

13. This their way is their folly:] The practice of labouring to acquire wealth and greatness, which be of no service after death, is doubtless a folly; but it is a folly, which, like many others, is at once blamed and imitated. Bp. Horne.

14. Like sheep &c.] They must, like sheep driven to the slaughter, become the prey of death, and go in crowds to the grave: and then the just, whom they insulted, shall triumph over them in that glorious dawn of the resurrection; their faded beauty shall moulder away in the silent habitation of the grave. Travell.

18. Though while he lived &c.] While men enjoy all the pleasures which their riches afford them, they call themselves the only happy people: and whoever follows their steps will be sure to have the praise of wicked and foolish people. Bp. Wilson.

20. Man that is in honour, &c.] That man who lives in outward honour, and yet wants true wisdom and understanding to know God and himself, lives and dies like a beast. Bp. Hall.

Let us seriously lay to heart, that our time in this world is but a short eve to an everlasting holyday; and that the world itself is but a barren, steep, and stormy passage, to the most fertile and pleasant land that ever was inhabited; where, if we have behaved ourselves well in the way, more glorious mansions are prepared for us, than the greatest monarch of the earth was ever in possession of: let us in our daily morning prayers humbly and earnestly beseech God to root out of our hearts all those immoderate desires and inclinations towards the pomp and pleasures of this life, which intoxicate us, and we shall be ashamed all the day after to entertain any of those proud, and covetous, and ambitious thoughts, that are so contrary to our prayers; and so, by devoutly wishing to be what we ought to be, we shall grow fixed and steady, and superiour to those vain temptations. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm L. This Psalm sets forth, that the Divine favour is not to be conciliated by sacrifices, or by any of the external rites and services of religion, but rather by sincere piety, and by the devout effusions of a grateful heart: and yet, that even these will not be accepted without the strictest attention to justice, and every practical virtue. It consists therefore of two parts: in the first, the devout but ignorant and superstitious worshipper is reproved; and in the second, the hypocritical pretender to virtue and religion. Each part of the subject, if we regard the imagery and diction only, is treated rather with variety and elegance, than with sublimity; but if the general effect, if the plot and machinery of the whole be considered, scarcely any thing can appear more truly magnificent.

God is here introduced as entering upon a solemn and publick action or pleading before the whole world, against His disobedient people. He summons all mankind, from east to west, to be present to hear His appeal; and the solemnity is held on Zion, where He is attended by the same terrible pomp that accompanied Him on mount Sinai. Bp. Lowth.

— Asaph.] Whether this Asaph was the Levite who lived in the same age with David, or some other Prophet in aftertimes, cannot be certainly determined. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. The mighty God, &c.] That is, The decree is gone out from God the Father, touching the calling of all nations by God the Son.

2. Out of Zion,] As God in a special manner was present here in His tabernacle, so shall the Son of God, in fulness of time, be visibly present in that place, and thence give His commission to reveal the Gospel to all nations. Fenton.

4. He shall call to the heavens &c.] The heavens and the earth are invoked as witnesses, which is a pompous form of expression common with the Hebrew writers: "He shall call the heavens from on high; and the earth to the judgment of His people." Bp. Lowth.

5. Gather my saints &c.] He shall say, Bring those men before Me, whom I have separated to Myself to be a holy nation, and who have made a solemn agreement with Me, confirmed by the blood of sacrifices. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

8. I will not reprove thee &c.] It is not for any defect in thy external and ceremonial service of sacrifices and other appointed offerings that I complain of thee: these have been performed with scrupulous exactness. Travell.

9—12. I will take no bullock] The Jewish folly of doating on the legal offerings, as things in themselves acceptable to God, and conferring justification on man, is reproved in these verses, from the consideration, that the various animals slain in sacrifice were long before, even from the creation of the world, the sole right and property of Jehovah; which, therefore, He needed not to have required at the hands of His people; nor would He have done so, but for some further end and intent signified and represented by such oblations. ¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, [a] when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bathsheba.

[a] 2 Sam. 12. 1. & 11. 2.

HAVE mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.

2 Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: [b] that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

[b] Rom. 3. 4.

5 Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother † conceive me.

6 Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts: and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

intent was, Christians know; and Jews formerly did know. Learn we hence, not to dream of any merit in our works and services; since God has a double claim, founded on creation and redemption, to all we have, and all we are. Bp. Horne.

14. Offer unto God thanksgiving; &c.] God here declares, that the sacrifice which is truly acceptable to Him is a heart thankful for all the blessings He has bestowed; and the faithful performance of all the vows and promises which have been made to Him. Bp. Patrick.

21. These things hast thou done, &c.] All this wickedness hast thou committed, and I have forborne to punish thee; but My forbearance, instead of leading thee to amendment, has made thee consider Me, either as ignorant of thy wickedness, or inclined to evil like thyself: but I will now rebuke thee sharply for it, and set all thy evil deeds in order before thine eyes. Bp. Patrick.

23. Whoso offereth praise] This verse sums up the two principal points of charge. "I look upon him only as the man who truly honours Me, that offers before Me a grateful heart; and none but the man that sets himself to order his life aright shall ever find protection and blessing from God." Mudge.

The duty of praise is the end of our being, and the very rule and law of our nature. It is the most excellent part of our religious worship, enduring to eternity after the rest shall be done away. It recommends itself to us by several peculiar properties and advantages; as it carries more pleasure in it than all other kinds of devotion; as it enlarges and exalts the several powers of the mind; as it breeds in us an exquisite sense of God's honour, and a willingness to promote it in the world; as it teaches us to be humble and lowly ourselves, and yet preserves us from base and sordid flattery, from bestowing mean and undue praises upon others. Bp. Atterbury.

Psalm LI. No one can read this Psalm of David, but must see all the characters of true repentance in the person who wrote it, and the marks of the deepest sorrow and humiliation for the sins of which he had been guilty. How earnestly does he plead for mercy, and acknowledge his unworthiness! How ingenuous the confessions he makes of his offences! How heavy the load of guilt which oppressed him! The smart of it pierced through his very bones, and the torture he felt was as if they had been broken and crushed to pieces. Dr. Chandler. This Psalm is inserted in the Commination service, and so is used with the other penitential Psalms in the service on Ash-Wednesday.

Ver. 2. Wash me throughly &c.] The soul, that is sensible of her pollution, fears she can never be sufficiently purified from it; and therefore prays yet again and again, continually, for more abundant grace, to make and to keep her holy. Bp. Horne.

4. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned,] For none else knew it, till Thou madest it known, 2 Sam. xii. 12. Bp. Wilson.

—— that thou mightest be justified &c.] Rather, So that Thou art righteous in Thy sentence, and just in Thy judgment. Edwards.

5.— I was shapen in iniquity; &c.] I derive from my parents an original corruption, and a natural proneness to evil. Travell. This corruption is here only alleged as the cause of transgressions, not as their excuse; seeing that, the greater our danger of falling, the greater should be our care to stand. Bp. Horne.

6. Behold, thou desirest truth &c.] The force of "behold" is, "It is too plain; I feel it but too sensibly; the punishment I suffer is evidence sufficient, that Thou art not contented with a superficial appearance of goodness: Thou lovest truth and sincerity in the bottom of the heart." God was now teaching him this, by the correction He made him suffer. The punishment

PSALM LII.

1 David, condemning the spitefulness of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, upon his confidence in God's mercy, giveth thanks.

¶ To the chief Musician, Maschil, A Psalm of David, [a] when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

[a] 1 Sam. 22. 9.

WHY boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.

7. Purge me with hyssop, &c.] As the priest is wont to denote unclean persons to be cleansed, by sprinkling them with water mixed with the ashes of an heifer, which sprinkling was performed with a bunch of hyssop; so be Thou pleased to absolve me from the guilt of the great sins I have been guilty of, and restore me to Thy former favour. Dr. Wells.

8. Make me to hear &c.] Renew the joy of my heart, in the comfortable assurance of Thy forgiveness; that so my soul, which is now dejected and justly grieved for my sin, may find cause of rejoicing in Thee. Bp. Hall.

11. Cast me not away &c.] The soul that is truly penitent dreads nothing but the thought of being rejected from the "presence," and deserted by the "Spirit" of God. This is the most deplorable effect of sin; but it is one that in general, perhaps, is the least considered and regarded of all others. Bp. Horne.

12. — and uphold me with thy free spirit.] He prays to be preserved and continued in a state of salvation by the Spirit of God, which might enable him to act as became a Prophet and a king, free from base desires and enslaving lusts. Bp. Horne.

14. Deliver me from bloodguiltiness,] Deliver me from the punishment due to this crying sin, the murder of a trusty servant, and of several of my servants, 2 Sam. xi. 17. Bp. Patrick.

16. — thou desirest not sacrifice;] This is not to be understood absolutely and universally, as appears from ver. 19, but comparatively. See the note on Psalm xl. 6. Poole.

18. — build thou the walls of Jerusalem.] Be favourable to Jerusalem, and let its walls, which I have begun to build, 2 Sam. v. 9, be perfectly finished, 1 Kings iii. 1. Bp. Patrick.

19. — sacrifices of righteousness,] That is, such sacrifices as are offered with true piety of heart. Rosenmüller.

From the third verse of this Psalm, we should learn to correct a propensity in the human mind, which is very general and very natural, yet, at the same time, unfavourable in a high degree to the Christian character; namely, that when we look back upon our lives, our recollection dwells too much upon our virtues; our sins are not, as they ought to be, before us; we think too much of our good qualities, or good actions, too little of our crimes, our corruptions, our fallings off and declensions from God's laws, our defects and weaknesses. But this is not the true Christian disposition, and it is dangerous to our salvation. We ought rather to let our "sins be ever before us," our omissions, deficiencies, failures, our irregularities of heart and affection, our vices of temper and disposition. These are the things which should occupy our attention, this should be the bent and direction of our thoughts, for they are the thoughts which will bring us to God evangelically. Archdeacon Paley.

Psalm LII. The occasion of this Psalm is to be found in 1 Sam. xxii. where we read, that Doeg, in order to ingratiate himself with Saul, discovered to him those who were confederate with David, particularly Ahimelech: and afterwards, at the desire of Saul, murdered the priests of the Lord. Travell.

Ver. 1. Why boastest thou &c.] The Psalmist thought it strange that any man should value himself for being able to do mischief, when God esteemed it His glory to do good. In vain did Doeg the Edomite boast himself in the mischief he had done, by massacring the innocent priests and their families; since "the goodness of God," which is unchangeable, had decreed the preservation of David. Bp. Horne.

4. — devouring words,] That is, such as are mischievous, and by which the innocent may be destroyed. Rosenmüller.

6. The righteous also shall see, &c.] All good men shall

PSALM LIII.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Mahalath, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

PSALM LIV.

1 David, complaining of the Ziphims, prayeth for salvation. 4 Upon his confidence in God's help he promiseth sacrifice.

¶ To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David, [a] when the Ziphims came and said to Saul, Doth not David hide himself with us?

remark the righteous judgment of God, and shall be confirmed in their fear of offending Him; they shall deride thy folly and disappointed ambition, and shall say; &c. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

8. But I am like &c.] As for me, notwithstanding his crafty designs against me, I am, in comparison of him, in a flourishing condition; my unchangeable trust in the goodness of God shall make me grow and increase, like a fruitful olive tree in the courts of God's house. Travell.

9. —for it is good before thy saints.] That is, it is a goodly thing, it carries a good appearance, it looks well before the friends of God, to see me praising Him, and putting my trust in Him. Mudge.

It very much concerns us to follow the wise man's counsel, and "to weigh our words in a balance, and make a door and bar for our mouth," Ecclus. xxviii. 25. If licentious and unbridled thoughts will, in spite of all our watches and guard, steal into our hearts, let us be sure that no unruly words break out of our mouth; and if, in the variety of our language and expressions, some inconsiderate, rash, and imprudent words escape from us, at least let them not be malicious and detracting words, to wound the credit and good name of our neighbours: let us inform and instruct the weak without insolence, and reprove and advise the wilful without bitterness; let us do all good offices towards advancing the reputation of those who desire to advance God's glory and the public peace, and all charitable offices towards those who are in misery and distress, by what means soever they fell into it; let us endeavour to strengthen all men with our mouth, and that our speech may drop upon them: and then God will bless and protect, and prosper us, against all the violence and all the calumnies which aim at our destruction. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LIII. This Psalm of David was composed by him at first, as it stands Psalm XIV. and on the rebellion of Absalom. But probably upon the new revolt made presently after the death of Absalom, by the Israelites that followed Sheba, David made two or three variations in Psalm XIV. and so used it upon this new occasion. Dr. Wells.

— Mahalath,] This word probably denotes some kind of musical instrument, but of what kind it is difficult now to determine. Rosenmüller, Edwards.

5. —for God hath scattered the bones] God hath destroyed him who thought to oppress thee, O my soul, and his bones lie scattered on the ground. See 2 Sam. xx. 6—22. Bp. Patrick.

Psalm LIV. This Psalm was composed by David at a time of his great distress, and seasonable deliverance afforded him by God, when, hiding himself in the wilderness of Ziph, the Ziphites made discovery to Saul, and he went with forces to seek him, but gave over the pursuit, by reason of the Philistines invading his land. See 1 Sam. xxiii. 14, to the end. Dr. Hammond. The application to Christ and to Christians is plain and easy; for which reason our Church hath appointed this Psalm to be read on Good Friday. Bp. Horne.

— Neginoth,] See the note upon the title to the fourth Psalm.

Ver. 1. —judge me] Do me justice. Green.

3. For strangers are risen up against me,] The Ziphites, though David's countrymen, acted the part of "strangers," or "aliens," in seeking to deliver him up to his unjust and cruel enemy. Bp. Horne.

—— they have not set God before them.] They have cast off all regard to His presence and authority, and all fear of His judgments. Poole.

6. I will freely sacrifice unto thee:] I will sacrifice to Thee a voluntary oblation. Dr. Hammond.

GIVE ear to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

2 Attend unto me, and hear me: I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise;

3 Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked: for they cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof: deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

17 Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.

18 He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: for there were many with me.

after great deliverances, have always been matter of uncommon delight to curiosity, and men of serious and religious spirits. Nor does the glory of any great man ever shine out to their eyes in half the lustre, as when they behold him upon his knees, lifting up his eyes, or stretching out his hands to heaven, or, what is yet greater, prostrating himself before it, in humiliation and acknowledgment. Then is the hero seen in all his dignity! Dr. Delaney. The royal Prophet here teaches us by his example that prayer should always be our refuge in time of danger; that, even when men have conspired our ruin, if we call upon God with a pure heart, He will protect us; and that, when He has granted our prayers, we ought to bless Him with all our soul. Ostervald.

Psalm LV. It is generally imagined that David composed this Psalm, when he was forced to flee suddenly from Jerusalem, on the breaking out of Absalom's rebellion, and the treachery of his principal counsellor Ahithophel, of whom he complains bitterly in the fourteenth verse. Travell.

Ver. 2, 3. Attend unto me, &c.] Attend unto me, and answer me, while in my complaint I weep and cry aloud, because of the insults of the enemy, and the oppression of the wicked: for they lay iniquity to my charge, and bear me a violent hatred. Green.

4. — the terrors of death are fallen upon me.] That is, I am brought to the very brink of destruction. Bp. Wilson.

8. I would hasten my escape &c.] I would hasten away to shelter myself from this fierce persecution, which like a sudden storm threatens utterly to destroy me. Bp. Patrick.

9. Destroy, O Lord, &c.] In these words, David beseeches God to divide, confound, and bring to nought, the counsels of an iniquitous faction; for so in the history we find him saying, "O Lord, I pray Thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness," 2 Sam. xv. 31. Bp. Horne.

10. Day and night they go &c.] The "violence and strife," mentioned at the conclusion of the preceding verse, are here described as going their rounds, like an armed watch upon the walls, to guard rebellion, which had taken up its residence in the heart of the city, from the attacks of loyalty, right, and justice, driven with the king beyond Jordan. Bp. Horne.

12—14. For it was not &c.] The many aggravating circumstances of Ahithophel's treason against David, and that of Judas against Christ, are here strongly marked. The treachery of pretended friends is generally to the Church, as it was to her Lord, the beginning of sorrows. Ingratitude, malice, and falsehood, are ingredients that must always meet in the composition of a traitor. Bp. Horne.

15. Let death seize &c.] Let a sudden and unexpected death overwhelm them. Rosenmüller. Or, this passage may be considered as a prediction (see the note on Psalm v. 10.) of the tragical fate of Ahithophel, and of those who followed Absalom. The sudden destruction of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, who, for stirring up a rebellion against Moses and Aaron, "went down alive into the pit," seems here alluded to. Bp. Horne.

18. — many with me.] Namely, God and His holy angels. Dr. Wells.

19. — Because they have no changes, &c.] They experience no change of fortune, and therefore will not fear God. Green. Or,

20 He hath put forth his hands against such as be at peace with him: † he hath broken his covenant.

† Heb. he hath profaned.

21 The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

PSALM LVI.

† Heb. Mine observers.

4 In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they wrest my words: all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6 They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7 Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.

8 Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

9 When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for God is for me.

10 In God will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

11 In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

PSALM LVII.

1 David in prayer fleeing unto God complaineth of his dangerous case. 7 He encourageth himself to praise God.

Because there is no reformation in them, neither do they fear God. Street; Archdeacon Randolph.

20. He hath put forth &c.] This perfidious traitor hath basely lifted up his hands to injure those who were at peace and friendship with him: he hath broken his promise and oath of fidelity. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

21. — drawn swords.] That is, pernicious in their design and consequences. Poole.

22. Cast thy burden &c.] The conclusion of the whole matter is, that amidst all dangers and adversities, whensoever they oppress us, we are to put our full trust and confidence only in His mercy, who delivered David, and the Son of David, out of all their troubles. Bp. Horne.

The distresses and dangers to which we are subject are hardly remediable, when they who by intimate conversation know our nature, and to whom we have communicated our purposes, counsels, and designs, prove treacherous and false to us, and concur with the envy and malice of our enemies; and as the danger is then almost inevitable, so the grief and agony that attends it is sharper and more troublesome than the danger; it bereaves us of that composure, and temper, and serenity of mind, which usually relieves us in all other accidents. But our comfort is, though we are least able to help ourselves in such exigencies, and against such distresses, we have an Helper, if we call faithfully upon Him, who sees the pangs we suffer, the agony and fear we endure, and hears the just voice of our lamentations. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LVI. — Jonath-elem-rechokim,] That is, the silent dove afar off. David thus styles himself on account of his being at that time in a far country. Dr. Wells. Or, these words may be the name of some well known song, to the musick of which this is directed to be sung. Mudge.

Ver. 1. — he fighting &c.] He is daily fighting against me, that he may crush me. Green.

4. In God I will praise his word,] By the assistance of God I shall be enabled to praise Him for the performance of His promises. Bp. Patrick.

8. Thou tellest my wanderings:] David's whole life, from his victory over Goliath till the death of Saul, was continually spent in wandering from place to place. Dr. Chandler.

—— put thou my tears into thy bottle:] This expression seems to intimate, that the custom of putting tears into the lacrymal urns, so well known among the Romans, was more anciently in use among the Hebrews. These urns were of different materials; some of glass, some of earth; they were also of various forms or shapes. They were placed on the sepulchres of the deceased, as a memorial of the distress and affection of their surviving relations and friends. The meaning therefore of the expression, "put Thou my tears into Thy bottle," will be, "let my distress, and the tears I have shed in consequence of it, be ever before Thee; excite Thy kind remembrance of me, and plead with Thee to grant me the relief I stand in need of." Dr. Chandler, Calmet.

12. Thy vows are upon me, O God:] That is, I am bound by vows to Thee.

13. — wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling,] This should be rendered as it is in the Liturgy, "and my feet from falling."

By the example of David we are here taught, that, to whatever extremity the children of God are brought, and when even force and artifice are employed against them, they are not moved; that, so firm is their trust in God, they do not fear what man can do unto them; and that even before their deliverance they rejoice in the Lord, and pay to Him their vows and thanksgivings. Ostervald.

3 He shall send from heaven, and save me ‖ from the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and his truth.

‖ Or, he reproacheth him that would swallow me up.

4 My soul is among lions: and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.

5 Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

[b] Ps. 7. 16. & 9. 15.

6 [b] They have prepared a net for my steps; my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they are fallen themselves. Selah.

[c] Ps. 108. 1, &c.
‖ Or, prepared.

7 [c] My heart is ‖ fixed, O God, my heart is fixed: I will sing and give praise.

8 Awake up, my glory; awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.

9 I will praise thee, O LORD, among the people: I will sing unto thee among the nations.

[d] Ps. 36. 5. & 108. 4.

10 [d] For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds.

11 Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens: let thy glory be above all the earth.

PSALM LVIII.

1 David reproveth wicked judges, 3 describeth the nature of the wicked, 6 devoteth them to God's judgments, 10 whereat the righteous shall rejoice.

¶ To the chief Musician, ‖ Al-taschith, Michtam of David.

‖ Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.

DO ye indeed speak righteousness, O congregation? do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men?

2 Yea, in heart ye work wickedness; ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth.

3 The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray † as soon as they be born, speaking lies.

† Heb. from the belly.

4 Their poison is † like the poison of a serpent: they are like the deaf ‖ adder that stoppeth her ear;

† Heb. according to the likeness.
‖ Or, asp.

5 Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, ‖ charming never so wisely.

‖ Or, be the charmer never so cunning.

6 Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth: break out the great teeth of the young lions, O LORD.

7 Let them melt away as waters which run continually: when he bendeth his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces.

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns,

— Al-taschith,] "Destroy not," seems to be the beginning of a song, to the musick of which this Psalm is directed to be sung. Mudge.

Ver. 3. — God shall send forth &c.] God, by His deliverance of me, shall manifest His lovingkindness, and the truth of His promises. Travell.

4. My soul is among lions: &c.] I am beset by cruel and bloody enemies, whose hearts are inflamed with deadly malice against me; even men given over to wickedness, whose mouths are full of mischievous slanders and reproaches, wherewith they endeavour to wound me to the death. Bp. Hall.

8. Awake up, my glory; &c.] Awake, O my tongue, awake; I will also awake early the psaltery and harp. Green.

10. — thy mercy is great &c.] Thy mercy and truth extend over the whole universe. Travell.

Though we may not be exposed to dangers like those of David formerly, and therefore cannot apply to ourselves all we read in this Psalm, we may nevertheless from hence conclude, in general, that in our necessities we should draw nigh to God, being fully persuaded that He will not fail to send us help from heaven, and deliver us. Ostervald.

Psalm LVIII. A Psalm of David, wherein he reproves the judges, the princes of Saul's court, for passing an unrighteous sentence upon him, probably, as guilty of seeking Saul's life; and begs of God to defeat their unjust attempts to destroy him, and openly to shew Himself the protector of the innocent. Green.

Ver. 1. Do ye indeed speak &c.] O ye assembly of princes and rulers, have you pronounced a righteous sentence against me, and judged me uprightly according to your consciences? Bp. Patrick, Travell.

3. The wicked are estranged &c.] Such is their wickedness, that they were depraved from the very womb; going astray as soon as they could go; and telling lies as soon as they could speak. Travell.

4, 5. — like the deaf adder &c.] Allusion is here made to that sort of serpents, which, according to some naturalists, were able to make themselves deaf, in order to resist the effect of charms employed for the purpose of lulling them asleep and taking them. The meaning is, these incorrigible persons resolve never to hearken to any thing which may induce them to quit their evil ways. Dr Hammond. The notion of charming serpents with certain sounds, or by uttering particular words, was formerly extremely general, and still prevails over many parts of Barbary. Dr. Shaw.

7. Let them melt &c.] Let them fall away one from the other till they come to nothing, as waters, which not being contained within any vessel or bank, run continually, and spread themselves further and further, till they are all lost or sucked up into the earth. Dr. Wells.

8. As a snail which &c.] As a snail, which melts or spends itself the further it goes, so let every one of them that are my enemies pass away, or miscarry in their designs. Dr. Wells.

9. Before your pots &c.] Perhaps these words should rather be translated, "Before your pots can feel the thorns, the tempest he shall take them away as with a whirlwind, † both living, and in his wrath.

† Heb. as living, as wrath.

10 The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

11 So that a man shall say, Verily there is † a reward for the righteous: verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth.

† Heb. fruit of the, &c.

PSALM LIX.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from his enemies. 6 He complaineth of their cruelty. 8 He trusteth in God. 11 He prayeth against them. 16 He praiseth God.

¶ To the chief Musician, ‖ Al-taschith, Michtam of David; [a] when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

‖ Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.

[a] 1 Sam. 19. 11.

DELIVER me from mine enemies, O my God: † defend me from them that rise up against me.

† Heb. set me on high.

2 Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

3 For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul: the mighty are gathered against me; not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

4 They run and prepare themselves without my fault: awake † to help me, and behold.

† Heb. to meet me.

5 Thou therefore, O LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel, awake to visit all the heathen: be not merciful to any wicked transgressors. Selah.

6 They return at evening: they make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

7 Behold, they belch out with their mouth: swords are in their lips: for [b] who, say they, doth hear?

[b] Ps. 10. 11. & 73. 11. & 94. 7.

8 But thou, O LORD, shalt laugh at them; thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.

9 Because of his strength will I wait upon thee: for God is † my defence.

† Heb. my high place.

10 The God of my mercy shall prevent me: God shall let me see my desire upon † mine enemies.

† Heb. mine observers.

11 Slay them not, lest my people forget: scatter them by thy power; and bring them down, O LORD our shield.

12 For the sin of their mouth and the words of their lips let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 Consume them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be: and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

14 And at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down † for meat, ‖ and grudge if they be not satisfied.

† Heb. to eat.
‖ Or, if they be not satisfied, then they will stay all night.

16 But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

---

shall bear them away." Briars and thorns, when set on fire, are frequently applied in Scripture to represent the rage of the wicked; violent, yet impotent, and of no long continuance. They are applied also to the wicked themselves, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burned up or driven away by the wind. Both these ideas seem to be joined in the above verse. Bp. Lowth.

10. — the vengeance:] The just judgment of God upon wicked men. Bp. Wilson.

—— he shall wash &c.] This is an allusion to a great conqueror, who dips his feet in the blood of his enemies as he passes over their carcases. Bp. Patrick.

In general, we see here that all those who harden themselves in their evil ways, without hearkening to the voice of God, are threatened with His vengeance. We learn also from this Psalm, that though the wicked prosper, and good men are afflicted for a while, yet they will always have reason to acknowledge, "that there is a reward for the righteous, and that there is a God who judgeth the earth." Ostervald.

Psalm LIX. ver. 5. — awake to visit &c.] Awake to punish all those wretches, who, though they call themselves Thy people, yet are as wicked as even the heathen: be not merciful in sparing longer any such notoriously wicked transgressors. Dr. Wells.

6. They return at evening: &c.] The messengers of Saul, coming after David in the evening, besetting his house, and blocking up the approaches to it, are here compared to a set of hungry dogs in quest of their prey. Bp. Horne. See note on ver. 14.

7. Behold, they belch out &c.] Behold, their hearts are full of malice, which burst out at their mouths in open threats to kill me; for, Who, say they, shall call us to account for it? Bp. Patrick.

9. Because of his strength &c.] It is probable that the beginning of this verse should be the same with that of verse 17. Bp. Lowth.

10. — shall prevent me:] That is, shall make way for my timely escape. Dr. Wells.

11. Slay them not, &c.] Do not utterly destroy them, lest my countrymen lose the remembrance of it: but let them remain a just monument of Thine anger. Travell.

14. — like a dog, &c.] Dogs are found in great numbers in the cities of the East, and crowd the streets. They do not appear to belong to any particular persons, as our dogs do, nor to be fed distinctly by such as might claim some interest in them, but get their food as they can. Harmer.

15. — and grudge if they be not satisfied.] And murmur because they are not satisfied. Dr. Chandler. See the margin.

Nothing gives us such support, and administers such confidence and courage to expect a deliverance from God Almighty out of any persecution or danger that invades us, as the consciousness of innocence. Not that we may conclude, that guiltless men cannot be oppressed, even to the loss of their lives, as well as their fortunes; or, that evil men cannot prevail against those who are less evil than they: we may not only be very innocent

PSALM LX.

1 David, complaining to God of former judgment, 4 now, upon better hope, prayeth for deliverance. 6 Comforting himself in God's promises, he craveth that help whereon he trusteth.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Shushan-eduth, ‖ Michtam of David, to teach; [a] when he strove with Aram-naharaim and with Aram-zobah, when Joab returned, and smote of Edom in the valley of salt twelve thousand.

‖ Or, A golden Psalm.

[a] 2 Sam. 8. 3, 13. 1 Chron. 18. 3. about 1040.

O GOD, [b] thou hast cast us off, thou hast † scattered us, thou hast been displeased; O turn thyself to us again.

[b] Ps. 44. 9.

† Heb. broken.

2 Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.

3 Thou hast shewed thy people hard things: thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.

4 Thou hast given a banner to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth. Selah.

Ps. 108. 6, &c.

5 [c] That thy beloved may be delivered; save with thy right hand, and hear me.

6 God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.

7 Gilead is mine, and Manasseh is mine; Ephraim also is the strength of mine head; Judah is my lawgiver;

8 Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe: Philistia, ‖ triumph thou because of me.

‖ Or, triumph thou over me. [by an irony.]

9 Who will bring me into the † strong city? who will lead me into Edom?

† Heb. City of strength.

10 Wilt not thou, O God, which [d] hadst cast us off? and thou, O God, which didst not go out with our armies?

[d] Ps. 44. 9. & 108. 11.

11 Give us help from trouble: for vain is the † help of man.

† Heb. salvation.

12 Through God we shall do valiantly: for he it is that shall tread down our enemies.

PSALM LXI.

1 David fleeth to God upon his former experience. 4 He voweth perpetual service unto him, because of his promises.

---

in those particulars of which we are condemned and brought into misery, but therefore condemned, because we are known to be innocent; and yet we may be guilty enough in other particulars, to deserve a greater punishment and misery than we undergo: and since every sin is in opposition to God's will and directions, it is His usual method to punish sinners by others who are most opposite to the sins they practised. Our deliverance therefore may be for a time deferred, till the fire of adversity hath well purged the dross and corruption which our prosperity had contracted, and we shall then find, that our constancy and patience in suffering hath made God propitious to us, and provided a crown of glory for our reward. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LX. — Shushan-eduth,] The meaning of this word is quite uncertain.

— to teach;] Either, that David might teach posterity what things he had done; or, implying that this Psalm was given to the chief musician, that he might teach the inferiour ones. Rosenmüller.

— Aram] The Syrians; so called, because they were the descendants of Aram the son of Shem, Gen. x. 22. Poole.

— naharaim] Those Syrians that lived between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates. Bp. Patrick.

— Aram-zobah,] Those Syrians that lived adjoining to the former, in that part of Syria called Zobah, 2 Sam. viii. 5. Bp. Patrick.

— when Joab returned, &c.] See 1 Kings xi. 15, 16.

Ver. 2. Thou hast made the earth to tremble; &c.] These expressions are figurative, and allude to the convulsions of the state, which had lately happened in the war between the house of Saul and David. Street.

3. Thou hast shewed &c.] Thou hast inflicted grievous punishments upon us. Bp. Patrick.

—— thou hast made us to drink &c.] Thou hast filled us with no less horrour and trembling, than men who are intoxicated with strong and stupifying drink. Poole.

4. Thou hast given a banner &c.] But now, Thou hast granted the desires of Thy faithful servants according to Thy promise; Thou hast united them under me their king, to whom they should all repair as soldiers do to their standard. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

6. — in his holiness;] In His sanctuary. Mudge.

—— I will divide Shechem, &c.] The valley of Succoth lay on the east side of Jordan in the tribe of Gad; and so probably did the Shechem here mentioned. At this time they both seem to have been in the hand of the enemy; and David declares here, that, as soon as he had taken them, he would divide them among his own people. Green.

7. Gilead is mine, &c.] Gilead is on my side, and Manasseh is on my side; Ephraim is the helmet of my head; Judah is my sceptre. In this verse the tribes are mentioned, which would accompany him in this expedition. Gilead, as it is here distinguished from Manasseh, must mean the tribe of Gad, which was a very warlike tribe. Ephraim seems to have been fixed upon for his helmet to protect his head, as being the most numerous and warlike tribe. Green.

—— lawgiver;] Or rather, sceptre; the word in the original signifies a ruler's staff, or some ensign of authority. Judah was another very warlike tribe. The patriarch Jacob conveys his prophecy of him under the image of a lion couching upon a sceptre, whom none dare rouse up, Gen. xlix. 9, 10. Here David speaks of this tribe as his sceptre, as the support of his crown and royal dignity. Green.

8. Moab is my washpot; &c.] Meaning, I will reduce these my enemies to the vilest servitude: I will treat Moab as my washpot; I will use the Edomites as slaves, holding forth my shoes that they may pluck them off. Bp. Patrick, Poole.

—— Philistia, triumph thou because of me.] That is, receive me as thy conqueror with demonstrations of joy.

9. Who will bring me &c.] Bozrah, the capital of Idumea, or Edom, was a fortified town, situated on a rock, deemed impregnable. See Obadiah ver. 3. Considering therefore the strength of the adversary, David, by this question, acknowledgeth his own impotency, and the need he had of superiour aid in order to achieve this important conquest. Bp. Horne.

As David in this Psalm celebrates the power and goodness of God, who had assisted His people, and given them the victory over their enemies; so should we learn, that the strength and assistance of man is under all circumstances but vanity, and that there is none but the Lord who can help and deliver us in our distress, and in whom we may safely and perfectly confide. Ostervald.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Neginah, A Psalm of David.

HEAR my cry, O God; attend unto my prayer.

2 From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

3 For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

4 I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever: I will ‖ trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah.

‖ Or, make my refuge.

5 For thou, O God, hast heard my vows: thou hast given me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

† Heb. Thou shalt add days to the days of the king.

6 †Thou wilt prolong the king's life: and his years † as many generations.

† Heb. as generation and generation.

7 He shall abide before God for ever: O prepare mercy and truth, which may preserve him.

8 So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever, that I may daily perform my vows.

PSALM LXII.

1 David professing his confidence in God discourageth his enemies. 5 In the same confidence he encourageth the godly. 9 No trust is to be put in worldly things. 11 Power and mercy belong to God.

¶ To the chief Musician, to Jeduthun, A Psalm of David.

1048.

‖ TRULY my soul † waiteth upon God: from him cometh my salvation.

‖ Or, Only. † Heb. is silent.

2 He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my † defence; I shall not be greatly moved.

† Heb. high place.

3 How long will ye imagine mischief against a man? ye shall be slain all of you: as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence.

4 They only consult to cast him down from his excellency: they delight in lies: they bless with their mouth, but they curse † inwardly. Selah.

† Heb. in their inward parts.

5 My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.

6 He only is my rock and my salvation: he is my defence; I shall not be moved.

7 In God is my salvation and my glory: the rock of my strength, and my refuge, is in God.

8 Trust in him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.

9 Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are ‖ altogether lighter than vanity.

‖ Or, alike.

10 Trust not in oppression, and become not vain in robbery: if riches increase, set not your heart upon them.

‖ Or, strength.

11 God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that ‖ power belongeth unto God.

[a] Job 34. 11. Prov. 24. 12. Jer. 32. 19. Ezek. 7. 27. Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Eph. 6. 8. Col. 3. 25. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Rev. 22. 12.

12 Also unto thee, O LORD, belongeth mercy: for [a] thou renderest to every man according to his work.

Psalm LXI. ver. 2. From the end of the earth] Meaning, probably, from the remotest part of Judea. Merrick.

—— the rock that is higher than I.] Or, the rock which is too high for me; that is, to a place of safety, which, as without Thee, I am not able to reach, so there my enemies may not be able to approach me. Edwards, Bp. Patrick.

4. —for ever:] As long as I live. Dr. Wells.

5. For thou, O God, &c.] The "vows" of David, made during his banishment, were heard, and he was restored to the possession of his kingdom, in that land which God had given to His people for an heritage. Bp. Horne.

6. —and his years as many generations.] He thus speaks, partly, because his kingdom was not like Saul's, a matter of one age, expiring with his life, but established to him and his descendants: and partly, because Christ, who was to spring from him, should actually in His own person possess the kingdom for ever. Poole.

7. —O prepare &c.] O let Thy goodness and faithfulness ever defend him. Bp. Patrick.

It is a great comfort in all our afflictions and calamities, that He, who is best able to succour and deliver us, is always within the reach of our cry; and though He sits above the cherubim, hears perfectly every groan and prayer we pour out to Him from the lowest dungeon of our prison. Let our enemies cast us as deep as they please into bondage, He will both see and hear us, if we pray to Him with that fervour and devotion with which we ought; and He will interpose some shelter and protection between us and the malice and power of our enemies, till He thinks fit to make our deliverance perfect and complete. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXII. —Jeduthun,] See the note on the title of the thirty-ninth Psalm.

Ver. 3. How long will ye imagine &c.] The Prophet expostulates in this verse with his enemies, for continually plotting against him, and foretells that their destruction will happen suddenly and irremediably, like the downfall of a wall that is in a tottering state, or a stone fence, the parts of which are not cemented together. Bp. Horne.

9. Surely men of low degree &c.] A reason is here assigned why we should at all times "trust in God;" namely, because there is nothing else in which we can trust, which will not in the end deceive us. Weighed in the "balance" of heaven, the power of man to save is less than nothing. Bp. Horne.

10—12. Trust not in oppression, &c.] These three verses are directed to oppressors, not to be too eager after ill-gotten power or riches, nor to place their trust in them, since there are two things confessedly against them, the power and the goodness of God; by which He will be able and willing to do justice to all mankind, to protect His friends, and defeat their enemies. Mudge.

The comforts which David had found, he exhorteth others to seek, in faith and prayer; in such a faith, as fixeth itself on God, when the whole world is against it; and such prayer, as poureth forth all the desires of the soul into the bosom of the Almighty. How often, in repeating the Psalms, do we declare, that "God is our refuge;" yet how very seldom do we recur to Him, as such, in the hour of temptation! Bp. Horne.

PSALM LXIII.

1 David's thirst for God. 4 His manner of blessing God. 9 His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and his own safety.

¶ A Psalm of David, when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

O GOD, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and † thirsty land, † where no water is;

2 To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be satisfied as with † marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

6 When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7 Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

8 My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

10 † They shall fall by the sword: they shall be a portion for foxes.

11 But the king shall rejoice in God; every one that sweareth by him shall glory: but the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

† Heb. weary.
† Heb. fatness.
† Heb. They shall make him run out like water by the hands of the sword.

PSALM LXIV.

1 David prayeth for deliverance, complaining of his enemies. 7 He promiseth himself to see such an evident destruction of his enemies, as the righteous shall rejoice at it.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

HEAR my voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve my life from fear of the enemy.

2 Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:

3 [a] Who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words:

4 That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.

5 They encourage themselves in an evil ‖ matter: they commune † of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them?

6 They search out iniquities; ‖ they accomplish † a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is deep.

7 But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly † shall they be wounded.

8 So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away.

9 And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing.

[a] Ps. 11. 2.

‖ Or, speech.
† Heb. to hide snares.
‖ Or, we are consumed by that which they have thoroughly searched.
† Heb. a search searched.

Psalm LXIII. In this Psalm the royal Prophet, an exile in the wilderness, expresses most elegantly the sentiments of tenderness and love. Bp. Lowth.

— when he was in the wilderness of Judah.] He went through that wilderness when he fled from Absalom. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 1. — in a dry and thirsty land,] Probably this should be rendered, as in the Syriack version, "as a dry and thirsty land." Abp. Secker, Bp. Hare.

2. To see thy power &c.] My chief desire is, that I may be restored again to worship Thee before the ark of Thy presence, where Thy glorious Majesty resides among us. Travell.

4. — I will lift up &c.] That is, in prayer and thanksgiving to Thy Divine Majesty. Dr. Wells.

5. My soul shall be satisfied &c.] The greatest dainties cannot give so much satisfaction to the hungry, as I shall enjoy from the employment of singing Thy praises. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

8. — followeth hard after thee:] Cleaveth unto Thee. Green.

9. — the lower parts of the earth.] That is, the grave. Bp. Hall.

10. — a portion for foxes.] See note at Judg. xv. 4.

11. — every one that sweareth by him] That is, every one who invokes His name, worships Him, and makes Him the object of religious reverence and fear; all which is implied in swearing, as an oath is an immediate appeal and solemn act of worship to God. Rosenmüller, Poole, Merrick.

So soon as religion gains that hold and that possession of the heart, which it must do to become the means of our salvation, it enters our thoughts very frequently. We "remember God upon our bed, and meditate on Him in the night watches." Would we therefore know whether we have made, or are making, any advances in Christianity or not? These are the marks which will tell us. Do we think more frequently about religion than we used to do? Do we cherish and entertain these thoughts for a longer continuance than we did? Do they interest us more than formerly? Do they sink deeper? If we perceive this, then, we perceive a change, upon which we may ground our hopes and expectations; if we perceive it not, we have cause for very afflicting apprehensions, that the power of religion hath not yet visited us; cause for deep and fervent intercession with God for the much wanted succour of His Holy Spirit. Archdeacon Paley.

Psalm LXIV. This Psalm was most probably composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul and his associates; from whom he begs of God to protect him; and afterwards foretells that a sudden destruction shall sooner or later fall upon them. Edwards. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the service of thanksgiving on the fifth of November.

Ver. 4. — at the perfect:] David thus calls himself, because he was perfectly innocent of what they laid to his charge. Bp. Patrick.

—— suddenly] That is, when he is not aware. Green.

6. They search out &c.] They are ingenious in devising wickedness, and contriving means of executing their bad purposes.

8. So they shall make &c.] They shall cause the mischief of their tongues to fall upon themselves. Green.

9. —shall fear, and shall declare the work of God;] Shall dread the righteous judgments of God, acknowledging it to be His peculiar work of vengeance that befalls them. Dr. Hammond.

10 The righteous shall be glad in the LORD, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory.

PSALM LXV.

1 David praiseth God for his grace. 4 The blessedness of God's chosen by reason of benefits.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm and Song of David.

† Heb. is silent.

PRAISE † waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion: and unto thee shall the vow be performed.

2 O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come.

† Heb. Words, or, Matters of iniquities.

3 † Iniquities prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.

4 Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.

5 By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

6 Which by his strength setteth fast the mountains; being girded with power:

7 Which stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts are afraid at thy tokens: thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening ‖ to rejoice.

‖ Or, to sing.

9 Thou visitest the earth, and ‖ waterest it: thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water: thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

‖ Or, after thou hadst made it to desire rain.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly: ‖ thou settlest the furrows thereof: † thou makest it soft with showers: thou blessest the springing thereof.

‖ Or, thou causest rain to descend into the furrows thereof. † Heb. thou dissolvest it.

11 Thou crownest † the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness.

† Heb. the year of thy goodness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness: and the little hills † rejoice on every side.

† Heb. are girded with joy.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing.

PSALM LXVI.

1 David exhorteth to praise God, 5 to observe his great works, 8 to bless him for his gracious benefits. 12 He voweth for himself religious service to God. 16 He declareth God's special goodness to himself.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Song or Psalm.

† Heb. all the earth.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, † all ye lands:

2 Sing forth the honour of his name; make his praise glorious.

Diligently to mark, and carefully to treasure up in our minds the special providences of the Almighty, is the way to preserve and nourish our faith and hope in Him: it furnishes the grounds of our thankfulness and praise; it stirs up our finest feelings and very best affections towards Him, holy joy, humble reverence, and hearty love; it supports us under all our sufferings, and affords us comfort in all our sorrows. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXV. This Psalm is a thankful commemoration of God's mercies and deliverances; written probably on the occasion of His restoring plenty, after the three years' famine, 2 Sam. xxi. Dr. Hammond. How graceful and animated is that rich and flourishing picture of nature which is exhibited in this Psalm: when the Prophet, with a fertility of expression correspondent to the subject, praises the beneficence of the Deity in watering the earth and making it fruitful! Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Praise waiteth &c.] It becomes us, O God, to praise Thee in Thy sanctuary, and to pay the vows which we made unto Thee in the time of our distress. Bp. Patrick.

4. Blessed is the man &c.] How happy is the man whom Thou hast chosen, and called to the privilege of being continually employed in Thy service! they, who enjoy this privilege, have abundant satisfaction in those blessings which are dispensed to them from Thy holy habitation. Travell.

5. By terrible things] "O God of our salvation, Thou in Thy righteousness answerest us by doing awful things: Thou art the confidence of the remotest parts of the earth and the sea." By "terrible" or "awful things" are meant the works of God's providence, mentioned in the following verses. Green.

8. They also that dwell] The meaning is, that the most distant and barbarous people behold the signs of God's power and goodness with wonder and amazement. Travell.

—— the outgoings &c.] The successive courses of the morning and evening; or of the sun and moon, which go forth at those times, thereby making the morning and evening; both of which are said to rejoice poetically, because they give men occasion of rejoicing. Poole.

9. —the river of God,] The clouds, those reservoirs of water which are opened and shut at God's pleasure, are here called "the river of God;" by showers from which He refresheth the earth. Green.

10. —thou settlest the furrows thereof:] See the margin.

11. —and thy paths] God is here represented as going the circuit of the heavens, as making the clouds His chariot. See Job xxii. 14, and Psalm civ. 3. Dr. Kennicott.

The happy effects of God's visiting the earth with rain, are vallies covered with corn, verdant meads, and thriving flocks. All these ideas, in the prophetical Scriptures, are frequently transferred to the times of refreshment and consolation, of peace and fruitfulness, in the church; which breaks forth into joy, in the one case, as the world is always ready to do in the other. Manifold and marvellous, O Lord, are Thy works, whether of nature, or of grace; surely in wisdom and lovingkindness hast Thou made them all; the earth, in every sense, is full of Thy riches! Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXVI. This Psalm is a solemn invocation to all the world to celebrate the wonderful works of God, as well in the general course of His providence, as for His miracles in favour of the Israelites. Travell. It is introduced in our Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea, as a thanksgiving after a storm.

Ver. 2. —make his praise glorious.] That is, shew forth His praise with due honour and glory. Bp. Hare.

3 Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy † Heb. lie. 4 All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God: he is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He ruleth by his power for ever; his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard:

10 For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

16 Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

20 Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me.

PSALM LXVII.

1 A prayer for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 3 to the joy of the people, 6 and the increase of God's blessings.

¶ To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song.

GOD be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine † upon us. † Heb. with us. Selah.

2 That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and † govern the nations upon earth. † Heb. lead. Selah.

5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

---

5. — he is terrible &c.] Astonishing in the works and counsels of His providence. Bp. Patrick.

6. He turned the sea &c.] The Prophet, after inviting men to contemplate "the works of God," sets before them for that purpose two great miracles wrought for Israel, namely, the division of the Red sea, and that of the river Jordan; by the former they escaped Egypt, by the latter they entered Canaan. Bp. Horne.

9. — suffereth not our feet to be moved.] Guards us from falling. Merrick.

11. — into the net;] That is, into the power of our enemies. Dr. Wells.

12. Thou hast caused &c.] Thou hast caused us to be miserably trampled upon by our scornful enemies; and hast put us to all manner of hard trials; but at last, Thou hast settled us in a quiet plenty. Bp. Hall.

15. — with the incense of rams;] With the smoke of the fat of rams.

18. If I regard iniquity &c.] Inwardly regard and cherish iniquity. Bp. Horne.

If a virtuous and pious life were to receive no reward and advantage in the next world, it were to be chosen for the very pleasure and comfort it administers to us in this: there being no delight equal to that which a man feels from doing well; and consequently no joy worthy to be named with that which possesses a man, when he is contemplating the greatness and glory of his Creator, and making due acknowledgments for the blessings and deliverances he hath received from His divine providence and mercy. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXVII. This Psalm seems to allude to, or rather to foretell, the incarnation of Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles, when all the nations of the earth should partake of the heavenly blessing, and become the servants of the Lord. Travell. It forms a part of our Evening Service, to be read occasionally after the second lesson; and is also introduced into the Marriage Service.

Ver. 2. That thy way &c.] The sense of the verse is, Deal so graciously with Thy people Israel, that thereby the Gentiles may be allured to join themselves with them, and to embrace their religion. Bp. Patrick, Poole.

—— thy saving health] Thy salvation. Merrick.

4. O let the nations &c.] A very sufficient cause, surely, is here assigned why the "nations" should "be glad, and sing for joy," upon the erection of Messiah's kingdom in the midst of them; namely, because He would "judge the people righteously;" breaking the yoke of the oppressor, and the iron rod of the prince of this world; becoming Himself an advocate in the cause of His church; introducing her into the glorious liberty of the children of God, whose service is perfect freedom; and with a sceptre, around which justice and mercy are wreathed together, "governing the nations upon earth." Bp. Horne.

vants of one Master, and the children of one Father, be indulgent to one another's infirmities, and compassionate to one another's weaknesses. This is the way to make "the earth yield her increase," such an increase as God takes delight in, an increase of Christian conversation, of brotherly affection, of knowledge, of humility, of justice and of charity, and of all those graces which will prevail with Him to shower down all temporal blessings in this world, and to afford an assurance of eternal in the world that is to come. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXVIII. The occasion of this Psalm was most probably the removing the ark to mount Zion by David; or rather it might be composed soon after that transaction, and with reference to it. In the mystical sense, (which is authorized by St. Paul, Eph. iv. 8,) it refers to the ascension of Christ into heaven, and His session at the right hand of the Father, with the consequent formation and preservation of His church, and the destruction both of His own enemies and those of the church. But almost every part of this noble poem is involved in an impenetrable darkness. It would otherwise have afforded a singular example of the true sublime; the scattered rays of which, breaking forth with difficulty through the thick clouds which surround it, we yet behold with a mixture of admiration and pleasure. Bp. Lowth. It is appointed to be used on Whit-Sunday.

Ver. 4. —JAH,] Or, Jehovah. Street. See the note on Exod. vi. 3.

6. God setteth the solitary &c.] God provides for those that are destitute, and settles them in comfortable habitations; He releases the miserable captives from slavery and oppression, but those who are obstinate and rebellious He punishes by want and scarcity. Bp. Patrick. Here is an allusion to the deliverance from the Egyptian bondage, and the destruction of the murmurers in the desert: which brings in with great ease the full subject of the exodus in the next verse. Bp. Lowth.

—— in a dry land.] In a barren wilderness. Merrick.

10. — hath dwelt therein:] In Thy inheritance.

11. The Lord gave the word:] That is, the joyful news. Bp. Lowth.

—— great was the company of those that published] The word for "those that published" is feminine in the original; and points out the women who with musick, songs, and dancing, celebrated the victories of the Israelites over their enemies, according to the custom of those times. See ver. 25; Exod. xv. 20; 1 Sam. xviii. 6. Parkhurst.

12. — and she that tarried &c.] The spoil was so great, that the women, who staid at home, had their shares in the division of it. Bp. Hall.

13. Though ye have lien &c.] That is, Though you were formerly obscure and oppressed slaves, tied down to the drudgery of brickmaking and pottery in Egypt, you shall now be as glorious as you then were contemptible. Dr. Delaney.

15. The hill of God &c.] The hill of Zion, where God has chosen to fix His sanctuary, though low and barren in comparison of the lofty hill of Bashan, is yet far superiour to it in real eminence and dignity. Travell.

16. Why leap ye, ye high hills?] Bashan, and the mountains about it, are poetically represented as leaping for joy at Jehovah's presence, and ambitious of His abode upon them; as if there was a rivalship among them which should be honoured with it. Green. Or rather, the rendering should be, Why look ye with envy on Zion? Bp. Horne.

magnificence of Jehovah's appearance on mount Zion as a mighty Conqueror of the enemies of His people, riding upon the cherubim, as in a triumphal chariot, with all the hosts of heaven, as it were, in His retinue. Bp. Horne.

18. Thou hast ascended &c.] Thou, O God, hast now taken possession of Thy holy mountain, and hast given us the victory over our enemies, whom by Thy aid we have carried away captive in great numbers, and have distributed their spoils among the people, yea, even among those who have transgressed Thy laws; and Thou, O Lord, shalt now have a fixed habitation in this sacred place. So shall Christ hereafter ascend up to heaven, and take possession of His glorious kingdom, having led captive His conquered enemies, sin and death; and there He shall receive those precious gifts and graces of the Spirit, which He shall bestow upon His followers, even upon such as had before violated His laws, and rebelled against Him: thus shall the Lord God dwell in their hearts, and make His abode with them, Eph. iv. 8. Travell.

20. — the issues from death.] This should be translated, agreeably to the version of the Seventy, "the passages to death," the ways by which death goes out upon men to destroy them. Dr. Hammond, Bp. Lowth.

22. The Lord said, &c.] Jehovah had promised to repeat in Israel, by David, His glorious acts; to work as signal victories and deliverances for His people, as He had formerly done in the field of Bashan, and at the Red sea, when they saw their enemies dead at their feet. Bp. Horne.

24. They have seen thy goings,] Thy triumphal procession and solemn entry into the sanctuary. Abp. Secker, Green.

26. — even the Lord, &c.] The "fountain of Israel" is the same with the "stock, or family of Israel." See Isai. xlviii. 1. The sense of this clause therefore is, "Bless the Lord, ye who are sprung from the stock of Israel." Bp. Horne.

27. There is little Benjamin &c.] The literal rendering of this verse is, "There is little Benjamin their ruler, the princes of Judah their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali." In this enumeration of the tribes of Israel, that were present at the removal of the ark, four only are mentioned; Benjamin and Judah, who dwelt nearest to the city of David; Zebulun and Naphtali, who were farthest distant from it; to shew, as Dr. Chandler observes, the unanimity of the whole nation, and of all the tribes far and near, in attending this solemnity, to testify their willing acknowledgment of David for their king, and the city of David for their capital, and where all the great solemnities of religion should be performed, and their annual festivals continually celebrated. Benjamin, though the youngest tribe, is named first, and called the "ruler," because from that tribe sprang Saul, the first king of Israel. Upon David's accession to the crown, Judah became the royal tribe, and supported the throne by its counsels. Zebulun and Naphtali were tribes of eminent learning and knowledge. See Gen. xlix. 21; Judg. v. 14. Bp. Horne.

28. Thy God hath commanded thy strength:] This is an acknowledgment that all the power and strength of the kingdom of Israel was from God. Bp. Nicholson.

29. Because of thy temple &c.] David foretells, that on the establishment of the church and worship at Jerusalem, the kings of the Gentiles should come, and make their oblations at the temple of God; which happened in his days, and those of his son Solomon, as an earnest and figure of that plenary accession of the kings of the earth to the Church of Christ, which was to take place in the latter days, under the Gospel. See 2 Sam. viii. 9—11; 1 Kings v. 1; x. 1, 24; 2 Chron. ix. 23; Isai. lx. 3, 6; Matt. ii. 11; Rev. xxi. 24. Bp. Horne.

30. Rebuke the company of spearmen, &c.] This verse literally translated runs thus: "Rebuke the wild beast of the reeds, the congregation of the mighty among the calves of the nations, skipping, or exulting, with pieces of silver; scatter the people that delight in war." By the "wild beast of the reeds," is to be understood the Egyptian power, described by its emblem the crocodile, or river horse, creatures living among the reeds of the Nile. The "calves of the nations" signify the objects of worship among the Egyptians, their Apis and Osiris, &c. around which the "congregation of the mighty" assembled. And by their skipping with or "exulting in pieces of silver," may either be meant their dancing at their idolatrous festivals, with the tinkling instruments, called "sistra," which might be made of silver; or else it may imply their "glorying in pieces of silver," or in their riches. The whole verse is a prayer of the Prophet to this effect, that it would please God to bring down and overthrow the strength, the pride, and the idolatry of Egypt, that ancient adversary and oppressor of Israel. Bp. Horne.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Shoshannim, A Psalm of David.

SAVE me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul.

2 I sink in † deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into † deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

† Heb. the mire of depth.

† Heb. depth of waters.

3 I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4 They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.

5 O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my † sins are not hid from thee.

† Heb. guiltiness.

6 Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel.

7 Because for thy sake I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

13 But as for me, my prayer is unto thee, O LORD, in an acceptable time: O God, in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15 Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me.

17 And hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: † hear me speedily.

† Heb. make haste to hear me.

18 Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me because of mine enemies.

19 Thou hast known my reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: mine adversaries are all before thee.

We learn in general from this Psalm, that God has at all times displayed His power in favour of His people, by protecting them against their enemies, and showering down His mercies upon them. This He has done for the Christian church, as well as for the children of Israel: and what is said in this Psalm of the protection God vouchsafed to Zion against the assaults of the neighbouring nations, should convince us that the church shall always subsist, in spite of all the attempts of the world and the devil. Ostervald.

Psalm LXIX. The application of many passages of this Psalm to our Lord, made by Himself and His Apostles, as well as the appointment of the whole by the Church to be used on Good Friday, direct us to consider it as highly prophetical of our Saviour's sufferings; and indeed many of the expressions are such as were more literally fulfilled in Jesus Christ than in David; who, both in his sufferings and in his advancement after them to a kingdom, was an eminent type or pattern of our Saviour. Travell, Bp. Horne.

Ver. 1. — the waters are come &c.] That is, I am almost overwhelmed with calamities. Dr. Wells.

4. — restored that &c.] The meaning is, that he was contented rather to part with his own right than to quarrel with them. Bp. Patrick.

5. O God, thou &c.] Thou, O God, who art privy to my follies, and from whom none of my sins can be concealed, Thou knowest that I never did them any injury. Travell.

9. For the zeal &c.] My zeal for Thy honour and service is that which made my enemies endeavour to take away my life; and their blasphemies against Thee moved my indignation as much as if they had been against myself. So was the Lord Christ disowned by His brethren, His zeal for God's glory deeply affected Him, and the reproaches which were levelled against God He felt as if aimed at Himself. Dr. Wells, Travell.

PSALM LXX.

David soliciteth God to the speedy destruction of the wicked, and preservation of the godly.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

MAKE haste, [a] O God, to deliver me; make haste †to help me, O LORD.
[a] Ps. 40. 13, &c. † Heb. to my help.

2 [b] Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul: let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.
[b] Ps. 35. 4. & 71. 13.

3 Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha.

4 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 But I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXXI.

1 David, in confidence of faith, and experience of God's favour, prayeth both for himself, and against the enemies of his soul. 14 He promiseth constancy. 17 He

21. They gave me &c.] These words, which David spake figuratively of himself, were literally fulfilled in the soldiers' treatment of our Lord while He hung upon the cross. Green.

——gall] See the note on Deut. xxix. 18.

——vinegar to drink.] Vinegar, in the East, was the ordinary refreshment of a slave, or of a wretched prisoner, rather than of a prince: and vinegar or sour wine, mixed with water, was the common drink of the Roman soldiers. Travell.

22. Let their table &c.] Their very feasts shall become a trap to them; they that eat at their table shall betray them, and their prosperity shall prove their ruin. Bp. Patrick. In addition to what has been said on the subject of imprecations, in the note upon Psalm v. 10, it may be remarked, that this and the following verses to the twenty-ninth inclusive, are strictly prophetical of the wretched condition of the Jews, after their rejection of the Messiah, and the destruction of their city and temple. See Rom. xi. 9, 10. Travell.

26.—they talk to the grief] Rather, agreeably to the version of the Seventy, "they add to the pain." Bp. Hare, Mudge.

27. Add iniquity &c.] Thou shalt punish their iniquities by suffering them to add sin to sin, and they shall obstinately refuse to partake of Thy proferred mercy. Travell, Bp. Horne.

29.—set me up on high.] Put me out of the reach of danger. Bp. Wilson.

32. The humble shall see this,] That is, the goodness of God towards me. Travell.

33.—his prisoners.] That is, such as are persecuted for His sake. Dr. Wells.

If we are persecuted without a cause by our enemies, and our persecution be the sharper, for our zeal and affection to God's service, and our constancy to our true religion, and made so much the more intolerable by the derision, and scorn, and reproaches, we see wickedly and profanely cast upon religion; and if all these calamities befall us for other men's sakes, so that we bear the punishment of their faults, and of offences which we have not committed; we come the nearer to the sufferings of our Saviour Himself, which is a great honour and glory to us; and if we do imitate His meekness, and humility, and patience, in the bearing of them, thus so far imitating Him as He hath put it into our power to do; we shall be sure of such a reward, it may be, reparation in this world, as shall be more than proportionable to the afflictions we have undergone. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXX. The words of this Psalm occur, without any material variations, in Psalm xl. ver. 13, to the end. The reader is therefore referred thither for an explanation. It is thought to have been taken by David from the other Psalm, and a little altered, in order to be used by him constantly, during his distress by Absalom's rebellion. Dr. Wells.

—to bring to remembrance.] See the note on the title to Psalm xxxviii.

Psalm LXXI. This Psalm was probably composed by David, on occasion of Absalom's rebellion, which was a great affliction to him in his declining age. Travell. It is introduced into our service for the Visitation of the Sick, as the greatest part of it is prayeth for perseverance. 19 He praiseth God, and promiseth to do it cheerfully.

1023. [a] Ps. 31. 1. IN [a] thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

† Heb. Be thou to me for a rock of habitation. 3 † Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For thou art my hope, O LORD God: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 By thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

7 I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my strong refuge.

8 Let my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

† Heb. watch, or, observe. 10 For mine enemies speak against me; and they that † lay wait for my soul take counsel together, 12 O God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

15 My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the Lord GOD: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works.

† Heb. unto old age and grey hairs. † Heb. thine arm. 18 Now also † when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not; until I have shewed † thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

19 Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee!

20 Thou, which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shall bring me up again from the depths of the earth.

21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

† Heb. with the instrument of psaltery. 22 I will also praise thee † with the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel.

23 My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, for they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.

PSALM LXXII.

¶ A Psalm ‖ for Solomon. ‖ Or, of.

proper for a dying person, to express his trust in God, the want of His help, &c. Bp. Wilson.

Ver. 1. In thee, O Lord, &c.] The promises of salvation are made to those, who, renouncing all confidence in the world, "trust" in God alone for it. For this reason the Psalmist so often begins his prayer with a declaration of his faith, which is to the soul in affliction, what an anchor is to a ship in distress. Bp. Horne.

2. Deliver me in thy righteousness,] A second argument here used is the "righteousness" of God, who cannot but be faithful and just to His own gracious word. Bp. Horne.

7. I am as a wonder unto many;] That is, My deplorable miseries have made many consider me as a prodigy of wretchedness. Travell.

20. Thou, which hast shewed &c.] Great and numberless as my distresses have been, I have ever found relief from Thy goodness; and I doubt not that Thou wilt again draw me out of this extreme danger, which has brought me to the brink of the grave. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

We may learn from hence, 1st, That those who trust in God are never confounded; and that they may betake themselves to Him under all their wants, with a perfect assurance of His help; but that this confidence cannot be well grounded, unless they have the same pious sentiments that David discovers in this Psalm. 2dly, As this prince, for his comfort and encouragement to praise God, called to mind the favours he had received from Him in time past, so should we preserve the remembrance of the mercies God has vouchsafed us from our youth, and through the whole course of our lives. 3dly, It is the duty of those who have been exposed to great afflictions, and whom God has happily delivered, to join with this holy Prophet in admiring and celebrating His great goodness towards them. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXII. David seems to have composed this Psalm on his having appointed Solomon to be his successor. Travell.

This Psalm describes, in the most beautiful imagery, and most lively colours, the peaceful glories of the Messiah's future reign; His righteousness, or impartial administration of justice; the universal homage and worship to be paid to Him; the perpetuity of His dominion, "whose name shall endure for ever," "in whom mankind shall be blessed, and whom all nations shall call blessed:"

1015. GIVE the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.

2 He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

3 The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.

4 He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5 They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.

6 He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth.

7 In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace † so long as the moon endureth.

† Heb. till there be no moon.

8 He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

9 They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust.

10 The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.

11 Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him.

12 For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13 He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14 He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight.

15 And he shall live, and to him † shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer also shall be made for him continually; and daily shall he be praised.

† Heb. one shall give.

16 There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth.

17 His name † shall endure for ever: † his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed.

† Heb. shall be.
† Heb. shall be as a son to continue his father's name for ever.

18 Blessed be the LORD God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things.

19 And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen, and Amen.

20 The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.

PSALM LXXIII.

1 The prophet, prevailing in a temptation, 2 sheweth the magnificent predictions, utterly inapplicable to Solomon, but truly characteristick of Christ. Dr. Hales.

In this Psalm there is such a variety and beauty of imagery, such a splendour of diction, such elegance in the composition, that I believe it will be impossible in the whole compass of literature, sacred or profane, to find such an union of sublimity with sweetness and grace. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Give the king thy judgments,] That is, cause him to govern the kingdom according to Thy precepts. Rosenmüller.

—— the king — the king's son.] The king and the king's son are the same person, a character that belongs to none before Solomon, who was the first prince in Israel that was at the same time king and son of a king. Mudge.

3. The mountains shall bring &c.] In other words, Peace, manifested by its consequence, plenteousness, shall be upon the mountains and little hills of Judea, by means of that righteous judgment, which Solomon will execute in the land. Bp. Horne.

5. They shall fear thee &c.] His righteous administration shall redound to his everlasting honour, and shall gain him the esteem and reverence of his people, through all generations: so that he shall be a lively emblem of the great King, Christ Jesus, whose dominion shall endure as long as the world remaineth. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

8. He shall have dominion &c.] "From sea to sea," that is, with reference to the Messiah, over all the earth.

9. They that dwell &c.] The most barbarous nations shall do him homage, and his enemies shall be constrained to prostrate themselves at his feet with the most abject submission. Travell.

10. — Tarshish] For Tarshish, see note at 1 Kings x. 22.

—— Sheba — Seba] For the former, see the note on 1 Kings x. 1; the latter was also probably in Arabia Felix. Consult the "map of the world" for their probable situations.

14. He shall redeem &c.] He shall preserve them from being ruined either by the deceitful wiles or violent attacks of their enemies; nor shall he, to gratify his own ambition, be prodigal of their precious lives. So shall the Saviour of the world redeem the souls of His people from their most cruel enemies, sin and death; and so valuable in His sight shall their blood be, that He shall shed His own for it! Bps. Patrick and Horne, Travell.

16. There shall be an handful &c.] The country shall be so fruitful in his days, that even a handful of corn, sown upon the lofty hills, shall produce a crop that shall shake with a loud noise, like the cedars upon mount Lebanon: and the people in the city shall be fruitful and populous, like the innumerable blades of grass in a field, which the Lord hath blessed. Such, under the reign of the Messiah, shall be the amazing increase of the word, when sown in hearts that before were barren; such the astonishing multiplication of citizens in the Christian church. Travell, Bp. Horne.

20. The prayers of David &c.] Meaning perhaps, that this is the end of the first collection of Psalms that was made, probably under Solomon, for the service of the temple. Michaelis.

As most of the things mentioned in this Psalm agree more perfectly to the kingdom of our Lord than to that of Solomon, since Jesus Christ was to be that glorious King, who was to bring the most distant people into subjection, whose kingdom was to last to the end of the world, and under whose government men were to enjoy complete happiness, and be filled with the choicest blessings of heaven; we have therefore here the description of our own happiness, which should put into our own mouths the praises with which David concludes this hymn, "Blessed be the Lord God, &c." Ostervald.

The end of the second Book of Psalms.

Psalm LXXIII. This Psalm, and several which follow, were composed by Asaph; they are chiefly filled with sad and melancholy complaints. Travell. Who this Asaph was is uncertain. Some have thought it was Asaph the singer, who was famous in occasion thereof, the prosperity of the wicked. 13 The wound given thereby, diffidence. 15 The victory over it, knowledge of God's purpose, in destroying of the wicked, and sustaining the righteous.

David's days. But it seems more probable that it was Asaph the seer, who lived in the days of Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxix. 30. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 2. But as for me, &c.] Yet, notwithstanding my conviction of this truth, my faith in the Divine goodness began to stagger, and I was in danger of falling into a state of distrust and infidelity. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

4. For there are no bands in their death:] They are in no peril of death. Old Translation.

6. Therefore pride &c.] Among men who have not the love of God in their hearts, or His fear before their eyes, pride and oppression are the offspring of worldly prosperity. Bp. Horne.

—— as a chain;] Alluding to the prevailing custom of wearing collars or chains on their necks. See Cant. iv. 9. Bp. Horne. See notes on Job xxix. 14.

7. Their eyes stand &c.] Their very countenance expresses the proud swelling of their hearts, which are puffed up by such a constant state of prosperity, even beyond their own sanguine expectations. Travell.

8. They are corrupt, &c.] They are so corrupt, that they mock at the rules of justice, and defy those who would oppose them: they haughtily claim to themselves an exemption from the laws of God and man. Travell.

9. They set &c.] They blaspheme the God of heaven, and calumniate His servants on earth. Green.

10. Therefore his people &c.] Therefore God's people falleth off to them, and from thence they reap no small advantage. Green. This passage is extremely difficult: according to our old translation, the sense of the ninth and tenth verses may possibly be, They presume to scan the mysterious ways of Heaven with as much clearness and precision as they affect to display in judging of human affairs. This raises their credit in the opinion of ignorant people, which they are sure to turn to their own advantage. Travell.

11—14. —How doth God &c.] The whole of this seems to be the reflection of God's people on the apparent prosperity of the wicked, and the despairing inference they drew from it: it was so contrary to the usual face of things under the Mosaick dispensation, and to all they had been taught to expect, that it tempted them to doubt even the first principles of all religion. Dr. Kennicott.

15. If I say, &c.] But, if I persevere in such discourse, and speak like these men, I shall betray the cause of all those who are Thy true children, O God. Travell.

17. Until I went &c.] Until I applied to Thee by prayer and meditation on Thy word. See Ps. lxxvii. 13.

20. As a dream &c.] Their prosperity is but as a dream when one awaketh; so, O Lord, when Thou seest fit to punish them, Thou shalt cause all their glory and prosperity quickly to vanish. Dr. Wells.

21. —I was pricked in my reins.] I was deeply wounded with disquieting thoughts and tormenting passions, envy, sorrow, and anger. Poole.

23. Nevertheless I am continually with thee:] Notwithstanding these foolish thoughts, I am under the care of Thy good providence. Bp. Patrick.

27 For, lo, they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee.

28 But it is good for me to draw near to God: I have put my trust in the Lord GOD, that I may declare all thy works.

27. — thou hast destroyed &c.] Thou hast destroyed those who, forsaking Thy service, have devoted themselves to the worship of other gods. Bp. Patrick. See the note on Exod. xxxiv. 16.

This Psalm teaches us how we ought to judge of the prosperity of the wicked and the afflictions of the righteous. We ought never to believe that wicked men, who live in mirth and plenty in this world, and who enjoy all their wishes, are truly happy, or that the righteous, because they are afflicted, serve God in vain. Asaph has taught us, that to resist this temptation we must meditate upon the word of God, and the ways of Providence: then we shall find that the felicity of worldly men is vain, and of short duration; and that they are set in slippery places, from whence they fall suddenly. Ostervald.

9. We see not &c.] We see not any token of Thy divine presence with us, nor is there so much as a Prophet to give us advice or comfort, or to tell us when these calamities will have an end. Travell.

11. — pluck it out of thy bosom.] That is, Exert Thy power again for the destruction of Thy enemies. Travell. The hand, when unemployed, was usually inserted in the folds of the garment on the bosom. See note at Ps. lxxix. 12.

13. — thou brakest &c.] Thou didst confound the great and mighty enemies of Israel, in the Red sea. Bp. Hall.

—— dragons] See the note on Ps. xliv. 19.

14. Thou brakest the heads &c.] "Leviathan" stands for Pharaoh, or the Egyptian power, represented by the Egyptian animal, the crocodile. The "heads" of leviathan are the princes of Egypt, the leaders of the Egyptian armies. And the "people inhabiting the wilderness," to whom they were given for a prey, are the wild beasts haunting the deserts. Bp. Horne.

17. — borders of the earth:] The boundaries of the earth, so that the sea cannot overwhelm them. See Jer. v. 22; Job xxxviii. 8, 11. Rosenmüller.

19. — thy turtledove] Thy church, which like a turtledove, simple, defenceless, solitary, meek, timid, and mournful, was in danger of being speedily devoured by her inveterate enemies. Bp. Horne.

20. Have respect unto &c.] Have regard unto the promises into which Thou didst enter with Thy people: for now the land is full of rapine and cruelty, and every dark corner of it is a den of thieves and murderers. Bp. Patrick.

This Psalm engages us to make these four principal reflections: 1. That the Church has been in all ages exposed to persecution; and therefore we ought not to wonder, if the Christian Church has been, and still is, sometimes persecuted. 2. That as God, to punish the Jews for their abuse of His service, suffered them to be led into captivity; for the same reasons He has often delivered His church into the hands of persecutors, with a design to try it, and to purify it. 3. When God appears the most provoked with His people, He does not quite forsake them, but always remembers His covenant, and delivers them at last. 4. As the Prophet was grieved for the calamities of the Jews, and prayed for their restoration, so Christians ought to be sensibly affected with the misfortunes of the church, and to pray continually for its deliverance and prosperity. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXV. It is not improbable that this Psalm was composed by Asaph on the destruction of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib. Travell.

Ver. 2. When I shall receive &c.] The first verse is spoken by many persons; here the speaker is one, and that one is plainly a ruler, who promises that when he shall have "received the congregation," or, as some render it, "when he shall have gotten an appointed, or fit time, or season," that is, when he shall be established in power and authority, at a fit time and place, he will "judge uprightly, and introduce a thorough reformation into the kingdom." Bp. Horne.

3. The earth and all &c.] In this verse seem to be the words of God in answer, that "Now the time was come for Him to do justice, and therefore the earth melted before Him:" this it might well do, as "He had first set up the pillars of it:" it stood firm only by His order, and therefore must be dissolved when He pleased. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott.

4. — Lift not up the horn:] Behave not yourselves so insolently. Bp. Wilson.

5. Lift not up &c.] For illustrations of this expression, see the note at 1 Sam. ii. 1. To which may be added, with a view to the particular phrase here employed, that "the crooked manner in which the Abyssinians hold the neck, when this ornament is on their forehead, for fear it should fall forward, seems to agree with what the Psalmist calls 'speaking with a stiff neck,' for it perfectly shews the meaning of speaking with a stiff neck, when you hold the horn on high, or erect, like the horn of an unicorn." Bruce.

6. For promotion cometh neither &c.] That is, success and advancement come not from any earthly quarter, but from God.

8. For in the hand &c.] As the choicest of heavenly blessings are frequently in Scripture represented by the salutary effects of wine, so from the noxious and intoxicating qualities of that liquor, when drunk strong, and in too large a quantity, is borrowed a most tremendous image of the wrath and indignation of Almighty God. Bp. Horne.

—— it is full of mixture;] See the note from Bp. Lowth on Isai. i. 22.

This Psalm especially instructs us, that it is God who establishes and strengthens kings, and gives peace to their dominions; and that it is the duty of kings and princes, and in general of all magistrates, to exercise justice, to restrain the wicked and the proud, and to protect the innocent. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXVI. This is a song of triumph on God's deliverance of Jerusalem from a powerful army which threatened the destruction of it, probably the army of Sennacherib. Green.

5 The stouthearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep: and none of the men of might have found their hands.

6 At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep.

7 Thou, even thou, art to be feared: and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?

8 Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth feared, and was still,

PSALM LXXVII.

1 The psalmist sheweth what fierce combat he had with diffidence. 10 The victory which he had by consideration of God's great and gracious works.

¶ To the chief Musician, to Jeduthun, A Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

‖ Or, for Asaph.

I CRIED unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice; and he gave ear unto me.

2 In the day of my trouble I sought the LORD: † my sore ran in the night, and ceased not: my soul refused to be comforted.

† Heb. my hand.

3 I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah.

4 Thou holdest mine eyes waking: I am so troubled that I cannot speak.

5 I have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times.

6 I call to remembrance my song in the night: I commune with mine own heart: and my spirit made diligent search.

7 Will the LORD cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

8 Is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail † for evermore?

† Heb. to generation and generation.

9 Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah.

10 And I said, This is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most high.

11 I will remember the works of the LORD: surely I will remember thy wonders of old.

12 I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings.

13 Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary: who is so great a God as our God!

14 Thou art the God that doest wonders:

Ver. 4. — than the mountains of prey.] Mountains often stand for great princes; and this may be a figurative expression for mighty conquerors who ravage the earth.

5. The stouthearted &c.] The mighty warriours that came up against Jerusalem are spoiled, and have slept the sleep of death; neither were any of those great champions able to resist the destroying angel. Bp. Hall.

10. Surely the wrath &c.] From the spite and malice of Thine enemies, Thou shalt take occasion to win praise and glory to Thy name; and Thou wilt so restrain their power and tyranny, that they shall do no further injury to Thy people. Bp. Hall.

12. — the spirit] The pride. Merrick.

Why are the miraculous exertions of Omnipotence recorded in the Book of Life, but to suggest to us this reflection, that God, and God only, is the proper object of our fear; since neither the wisdom of the wise, nor the power of the mighty, no, not the world itself, can stand a single moment before Him, "when once He is angry?" Yet we continue to dread any frowns but those of Heaven. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXVII. This Psalm is of that diversified and unequal kind which ascends from a cool and deliberate opening to a high degree of sublimity. The Prophet, oppressed with a heavy weight of affliction, displays the extreme dejection and perturbation of his soul, and most elegantly and pathetically describes the conflicts and internal contests to which he is subjected, before he is enabled to rise from the depths of woe to any degree of hope or confidence. In the character of a suppliant he first pours forth his earnest prayers to the God of his hope. He next endeavours to mitigate his sorrows by the remembrance of former times; but this, on the contrary, only seems to aggravate his sufferings, by the comparison of his present adversity with his former happiness. Again, recollecting the different methods by which the Almighty seeks the salvation of His people, appearing frequently to frown upon those "in whom He delighteth:" reconsidering also the vast series of mercies which He had bestowed upon His chosen people; the miracles which He had wrought in their favour; in a word, the goodness, the holiness, the power of the great Ruler of the universe; with all the ardour of gratitude and affection he bursts forth into a strain of praise and exultation, ver. 13—19. In this passage we are at a loss which to admire most, the ease and grace with which the digression is made, the choice of the incidents, the magnificence of the imagery, or the force and elegance of the diction. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — my sore ran &c.] This is rendered more literally by an ancient Greek version, "my hand was stretched out in the night without intermission." Bps. Horne and Lowth.

6. I call to remembrance &c.] I called to mind the songs I had composed, in memory of Thy signal mercies; I spent whole nights in silent meditation, and in revolving in my mind what could be the cause, that Thou shouldest forsake Thy people. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

10. — This is my infirmity: &c.] "My weakness of faith" to entertain such thoughts. Dr. Wells, Bp. Horne. But I will remember that the power of God endureth for ever.

13. Thy way, &c.] The meaning is, The methods of Thy providence are just and holy. Bp. Patrick, Old Translation.

2 [a]I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old:

3 Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.

5 For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, [b]that they should make them known to their children:

[b] Deut. 4. 9. & 6. 7.

6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation †that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

† Heb. throwing forth.

10 They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

12 Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of Zoan.

13 [c]He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

[d] Exod. 13. 21. & 14. 24.

16. The waters saw thee, &c.] The waters of the Red sea are here beautifully represented as endued with sensibility, as seeing, feeling, and being confounded, even to the lowest depths, at the presence and power of their great Creator, when He commanded them to open a way, and to form a wall on each side of it, until His people were passed over. Bp. Horne.

17. — thine arrows] That is, Thy lightnings, or thunderbolts. Poole.

19. Thy way is &c.] God walked before His people through the sea, though He left no footsteps of Himself behind Him. Mudge.

A weak man cannot rightly judge of the actions of a man wiser than himself, of whose views and designs he is not master: much less can man judge of the ways of God, to whose counsels he is not admitted, and to whose secrets he is a stranger. In complaining, the Psalmist followed the natural impressions of passion and impatience: in acknowledging the folly of his complaint, he spoke not only the language of grace, but of sense and reason. But this good man, being well grounded in religion, was able so far to get the better of his doubts and fears, as to pass a right judgment in his own case, and to call to his assistance the proper reflections which the great works of Providence administered for the support and confirmation of his hope and confidence towards God. Here then was his comfort; here the cure of all his grief. Bp. Sherlock.

Psalm LXXVIII. This Psalm pursues the history of the Israelites from the time of their departure from Egypt to the reign of David, particularizing and illustrating all the leading events. The style is simple and uniform, but the structure is poetical, and the sentiments occasionally splendid. The historical, or rather chronological, order cannot be said to be exactly preserved throughout; for the minute detail of so protracted a series of events could scarcely fail to tire in a work of imagination. The Egyptian miracles are introduced in a very happy and elegant digression, and may be considered as forming a kind of episode. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — parable:] See notes at Numb. xxiii. 7; Job xxvii. 1.

—— dark sayings] The original word means, a pointed or obscure saying; such as requires, either for the conception or understanding of it, considerable ingenuity. Bp. Lowth. But there is nothing obscure in this Psalm, which contains instructive historical truths. Therefore the expression should be rendered "pointed truths." Street.

5. — a testimony] Or solemn charge. Mudge.

9. The children of Ephraim, &c.] The history here referred to is that of the Israelites going up, contrary to God's command, to take possession of the land of Canaan, when they were smitten before their enemies. See Deut. i. 42. The Ephraimites are here specified, probably, as being the most warlike tribe, and as having led on, perhaps, the rest of the tribes to the battle. Green.

12. — in the field of Zoan.] In the territories that belong to Zoan, a chief city of Egypt, and the court of Pharaoh, where those miraculous works would be so much more noted. Bp. Hall.

15 [e] He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.
16 He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.
17 And they sinned yet more against him by provoking the most high in the wilderness.
18 And they tempted God in their heart by asking meat for their lust.
19 [f] Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God † furnish a table in the wilderness?
20 [g] Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?
21 Therefore the LORD heard this, and was wroth: so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;
22 Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation:
23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven,
24 [h] And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.
25 ‖ Man did eat angels' food: he sent them meat to the full.
26 He caused an east wind † to blow in the heaven: and by his power he brought in the south wind.
27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and † feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea:
28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.
29 So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;
30 They were not estranged from their lust. But [i] while their meat was yet in their mouths,
31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and † smote down the ‖ chosen men of Israel.
32 For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.
33 Therefore their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.
34 When he slew them, then they sought him: and they returned and enquired early after God.
35 And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer.
36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.
37 For their heart was not right with him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant.
38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not: yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.
39 For he remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.
40 How oft did they ‖ provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert!
41 Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

been a full display of wrath and vengeance, executed upon the oppressors of the Church by "evil angels, agents, or messengers;" whether by this expression we understand the material instruments of Divine displeasure; or angels employed as ministers of vengeance; or the actual appearance and ministration of evil spirits, suffered to torment the wicked in this world, as they certainly will do in the next. Tradition seems to have favoured this last opinion, since the author of the Book of Wisdom describes the Egyptian darkness as a kind of temporary hell, Wisd. xvii. Bp. Horne.

54. — this mountain,] Zion, which He took from the Jebusites by the hand of David. Bp. Wilson.

56. Yet they tempted and provoked the most high God,] St. Paul says, with reference to the same transactions, "Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted," 1 Cor. x. 9. These texts do both relate to the same rebellious acts of the Israelites in the wilderness. In the former of them, the Person they tempted is called the Most High God; in the latter, He is called Christ: therefore Christ is the Most High God. Jones of Nayland.

We cannot exercise our devotions more usefully upon any part of the Old Testament, than upon the history of God's wonderful lovingkindness to, and miraculous deliverances of, His own chosen people, the Jews. There we find all the most heightened acts of power, all the transcendent kindness, and bounty, and affection, which the most exalted imagination of man can suppose possible to result from Divinity itself; and there we find the most inexpressible ingratitude and baseness of spirit, the foulest enormities and transgressions, and the most barefaced contempt of that Power which had preserved and protected them, which the malice of the devil himself can infuse into the heart of man. Again, we find, on the one hand, the patience and mercy of God contending to be too hard for that malice, checking and restraining this people from hurting themselves; or permitting them to hurt themselves, till they grew sensible of their wickedness; and then delivering them, because, and only because, they grew sensible: and on the other hand, a perverseness so strong, and an obstinacy so powerful, an incorrigibleness so proud, that it was too hard for that mercy, and drove it from them: and, in the last place, we find the indignation of God kindled, which could not be quenched without scattering this rebellious nation over the face of the whole earth. Lord Clarendon.

O GOD, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2 The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

Psalm LXXIX. In this Psalm Asaph complains that the Babylonians had destroyed the city and temple of Jerusalem, and beseeches God to be reconciled to His people, and to punish the blasphemies and cruelties of their idolatrous enemies. Green. It is one of the Psalms appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

Ver. 8. — let thy tender mercies &c.] Extend Thy compassion to us without delay. Travell.

10. — let him be known] Or, make Thyself known. Green.

11. — those that are appointed to die;] Those whom their enemies have condemned to death. Bp. Patrick.

12. — our neighbours] "Our neighbours" probably respects the Edomites chiefly. See Psalm cxxxvii. 7. Mudge.

—— into their bosom] The Arabs join together the two upper corners of their hyke, a garment like the plaid of the highlanders in Scotland, and after having placed them first over one of their shoulders, they then fold the rest of it about their bodies. The outer fold serves them frequently instead of an apron, wherein they carry herbs, loaves, corn, &c. There seem to be several allusions to this in Scripture; as "rendering sevenfold into their bosom, &c." Dr. Shaw.

Affliction hath then wrought its intended effect, when it hath convinced us of sin, and led us to repentance; when, brought back by it, like the returning prodigal, to the house and presence of our heavenly Father, we acknowledge our guilt as the cause of our misery, and entreat forgiveness of the one, in order to obtain a release from the other; not pleading our own merits, but the mercies of God our Saviour, and the glory of His name. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXX. The subject of this Psalm has some resemblance to the former: it contains an application to God for help under some grievous affliction; describes the former exaltation of God's people, and their present depression, under the beautiful figure of a vine; and concludes with earnest prayer to God for a continuance of His goodness. Travell.

Ver. 1. — thou that dwellest &c.] Thou that sittest enthroned above the ark of the covenant, shew us some illustrious token of Thy presence. Travell.

2. Before Ephraim &c.] God is entreated to go forth, in His strength and His salvation, before the tribes of Israel, as formerly in the wilderness. Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, are particularly mentioned, perhaps, because, according to the established order, those three tribes immediately followed the ark and cherubim, the symbols of the Divine presence. See Numb. ii. 18, 24. Bp. Horne.

3. Turn us again,] Restore us to our former happiness. Bp. Patrick.

5. Thou feedest &c.] That is, we are in continual sorrow and distress, and have no degree of comfort or refreshment but our lamentations. Dr. Hammond.

6. Thou makest us &c.] The meaning is, Our neighbours contend among themselves, who shall make the greatest prey of us, and we are become the scorn and derision of our enemies. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

PSALM LXXXI.

1 An exhortation to a solemn praising of God. 4 God challengeth that duty by reason of his benefits. 8 God, exhorting to obedience, complaineth of their disobedience, which proveth their own hurt.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

8. Thou hast brought a vine &c.] The Psalmist, describing the people of Israel as a vine, has continued the metaphor, and happily drawn it out through a variety of additional circumstances. Among the many beauties of this allegory, not the least graceful is that modesty, with which he enters upon and concludes his subject, making an easy and gradual transition from plain to figurative language, and no less delicately receding back to the plain and unornamented narrative. Bp. Lowth.

11. She sent out &c.] Signifying, that Israel extended its dominion from the Mediterranean sea to the river Euphrates. Dr. Wells.

Let not the Christian church imagine, that the sufferings complained of in this Psalm relate only to her elder sister. Greater mercies and more excellent gifts should excite in her greater thankfulness, and call forth more excellent virtues; otherwise they will serve only to enhance her account, and multiply her sorrows. If she sin, and fall after the same example of unbelief, she must not think to be distinguished in her punishment, unless by the severity of it. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXI. Throughout this Psalm appears an exquisite union of sublimity and sweetness. It is an ode composed for the feast of trumpets, (Levit. xxiii. 24,) in the first new moon of the civil year. The object and end of this poem appears to be an exhortation to obedience from the consideration of the paternal love, the beneficence, and the promises of the Deity; and this is accomplished with wonderful art, elegance, variety, and ingenuity. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — the timbrel,] See the note on Exod. xv. 20.

—— the psaltery.] See the note on Psalm xxxiii. 2.

3. Blow up the trumpet &c.] In the Jewish church, notice was given of feasts, jubilees, &c. by sound of trumpet. All the new moons, or the beginnings of months, were observed in this manner: (see Numb. x. 2:) but on the September new moon, or first day of the seventh month, of the ecclesiastical year, was kept the great festival, called "the feast of trumpets," (Numb. xxix. 1,) which, probably, is here intended. Bp. Horne.

5. This he ordained &c.] This feast-day is a charge which He gave to Joseph, when he came out of the land of Egypt, where he heard a language which he understood not. Joseph is here used collectively for the sons of Joseph, or rather for the Israelites, to whom Joseph had been a father in the land of Egypt. Green.

6. I removed &c.] In this verse God reminds Israel of their redemption, by His mercy and power, from the burdens and drudgery imposed on them in Egypt. Bp. Horne.

7. Thou calledst &c.] That is, when the Egyptians followed after thee into the Red sea, in answer to thy prayers, I confounded them with thunder and lightning from the cloudy pillar. See Exod. xiv. 24, 25. Green.

¶ A Song or Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

KEEP not thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God.

2 For, lo, thine enemies make a tumult: and they that hate thee have lifted up the head.

3 They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hidden ones.

5 For they have consulted together with one † consent: they are confederate against thee:

† Heb. heart.

6 The tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites; of Moab, and the Hagarenes;

7 Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek; the Philistines with the inhabitants of Tyre;

10. — open thy mouth wide, &c.] That is, I will satisfy thy desires, be they ever so large. Mudge.

15. — their time &c.] That is, the Israelites should have enjoyed a substantial and durable happiness. Bp. Patrick.

16.— honey out of the rock] See the note on Deut. xxxii. 13.

This Psalm should incite us to pay our praises and our homage to God in a most zealous and solemn manner. A duty this, which concerns no less all Christians, than it did the Jews; for, if God bestowed very considerable favours on the Jews by bringing them out of Egypt, and giving them His law, He hath done incomparably greater things for us, in redeeming us by Jesus Christ His Son, and giving us the knowledge of His Gospel. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXXII. ver. 1. God standeth &c.] God is present in the judicial assemblies, which He has appointed; and He will call the most powerful magistrates to account. The Hebrew word for "gods" is often applied to princes and magistrates, as representing, in some degree, the power and majesty of God. Travell.

2. — accept the persons &c.] That is, overlook the merit of the cause, and give sentence according to your respect or affection to the person. Poole.

5. They know not, &c.] They will not study the laws of God, but are blinded by bribes; so that the very foundations of the kingdom, which are truth and justice, are utterly shaken and confounded. Bp. Patrick.

6. I have said, Ye are gods;] I have given you my authority, and even put my name upon you, John x. 34, 35. Bp. Wilson.

7. — and fall like &c.] And ye shall fall, O ye princes, like any other man. Gataker, Rosenmüller, Dimock.

8. — judge the earth: &c.] Vindicate mankind from these impious judges, for Thou hast the rightful dominion over all nations. Travell.

All magistrates should derive from this Psalm the instruction, that it is their duty to do right to all, without respect of persons, and especially to protect the weak and innocent when oppressed. To this end, they should remember that, although they are now placed above others, yet they must die one day like the rest of mankind, and must then appear before the one Supreme Judge, to give an account of all that they have done. Ostervald.

6. The tabernacles &c.] The Edomites and Ishmaelites, who dwell in tents, are engaged in this enterprise, and so are the Moabites, and others descended from Hagar, the mother of Ishmael. Bp. Patrick.

14 As the fire burneth a wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire;

15 So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

16 Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O LORD.

17 Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish:

18 That men may know that thou, whose name alone is JEHOVAH, art the most high over all the earth.

14, 15. As the fire &c.] Let their destruction be as sudden and violent, as the effect of lightning on the trees of the forest; or as the devouring flame on the parched grass that grows on the mountains. Travell.

The punishments inflicted by Heaven upon wicked men are primarily intended to humble and convert them. If they continue incorrigible under every dispensation of merciful severity, they are at last cut off, and finally destroyed; that others, admonished by their example, may repent, and return, and give glory to God. Salutary are the afflictions which bring men, and happy the men who are brought by them, to an acknowledgment of "Jehovah our righteousness," our exalted and glorified Redeemer, "the Most High over all the earth;" whom all must acknowledge, and before whom all must appear to be judged, in the great and terrible day. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXIV. It is uncertain to what particular time this beautiful composition relates: the author of it, under the figure of an Israelite, deprived of all access to Jerusalem and the sanctuary, laments his banishment from the assemblies of the faithful, describes the happiness of those who are blessed with opportunities of frequenting God's house, and beseeches God to make him a partaker of that happiness. Travell.

Ver. 3. Yea, the sparrow &c.] The Psalmist is generally supposed in this verse to lament his unhappiness in being deprived of all access to the tabernacle or temple, a privilege enjoyed even by the birds, who were allowed to build their nests in the neighbourhood of the sanctuary. It is evidently the design of this passage to intimate to us, that in the house, and at the altar of God, a faithful soul findeth freedom from care and sorrow, quiet of mind, and gladness of spirit; like a bird that has secured a little mansion, for the reception and education of her young. And there is no heart, endued with sensibility, which does not bear its testimony to the exquisite beauty and propriety of this affecting image. Bp. Horne.

—— the swallow] Rather, the dove. Bp. Lowth, Merrick.

5. — in whose heart &c.] The meaning seems to be, "whose heart is bent on travelling the ways to Thy temple." Green, Merrick.

6, 7. Who passing &c.] After many uncertain conjectures offered by commentators upon the construction of these two verses, it seems impossible for us to attain to any other than a general idea of their true import; which is this, that the Israelites, or some of them, passed, in their way to Jerusalem, through a valley that had the name of "Baca," a noun derived from a verb, which signifies to "weep;" that in this valley they were refreshed by plenty of water; that with renewed vigour they proceeded from stage to stage, until they presented themselves before God in Zion. Bp. Horne.

9. — of thine anointed.] He prays for the king as the person in whom the prosperity of his country was enwrapped: he was the "shield" and protection of it under God. See Ps. lxxxix. 18, and xlvii. 9. Mudge.

There cannot be a greater resemblance to the joys of heaven in any pleasure or happiness that we can enjoy in this world, than in that tranquillity of mind and conscience which naturally attends and accompanies our fervent devotions to God Almighty; when we have deposited all our wishes with Him, and submitted and resigned all our desires to Him. Nor can there be a more lively representation upon earth, of the court and company of heaven, than in the assemblies and congregations of religious and pious men pouring out their prayers, and celebrating the praises of their Creator and Redeemer. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXXXV. In celebrating the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, the Psalmist is carried by a prophetick impulse to foretell a much greater deliverance by the coming of Christ. Dimock. This Psalm is appointed by the Church to be used on Christmas-day, when we celebrate the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin, and the introduction into the world of mercy and truth, righteousness and peace. Travell. It is also appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

Ver. 4. Turn us, &c.] This word is frequently used in Scripture: the metaphor seems to be taken from a shepherd who drives back the wandering sheep; and it is applied both to relief from temporal affliction, and return to the paths of duty.

8. I will hear &c.] I will wait with patience for God's answer to my prayers. Bp. Wilson.

—— to folly.] To wickedness.

10. Mercy and truth &c.] How admirable is this celebrated personification of the Divine attributes! How just, elegant, and splendid does it appear, if applied only according to the literal sense, to the restoration of the Jewish nation from the Babylonish captivity! but if interpreted as relating to that more sacred mystical sense, which is not obscurely shadowed under the ostensible image, it is certainly uncommonly noble and elevated, mysterious and sublime. Bp. Lowth.

11. Truth shall spring &c.] See note from Bp. Lowth on Isai. xlv. 8.

13. Righteousness shall go &c.] That is, reformation of morals shall precede the establishment of Christ's religion.

We learn in this Psalm, that, as God makes men, and sometimes His own people and Church, feel the effects of His wrath for the punishment of their sins; and that the end which He proposes by it is to recover them from their errours; so when He sees them humbled to becoming feelings of piety, He is ever ready to receive them again into His favour, and to bestow on them His choicest gifts, both temporal and spiritual. Osterwald.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

13. — the lowest hell.] Extreme dangers; the grave. Dr. Wells, Green.

This prayer should excite those who are in affliction and distress to call upon God for help with profound humility, and firm confidence in His mercy and power; beseeching Him not only to deliver them from the evils which press sore upon them, but, above all, to give them grace to please and obey Him. We ought likewise in our troubles to meditate upon God's infinite goodness, and consider that "He is full of compassion, and gracious, longsuffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth." This will support us under all our trials, fill us with joy and consolation, and afford us, even in the midst of trouble, reason to praise and bless Him. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXXVII. This Psalm contains a brief comparison, first, between Zion, the place of God's worship, and all Judea besides; and then between it and all heathen countries. Dr. Hammond.

Ver. 1. His foundation &c.] That is, Zion is of God's founding. See Isai. xiv. 32; and Psalm cxxxii. 13. Dr. Chandler.

2. The Lord loveth &c.] The Lord takes more pleasure to dwell in His tabernacle, and His temple, on Zion, than in all the rest of the land of Judah or Israel. Bp. Hall.

4. I will make mention &c.] The accession of the nations to the Church is generally supposed to be here predicted. God declares by His Prophet, "I will make mention of," or cause to be remembered, "Egypt and Babylon," the old enemies of Israel, "to" or "among them that know Me," that is, in the number of My worshippers; "behold, also, Philistia and Tyre, with Arabia;" these are become Mine; "this," or each of these, "is born there," that is, in the city of God; they are become children of God, and citizens of Zion. Bp. Horne.

—— Rahab] Meaning Egypt. The Hebrew word signifies "proud," and the name is given to Egypt from the pride and insolence of its princes and inhabitants. Parkhurst.

—— Ethiopia;] Rather, Arabia. Dr. Wells. See note at Numb. xii. 1.

5. And of Zion &c.] "So that of Zion," or the Church, "it shall be said, This and that man," that is, great numbers of men in succession, "are born in her;" alluding to the number of converts under the Gospel, the sons of that Jerusalem, "which is the mother of us all." Bp. Horne.

6. The Lord shall count, &c.] In the Book of Life, that register of heaven, kept by God Himself, our names are entered, not as born of flesh and blood by the will of man, but as born of water and the Spirit by the will of God; of each person it is written, "that he was born there," in the church and city of God. Bp. Horne.

7. — all my springs &c.] And the burden of the song, thus joyfully sung in praise of Zion, was to be this; "All my springs," or fountains, "are in thee." In thee, O Zion, is the fountain of salvation, and from thee are derived all those springs of grace which flow by the Divine appointment, while the world lasts, for the purification and refreshment of mankind upon earth. Bp. Horne.

If "the Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob," so should we. For the prosperity, therefore, of the Church, we and all the world ought to pray. And while we pray for the Church with our lips, let it be our unfeigned endeavour to adorn her by our lives. So shall we make the proper return for the mercies we have received; so shall we draw down more and more of the Divine favour continually upon our king, our country, and ourselves; so shall we convince the world of this great and important truth, that the Christian is the loyal subject, and the Churchman the true patriot. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXVIII. This Psalm is a continued detail of melancholy complaints, on account of some grievous sufferings, under which the Psalmist laboured. The extreme severity of those sufferings, and the strong expressions used in describing them, make the whole of it highly applicable to our blessed Lord: on this account it is appointed by the Church to be read on Good Friday, when we are directed to call to mind His unexampled sorrows both in body and soul, His desertion in the day of trouble, His bitter passion, and most painful death. Travell, Bp. Horne.

O LORD God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee:

2 Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles: and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off ‖ from thy hand.

‖ Or, by thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

7 Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.

8 Thou hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination unto them: I am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 Mine eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee, I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?

15 I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

17 They came round about me ‖ daily like water; they compassed me about together.

‖ Or, all the day.

18 Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

PSALM LXXXIX.

1 The psalmist praiseth God for his covenant, 5 for his wonderful power, 15 for the care of his church, 19 for his favour to the kingdom of David. 38 Then complaining of contrary events, 46 he expostulateth, prayeth, and blesseth God.

— Mahalath] See the note to the title of Psalm liii.

— Leannoth,] This word means "interchangeably." Dr. Wells. Or, according to others, "to create dejections," to raise a pensive gloom or melancholy in the mind. Mudge.

— the Ezrahite.] That is, a descendant of Zerah the son of Judah. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 5. Free among the dead,] That is, set at liberty, or dismissed from the world, and separated from all communication with its affairs, as dead bodies are. Bp. Horne.

This alludes to the separation of lepers, who were as much removed from all society as if they were really dead. Fenton.

—— whom thou rememberest &c.] That is, "whom Thou rememberest no more as living objects of Providence upon earth;" in this sense, they are "cut off from God's hand," which held and supported them in life. Bp. Horne.

6. Thou hast laid me &c.] Thou hast thrust me down into a deep and dark dungeon, which I can compare to nothing but a grave. Bp. Patrick.

10. — shall the dead &c.] Shall the dead arise out of their graves, and live here among men and celebrate Thy praises? Bp. Hall.

12. — in the land of forgetfulness?] In the grave, where all things are forgotten? Bp. Wilson.

13. — prevent thee.] Come before Thee. Bp. Wilson, Old Translation.

16. — thy terrors have cut me off.] Have overwhelmed me. Bp. Patrick.

As the comforts which true religion affords are the only sure support against the evils and calamities of the world, to which every condition of life is more or less exposed; so the terrours of religion, being very grievous in themselves, exclusive of these comforts, add weight to all our miseries, and are a burden too heavy for a man to sustain. But surely there is something monstrous in such terrours! They come not from religion by natural birth: for it is much easier to believe that all we see is chance and fortune, and religion itself a vain thing, than to believe that an all-wise and all-powerful Being has formed us to be miserable. And yet, in fact, this is often the case; we see many rendered unhappy by such fears and jealousies: and of all the fears incident to man these are the most fearful, and give us the quickest sense of misery; they are what the Psalmist has here described them to be, "distraction." Bp. Sherlock.

Psalm LXXXIX. Ethan, speaking in the person of his prince, describes his reliance on the faithfulness of God to fulfil His covenant with David, and on the power of God to perform wonders for the deliverance of His people. He then represents, that, notwithstanding His covenant with David, and His power to deliver His people, the kingdom of Judah was at that time in great desolation, being despoiled of its glory, and delivered into the hands of the Babylonians; and implores the Lord to put an end to its captivity and calamities. Green.

The glorious things here spoken of David, and of his posterity, are prophetical of the Messiah; and can with strict propriety be applied only to Him: on this account the Church has appointed this Psalm to be used on Christmas-day. Travell.

Ver. 2. — Mercy shall be built up &c.] That is, God's mercy, and His regard to the truth of His promises, are as fixed and unchangeable as the very heavens themselves. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

3. I have made a covenant &c.] This covenant God made with David by the Prophet Nathan, 2 Sam. vii. 12, &c. The covenant relates to David's "seed," and to the "establishment of his throne" in that seed; literally, in Solomon, for a time; spiritually, in Christ, for ever. Bp. Horne.

† Heb. turned away.

9 For all our days are †passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years ‖ as a tale that is told.

‖ Or, as a meditation.

---

39. Thou hast made void &c.] Thou seemest not to regard the covenant made with Thy faithful servant David, but hast permitted the authority of his successor to be profaned, and his crown trodden under foot. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

47. Remember how short &c.] O let the natural shortness of my life plead with Thee for mercy, and do not let it appear as if Thou hadst made man only to be miserable and to die. Travell.

50. Remember, Lord, the reproach &c.] The Jews, when this Psalm was penned, were in a low estate: the very heathen reproached them for vainly expecting their mighty Deliverer, the Messiah, whom they said God had promised to David, and out of his loins. Bp. Wilson.

51. — reproached the footsteps &c.] That is, have pursued the steps of Thine anointed with revilings. Mudge, Merrick. Or, according to the Chaldee, mocked at the tardy advent of Thy Messiah. Bp. Horne.

The posterity of David were to enjoy God's favour, or be deprived of it, as they proved obedient or disobedient to His law. When they became rebellious, idolatrous, and profligate, the rod was lifted up, and due chastisement inflicted, sometimes by the immediate hand of Heaven, sometimes by the instrumentality of their heathen adversaries; famine and pestilence, war and captivity, were at different times employed to reclaim backsliding Israel. But still the "covenant" of God in Christ stood sure; the Jewish nation was preserved, through all changes and revolutions, "till the Seed came to whom the promise was made;" nor was Jerusalem destroyed before the new and spiritual kingdom of Messiah was set up in the earth. Christian communities, and the individuals that compose them, are in like manner corrected and punished for their offences. "Nevertheless, God's lovingkindness will He not utterly take from us, nor suffer His faithfulness to fail." So, "I am with you alway," says the Redeemer, "even unto the end of the world, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against My church," Matth. xxviii. 20, and xvi. 18. Nor shall the world be destroyed until Christ come again, and His glorious kingdom be ready to appear. Bp. Horne.

The end of the third Book of Psalms.

Psalm XC. It has been commonly imagined, that this Psalm was composed by Moses, when God shortened the days of the murmuring Israelites in the wilderness; see Numb. xiv. It chiefly refers to the mortal and transitory state of man on earth, and is therefore adopted by the Church in the Funeral Service. Travell.

Ver. 1. — our dwelling place] Our place of refuge. Mudge, Old Translation.

3, 4. — and sayest, Return, &c.] That is, Thou restorest men to life. "For a thousand years, &c." that is, though the time of their restoration is remote, it is equally certain; for a thousand years are to Thee as one day.

4. — a watch in the night.] See the note on Exod. xiv. 24.

9. For all our days &c.] For we constantly feel some effect or other of Thine anger, whereby our lives decline exceeding fast. Bp. Patrick.

† Heb. As for the days of our years, in them are seventy years.

10 † The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

† Heb. cause to come.

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may † apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return, O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

---

11. Who knoweth &c.] But who is there that duly lays to heart the effects of Thy anger, and considers that it is proportioned to our piety or disobedience? Travell. Moses here laments the insensibility of the Israelites under the judgments of God. They saw His wrath sweeping numbers away for their sins, and yet none studied to divert it, by fearing Him as they ought. Green.

13. Return, O Lord, &c.] Return, O Lord, at length, from Thy severity against us; and let Thy servants feel Thy gracious pardon. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

16. Let thy work &c.] He prays God to shew them and their posterity those glorious works which heretofore He had exerted in behalf of His people, and to shine upon and prosper what they were doing. Mudge.

17. And let the beauty &c.] Let the countenance of the Lord our God smile upon us; and prosper Thou the work of our hands. Green

This Psalm is remarkable for affording us much useful instruction. In it we have the governour of a numerous people sequestering his mind from the management of publick affairs to private meditations; from beholding the present outward appearances, to considering the real nature and secret causes of things: in the midst of all the splendour and pomp, of all the stir and tumult about him, he observes the frailty of human condition, he discerns the providence of God justly ordering all; this he does not only in the way of wise consideration, but of serious devotion, moulding his observations into pious acknowledgments, and earnest prayers to God. Thus doth that great and good man teach us all, (more particularly men of high estate and much business,) to find opportunities of withdrawing their thoughts from those things which commonly amuse them, (the cares, the glories, the pleasures of this world,) and fixing them upon matters more improvable to devotion; the transitoriness of their condition, and their subjection to God's just providence; joining also to these meditations suitable acts of religion, due acknowledgments to God, and humble prayers. This was his practice among the greatest encumbrances that any man could have; and it should also be ours. Dr. Barrow.

Psalm XCI. The subject of this Psalm is the security, the success, and the reward of piety. If any reader will carefully weigh and consider the nature and dignity of the imagery contained in this Psalm, having due respect at the same time to the principles of the mystical allegory, I am persuaded he will agree with me, that something of a mystical design is concealed under the literal meaning of it. Without a question, the pious person, the king, or high priest perhaps, who in the literal sense is the principal character of the poem, is meant in reality to represent some greater and sublimer personage. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. He that dwelleth &c.] "To dwell in the secret place of the Most High," is a figurative expression, and signifies no more than to put ourselves under the Divine protection. Green.

3. Surely he shall deliver &c.] Leaving the former sentence unfinished, the Psalmist turns and addresses the same person whom he had been describing: "He indeed shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, from the destroying pestilence." Bp. Lowth.

4—7. He shall cover thee &c.] This imagery is beautiful and diversified, and at the same time uncommonly solemn and sublime. Bp. Lowth.

8. Only with thine eyes &c.] The meaning is, that the righteous person all along spoken of, himself secure from the judgments of God, should in safety behold the destruction wrought by them upon impenitent and incorrigible sinners. Bp. Horne.

7 When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:

10 But my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn: I shall be anointed with fresh oil.

11 Mine eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies, and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.

12 [a] The righteous shall flourish like the [a] Hos. 14. 5. palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

PSALM XCIII.

The majesty, power, and holiness of Christ's kingdom.

---

13. Thou shalt tread &c.] The most noxious and venemous creatures shall have no power to hurt thee, but thou shalt subdue and trample them under foot. So shall Christ triumph over the "dragon, that old serpent," Rev. xx. 2, and He shall make His faithful servants victorious "over all the power of the enemy," Luke x. 19. Travell.

—— the dragon] See the notes on Deut. xxxii. 33; Psalm xliv. 19; and Lam. iv. 3.

14. Because he hath set &c.] In the former part of the Psalm the Prophet spoke in his own person; here God Himself is plainly introduced as the speaker. Bp. Horne.

—— because he hath known my name.] Hath acknowledged My power, and relied on that alone for protection. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

How much man stands in need of the protection of Heaven, appears from a survey of the dangers to which he is continually exposed. Various are the terrours of the night, manifold the perils of the day; from diseases, whose infection makes its progress unobserved; from assaults, casualties, and accidents, which can neither be foreseen, nor guarded against. The soul has likewise her enemies ready to attack and surprise her at all hours. Avarice and ambition are abroad watching for her in the day; while concupiscence, like a pestilence, "walketh in darkness." In adversity she is disturbed by terrours; in prosperity still more endangered by pleasures. But Jesus Christ has overcome the world, to prevent us from being overcome by it. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XCII. This Psalm was appointed by the Jews to be used constantly on the sabbath day, as it was probably composed by David after God had given him rest from all his enemies. See 2 Sam. vii. 1. Fenton.

Ver. 4. — thy work:] The following part of the Psalm shews, that by "God's work" here, the Psalmist means, His providence in the government of human affairs. Rosenmüller.

6. A brutish man — a fool] He who is ignorant of the final issue of things, and attendeth not to his eternal interest, is in Scripture language the "brutish man," and the "fool," who knoweth not the works, neither understandeth the designs of Heaven. Bp. Horne.

8. — art most high] The expression is equivalent to God's sitting in heaven, and there overruling all the designs of men to His own glory, and the good of His servants. Mudge.

10. But my horn &c.] But, as the unicorn is superiour in power and strength to other creatures, so shall my authority be exalted above others; and I shall enjoy a continual course of happiness; like one who is newly anointed for the enjoyment of a feast. Travell.

—— unicorn:] See the note on Psalm xxii. 21.

13. Those that be planted &c.] Those who, like fruitful trees, are firmly rooted in their obedience to God's laws, shall be sheltered under His protection, and shall grow and increase in His service. Travell.

Thanksgiving is the duty, and ought to be the delight, of a Christian. It is his duty, as being the least return he can make to his great Benefactor: it ought to be his delight, for it is that of angels, and will be that of every grateful heart, whether in heaven or on earth. The "mercy" of God in promising salvation, and His "faithfulness" in accomplishing it, are inexhaustible subjects for morning and evening praises; every instrument should be strung, and every voice tuned to celebrate them, until day and night come to an end. But more especially should this be done on the sabbath day; which, when so employed, affords a lively resemblance of that eternal sabbath, to be hereafter kept by the redeemed in the kingdom of God. Bp. Horne.

THE LORD reigneth, he is clothed with majesty; the LORD is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself: the world also is stablished, that it cannot be moved.

Psalm XCIII. ver. 1. — clothed with majesty;] See the second note from Bp. Sanderson on Job xxix. 14.

3. The floods have lifted up, &c.] The meaning is, Our numerous enemies are risen up against us, and threaten to overwhelm us, like a furious storm. Travell. The rage and clamour of the enemies of God's people is frequently represented by the raging and roaring of the sea. Green.

4. The Lord on high &c.] The King of heaven is stronger than all earthly potentates, and will subdue them under His feet. Poole.

This Psalm teaches us, that God rules with glory and magnificence over all the world; that His throne is established in righteousness; that His power infinitely exceeds that of all created beings: from whence we are to conclude, that He will reign for ever, for the good and advantage of His people, and of all those who serve Him and submit themselves to Him. Ostervald.

Psalm XCIV. In this prayer, the children of Israel represent to God the sad condition they were reduced to by the cruelty of their enemies, whose insolence, impiety, and blasphemies, they describe. The Prophet nevertheless adores the wisdom and goodness of God, in the corrections wherewith He visits men; and foretells the deliverance of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked. Ostervald. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

Ver. 1. — shew thyself.] Appear in the defence of Thy oppressed servants. Travell.

4. — hard things?] That is, insolent, malicious, contemptuous and threatening words. Poole.

Horne.*

15. But judgment shall return &c.] Although the justice of God may seem to be called in question, while the wicked flourish and the godly are afflicted; yet shall true righteousness and judgment return at the last, and all the upright shall follow God, and justify the ways of His providence. *Travell, Bp. cernedness of one who knows he has a much nobler possession, of which no one can rob him: he will part with his riches without torment, he will keep them without anxiety, and use them so as to make them a blessing to himself and all around him. If the course of the world be disordered, and threaten the inhabitants thereof with calamity and distress, he will maintain his inward peace, knowing that "the Lord is King, be the earth never so unquiet." He will look with pleasure on all the scenes of futurity, being well assured that the world that now is, and the world that is to come, are in the hands of God. These are the comforts which, in the multitude of sorrows which surround us, will refresh the soul of a religious man; whilst they who forget God are spending a wretched life in lamenting over the misfortunes of this world, and are ending it to begin a more wretched life in the world that is to come. *Bp. Psalm XCV. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews hath taught us to consider this Psalm as an address to believers under the Gospel; and he affirms it to be written by David, Heb. iv. 7. Bp. Horne.

4. — the strength of the hills] That is, the loftiest and largest hills. Dr. Hammond.

6. — let us kneel before the Lord] It is most becoming, on all occasions, to express religious feelings of the mind by suitable actions of the body; and, especially, to "kneel before the Lord our Maker" when we humbly pour forth to His sacred name the tribute of our prayers and adorations.

7. For he is our God; &c.] "For He is our God, we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand, if ye will hear His voice to-day;" that is, if ye will be His obedient people, He will continue to be your God. Or else, the word translated "if" may be rendered in the optative form; "O that you would hear His voice to-day," saying unto you, "Harden not &c." However this be, what follows to the end of the Psalm is undoubtedly spoken in the person of God Himself. Bp. Horne.

8, 9. Harden not &c.] These verses allude to what passed at the place called Massah, and Meribah, from the people there striving with their God, notwithstanding all the mighty works which He had wrought for them before their eyes, Exod. xvii. 7. Bp. Horne.

11. — into my rest.] That is, into the land of Canaan, which was a type of heaven. Dr. Wells.

The wisdom and piety of the Church hath appointed this Psalm to be used every day in the beginning of our publick morning devotions, that there may be an union of all in heart and voice in the acknowledgment of God's mercy. It is from not acknowledging at all, or not acknowledging together, the superiority of God over all the world, and His power and justice of disposing of all things in it, that we fail in our humility towards Him, and in the exercise of Christian duties towards all men; and it is from not enough remembering the ingratitude and rebellion of our forefathers, and the grievous punishments they underwent for the same, the forcing God to reverse His own purpose, and compelling Him not to let them see the blessing He intended to them, that we are still so much inclined to murmur at His providence, and undervalue His power. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XCVI. We learn from 1 Chron. xvi, that, on the removal of the ark to the place prepared for it on mount Zion, David delivered this Psalm to be sung in commemoration of God's special presence among them. It is a solemn invocation to the people to give glory to God, to acknowledge and adore Him, both as the Creator of all things, and the supreme and righteous Judge of the world. By common consent of Jews as well as Christians, this Psalm is applied to the times of the Messiah. Bp. Horne, Travell.

According to the Greek version, this Psalm was used at the dedication of the second temple, after the return of the Babylonish captivity. And it was somewhat altered to accommodate it to that purpose. Rosenmüller.

O SING unto the LORD a new song; for he hath done marvellous things: his

6. Honour and majesty are before him: &c.] This expresses, in poetical language, the general glory, majesty, and perfection of God.

9. —the beauty of holiness:] See the note on Psalm xxix. 2.

10—13. Say among the heathen &c.] Nothing can excel in sublimity the noble exultation of universal nature in these verses, where the whole animate and inanimate creation unite in the praises of their Maker. Poetry here seems to assume the highest tone of triumph and exultation, and to revel, if I may so express myself, in all the extravagance of joy. Bp. Lowth.

The exhortations in this Psalm are peculiarly applicable to the times of the Gospel, and describe the joy which good men should express, when they reflect that the several nations of the world are enlightened with the knowledge of the true God, and His Son Jesus Christ. These great privileges engage us to praise the Lord without ceasing; to worship Him with fear, humility, and joy; and to shew by our obedience, that the Lord does truly reign over us. Ostervald.

Psalm XCVII. In this Psalm the gracious assistance which God affords His servants, and the vengeance He takes upon the opposers of His laws, are strongly described under the images of fire and tempest. But the Psalm is chiefly applicable to the spiritual reign of Christ, who should overthrow the idolatry of the heathen world, subdue all His enemies, and make the spiritual "daughters of Judah be glad, because of His judgments." Travell. This and the three following Psalms bear the name of David in the Greek version, and it is highly probable that they all come from the same hand as the ninety-sixth. Green.

Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness &c.] His throne is surrounded by impenetrable obscurity, but every thing that issues from it is dictated by unerring truth and justice. Travell.

3—5. A fire goeth before him, &c.] The judgments of God, and their effects upon the world, are here set forth, under the usual similitude of lightning and fire from heaven, causing the earth to tremble, and mountains to melt and dissolve away. Bp. Horne.

7. —worship him, all ye gods.] Let all that are called gods, whether on earth or in heaven, acknowledge and adore His sovereign authority. Bp. Patrick.

8. —the daughters of Judah] See note at Ps. xlviii. 11.

11. Light] That is, life, salvation, immortality.

This Psalm is not so much a description of God's dominion over the Jews as a prophecy of the dominion of Jesus Christ over all nations. The Holy Spirit here describes the effects which the coming of that kingdom would produce, and the joy which the faithful would feel when it should be manifested; wherefore it principally concerns us to improve those affections of zeal and devotion which are manifest in this divine song. We here learn, that the best way of praising God, and the true character of His worshippers, is to love Him, to hate evil, and to rejoice in Him continually. Ostervald.

Psalm XCVIII. The Prophet, transported by the Spirit into the times of the Messiah, speaks in this Psalm of the great deliverance, as already effected.

There is a great similarity between this Psalm and the ninety-sixth. It makes part of our Evening Service, to be read after the first lesson.

7. Let the sea roar, &c.] Call upon the whole creation, animate and inanimate, to join the universal chorus; the sea, and the land, and all the various inhabitants thereof. Bp. Horne, Travell.

There is nothing that God expects more from us, nor takes as a greater argument of our gratitude to Him, than our signal and cheerful joy upon receiving any great benefit from Him: nor is the joy of our heart enough, though He sees the full extent of it; but He will have such a manifestation of it, that the people may know it as well as He. They who would stifle all their joy within their own breasts, and look upon solemn and publick manifestations of it, as a mixture of too much vanity in the praising and magnifying God, do not conform themselves to David's precepts, or his example. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XCIX. ver. 1. The Lord reigneth; &c.] Admiration, as it ever accompanies, so it is frequently the cause of sublimity. It produces great and magnificent conceptions and sentiments, and expresses them in language bold and elevated, in sentences concise, abrupt, and energetick. Of which this verse affords a striking instance. Bp. Lowth.

—— he sitteth between the cherubims;] He manifests His presence upon the mercy-seat between the cherubim. Bp. Hall.

—— let the earth be moved.] Let the earth bow down with fear. Travell.

4. The king's strength also loveth judgment; &c.] Although the "strength" of our King be infinite, yet it is never exerted, but in "righteousness" and just "judgment," which are His delight; they compose the firm basis of His throne, and direct His whole administration. Bp. Horne.

5. — worship at his footstool;] Worship before and towards His ark, which is His footstool. Dr. Wells.

6. Moses and Aaron &c.] In confirmation of what he had said, that God is holy, he mentions Moses, and Aaron, and Samuel, as three of the greatest eminence who were devoted to His service: to them He had shewn Himself to be God by very remarkable instances of favour, though at the same time He punished the infidelities of the people. Mudge.

8. Thou answeredst them, &c.] The construction of the verse seems to be this: "O Lord our God, Thou didst hear, or answer them;" that is, the aforementioned typical mediators, Moses, Aaron, and Samuel; "Thou becamest a forbearing God for them," or, at their intercession; and that, "even when punishing," or, when Thou hadst begun to punish, "the wicked deeds of them;" that is, not of Moses, Aaron, and Samuel, but of the people, who had transgressed, and for whom they interceded. This was the case when Moses interceded for the idolaters, Exod. xxxii. 32; Aaron for the schismaticks, Numb. xvi. 47; and Samuel for the whole nation, 1 Sam. vii. 9. Bp. Horne.

In this Psalm we learn, that it is the duty of those who have the happiness to know God, and to be the subjects of His kingdom, to fear Him, to reverence His majesty, to worship Him with the profoundest humility, and without ceasing to celebrate His name, which is great, terrible, and holy. We also see in this Psalm, that God did formerly deliver the Israelites, when Moses, Aaron, and Samuel called upon Him; and that He also took vengeance on them for their sins, when they offended Him. This shews, that as God is always good, He is also just, and has sometimes made men feel the marks of His mercy, and sometimes of His wrath, to engage them to love and fear Him. Ostervald.

Instructed by this Psalm, we ought ever to pray that all nations of the world may worship the Lord, and glorify His name; and that to this end God would be pleased to make Himself known unto them, and give them the knowledge of His Son, Jesus Christ. And, in order to excite ourselves to the duty of praising Him, we should consider that He is our Creator, that "we are His people, and the sheep of His pasture;" that He has heaped abundant favours on us, not only of nature, but of grace, and given to His Church the clearest tokens of His goodness and mercy. Ostervald.

Psalm CI. David here appeals to God for his love of mercy, justice, and integrity; and publishes to the whole world his abhorrence of villany, treachery, calumny, and pride; and then professes that he would, to the utmost of his power, discountenance and destroy all men of that character; as he would, on the contrary, favour and protect all those that were truly religious and faithful. Dr. Delaney. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the inauguration service of our kings.

8. I will early destroy &c.] The meaning may be, "Every morning I will be destroying, &c." The Hebrew courts of justice were held in the morning; see 2 Sam. xv. 2; Jer. xxi. 12. Green. Or, the word here rendered "early," may mean "soon." Merrick. Or, "assiduously." Rosenmüller.

How noble a declaration was this in a great king! and how worthy the imitation of all the princes of the earth! How noble a manner too was this of publishing declarations to the people, in solemn and sublime hymns to Almighty God; set to musick, and sung with joy and transport through the land; at once vindicating innocence, and propagating piety! Let this be numbered among the felicities peculiar to David. Dr. Delaney.

Psalm CII. This Psalm seems, by the thirteenth verse, to have been composed about the time that God had promised a restoration to His people from their captivity in Babylon; namely, after a term of seventy years: it strongly describes the miseries they suffered during their captivity, and begs God at length to take pity on Jerusalem, and restore it, with the temple, to its former glory; for this would be such an illustrious proof of His divinity, that it would draw all nations to do Him homage; and particularly His attention to this prayer of the poor prisoner should be recorded for His honour to future generations. Mudge. Penitential sorrow being a principal subject of this Psalm, it is suitable to the service of Ash-Wednesday. Travell.

25. Of old hast thou &c.] The application of this and the following verses to Jesus Christ, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, is at once a proof of His Divinity, and of the inspiration of the Psalms. See Heb. i. 10. Travell.

28. The children of thy servants &c.] Whatever may be the fate of the present generation, whether they may live to see the accomplishment of all that has been foretold, or not, yet the word of God standeth sure; there shall be always a Church, and an holy seed, to whom the promise shall be made good. Bp. Horne.

If we had a true devotion in our hearts to form and compound our prayers, and a fervent motion from our hearts to pour them out, we might reasonably as well as piously believe, that every prayer we so send up to heaven would prove effectual, and bring down that from thence to us, for which we pray. The Church hath provided an excellent form of devotion and prayer for all men to concur in at the publick service and worship of God: and whoever reads and considers that form, will find himself best prepared for his private devotions; and may very profitably transplant expressions from thence into his most private and occasional addresses to the Divine Providence. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CIII. In like manner the serpent was said by the Romans "to put off old age" when it cast its skin. Rosenmüller.

9, 10. He will not always chide: &c.] God's chastisements are some of the most eminent proofs of His mercy. They are sent to reclaim us from eternal punishment. They continue not always, but are removed when they have done their work; and while they last, are as nothing in comparison of those heavy stripes which our sins have deserved. Bp. Horne.

12. As far as the east &c.] That is, He hath entirely remitted the punishment due to our manifold offences. Bp. Patrick.

13. Like as a father &c.] See Isai. xlix. 15.

This is one of the most excellent songs of thanksgiving in the whole Book of Psalms. David here seems affected with the highest strains of devotion, and the most lively sense of gratitude. He here teaches us by his example to bless God, not only with our mouth, but with our whole heart, and with all the powers of our soul; to cherish the remembrance of all His mercies, and to take delight in rehearsing them, and praising Him continually. The Prophet here celebrates particularly the infinite mercy of God, who, knowing that we are but dust, bears with us, and does not render to us what our sins deserve; and entertains the same compassion and kindness as a father does for his children. But he teaches us at the same time, that the Divine goodness is displayed only in behalf of those that fear Him and reverence Him; and that His mercy extends only to them that "keep His covenant, and remember His commandments to do them." Osterwald.

Psalm CIV. This Psalm demonstrates the glory of the infinite Creator, from the wisdom, beauty, and variety of His works. The poet adorns this noble subject with the clearest and most splendid colouring of language; and with imagery the most magnificent, lively, diversified, and pleasing; at the same time select, and happily adapted to the subject. There is nothing of the kind extant, indeed, nothing can be conceived more perfect than this hymn, whether it be considered with respect to its intrinsick beauties, or as a model of that species of composition. Miraculous exertions of the Divine power have something in them which at first strikes the inattentive mind with a strong sentiment of sublimity and awe: but the true subject of praise, the most worthy of God, and the best adapted to impress upon the heart of man a fervent and permanent sense of piety, is drawn from the contemplation of His power in the creation of this boundless universe, His wisdom in arranging and adorning it, His providence in sustaining it, and His mercy in the regulation of its minutest parts, and in ordering and directing the affairs of men. Bp. Lowth. The similitude between the natural and spiritual creation may, perhaps, point out the reason why the Church hath appointed this Psalm to be used on Whit-Sunday. Bp. Horne. In most of the old versions this Psalm is attributed to David.

should conceive the meaning of them to be, that God employs the elements of air and fire, the winds and the lightnings, as His messengers and ministers, to execute His commands upon the earth. But the Apostle, Heb. i. 7, informs us, that they have a further reference to immaterial angels; either because those angels often appeared in the likeness, or because they were endued with the properties, of wind and flame. Intellectual beings of the highest order in the realms above, are as ready to fulfil the word of Jehovah, as are the elements of this lower world. Bp. Horne.

demonstrations of the infinite wisdom and power of God, they may serve to us as so many arguments exciting to the constant fear of God, and to a steady hearty obedience to all His laws. And thus we may make these works as serviceable to our spiritual interest, as they all are to our life and temporal interest. For if, whenever we see them, we would consider that these are the works of our Divine Lord and Master, to whom we are to be accountable for all our thoughts, words, and works, and that in these we may see His infinite power and wisdom; this would check us in sinning, and excite us to serve and please Him who is above all control, and who hath our life and whole happiness in His power. Dr. Derham.

45. — Praise ye the Lord.] This is a literal translation from the Hebrew word Alleluia, or Hallelujah, (see the margin.) This word occurs at the beginning or at the end of many Psalms. Alleluia was sung on solemn days of rejoicing: "and all her streets (that is, the streets of Jerusalem) shall say Alleluia," says Tobit, speaking of the rebuilding of Jerusalem, Tob. xiii. 18. St. John in the Revelation says, "I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God," chap. xix. 1: see also ver. 3, 4, 6. This expression of joy and praise was transferred at an early period from the synagogue to the church: and it is still occasionally used in devotional psalmody. Calmet.

Who can behold the army of Divine judgments set forth in dreadful array before him, (ver. 28—36,) without trembling very exceedingly at that Power which is able to send them, singly or in conjunction, upon a sinful land! Who can reflect upon their number and variety, without adoring that goodness, patience, and longsuffering, which tried so many different methods, and waited so long, to lead the offenders to repentance! Bp. Horne. This hymn was designed to perpetuate among the Israelites the remembrance of God's mercies, and to excite their gratitude. Though these events do not directly regard Christians, yet they ought to preserve the remembrance of them, as affording matter for the most edifying and instructive meditations. But it is our duty, above all, to take occasion, from what is contained in this Psalm, to raise our thoughts to the consideration of those signal mercies and spiritual blessings which God has communicated to us, by making with us a new covenant in Jesus Christ; by delivering us from the captivity of sin, of the devil, and of death, and by receiving us into His church. Ostervald.

Psalm CVI. This Psalm, written in captivity, may have been intended to confirm the faith of the young, and to encourage their hopes of restoration to their native land. It not only details the judgments inflicted on the disobedience of the Jewish people, but also the frequent instances of Divine mercy which uniformly followed their repentance.

47. — gather us from among the heathen,] Restore such of us as are dispersed in foreign lands unto our own country. Bp. Patrick.

If we accustomed ourselves to take a just survey of ourselves, of the frowardness and the pride of our natures, we should frequently think it fit and necessary to invert our prayers, to deprecate God's favours and mercies, and pray for His corrections and judgments, or rather we should look upon His judgments and mortifications as His greatest and most transcendent mercies. If men took that view of themselves, which others take of them in their highest prosperities, when God pours down His blessings upon them; observed the haughtiness of their looks, gait, and gestures, their proud behaviour towards all who have need of them, and their servile behaviour towards all of whom they stand in need, which every body else but themselves observes; and considered how very little they used to think of God in those seasons; and then, if they reflected upon their own modest behaviour upon some disappointment they had sustained, how often they used to pray to God in their anguish and affliction, and how fervent their devotions have then been, they would confess how much better men they are in the latter, than in the former condition, and how much more gracious God hath been to them in the one than in the other visitation. Lord Clarendon.

The end of the fourth Book of Psalms.

Psalm CVII. This Psalm may undoubtedly be enumerated among the most elegant monuments of antiquity; and it is chiefly indebted for its elegance to the general plan and conduct of the poem. It celebrates the goodness and mercy of God towards mankind, as demonstrated in the immediate assistance and comfort He affords in the greatest calamities to those who devoutly implore His aid: in the first place, to those who wander in the desert, and who encounter the terrours of famine; next, to those who are in bondage; to those who are afflicted with disease; and finally, to those who are tossed about upon the ocean. The prolixity of the argument is occasionally relieved by narration; and examples are superadded of the Divine severity in punishing the wicked, as well as of His benignity to the devout and virtuous; and both the narrative and preceptive parts are recommended to the earnest contemplation of considerate minds. Bp. Lowth. This Psalm is introduced into our Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea, as a thanksgiving after a storm.

39. Again, they are minished &c.] At another time, God sees fit to alter the course of His providence, to lessen their numbers, and to humble them by various afflictions and calamities, or by the hands of tyrannical oppressors. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

42. The righteous shall see &c.] Two consequences will follow from this alternate display of the mercy and the judgment of God. The righteous, finding themselves still the object of the former, will have cause to rejoice and give thanks; and the wicked, when visited with the latter, will be forced by their silence at least to own that their punishment is just. Bp. Horne.

43. Whoso is wise, &c.] To take notice of the providences of God is the most effectual way to make men wise, as it is a proof of wisdom. Bp. Wilson.

This very instructive Psalm serves to teach us, that God does wisely dispense all that happens to men; and that when they are fugitives and captives, sick, and in danger of perishing, afflicted with famine, or any other distress, it is He that makes them pass through all those trials, that He may engage them to call upon Him, and have recourse to His power and goodness. It therefore shews us, that it is the duty of persons in affliction to apply themselves to God by humble and fervent prayer for deliverance out of all their misfortunes; that when men cry to God in their distress, and turn to Him, He takes pity on them, and delivers them from all their troubles; and that it is the duty of those who, by the help of God, have escaped any great sickness, danger of death, or other afflictions, to shew their gratitude to Him all their lives, and to celebrate His lovingkindness before all. Ostervald.

first five verses of this Psalm are the same, without any material difference, as the last five of the fifty-seventh Psalm: and the rest are the same as the last eight verses of the sixtieth Psalm. The reader is therefore referred to the explanation already given of those Psalms. Travell.

Psalm CIX. In this Psalm David, having been unjustly accused and violently persecuted by his enemies, foretells, with a prophetick spirit, the Divine vengeance upon them. St. Peter (Acts i. 20.) hath taught us to apply the eighth verse to the traitor Judas; and indeed the severity of the judgments, and the extent of the calamities here denounced, are suitable to the guilt and punishment of our Saviour's persecutors in general. With respect to the imprecations, see the note on Psalm v. 10. The twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy may be considered as a kind of commentary on this Psalm. Travell. There are many passages in the Book of Psalms, especially a considerable part of the 109th, that have given offence to well-meaning persons, as savouring too much of private resentment, and inconsistent with that charity, which peculiarly marks the Christian dispensation. Many attempts have been made to remove this difficulty: but the most satisfactory method appears to be, to consider the verbs in the future tense, so that the passages may be looked upon as so many denunciations of the punishments, that God would inflict on the general or individual adversaries of His church and people. Thus at the seventh verse, "When he shall be judged, he shall go forth convicted, and his prayers shall be for sin, &c." Wintle.

The person particularly pointed at in this Psalm was probably Doeg the Edomite, who slew the Lord's priests, and endeavoured to destroy him whom God had anointed king over Israel, 1 Sam. xxii. Archdeacon Randolph.

Ver. 4. For my love &c.] While I pray for them, they in return for my love falsely accuse me. Green.

6. Set thou &c.] The true reading probably is, A wicked person shall be set over him, (that is, to judge him,) and an adversary shall stand at his right hand. Dimock.

—— stand at his right hand.] This is an allusion to the practice of the courts of justice among the Jews, where the accuser stood at the "right hand" of the accused. Rosenmüller.

7. —and let his prayer become sin.] His prayer would be abomination in the sight of the Lord, as being offered without true contrition and repentance, without faith, hope, or charity. Bp. Horne.

9, 10. Let his children &c.] Thus shall his wickedness entail misery upon his wretched widow and his orphan children: they shall lead a life of wandering from place to place, supporting themselves by begging alms, and seeking relief out of their miserable habitations. Travell.

15 Let them be before the LORD continually, that he may cut off the memory of them from the earth.

16 Because that he remembered not to shew mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay the broken in heart.

17 As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him: as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.

18 As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it come † into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones.

† Heb. within him.

19 Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually.

20 Let this be the reward of mine adversaries from the LORD, and of them that speak evil against my soul.

21 But do thou for me, O GOD the Lord, for thy name's sake: because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

22 For I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me.

23 I am gone like the shadow when it declineth: I am tossed up and down as the locust.

24 My knees are weak through fasting; and my flesh faileth of fatness.

25 I became also a reproach unto them: when they looked upon me they shaked their heads.

26 Help me, O LORD my God: O save me according to thy mercy:

27 That they may know that this is thy hand; that thou, LORD, hast done it.

28 Let them curse, but bless thou: when they arise, let them be ashamed; but let thy servant rejoice.

29 Let mine adversaries be clothed with shame, and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle.

30 I will greatly praise the LORD with my mouth; yea, I will praise him among the multitude.

31 For he shall stand at the right hand of the poor, to save him † from those that condemn his soul.

PSALM CX.

1 The kingdom, 4 the priesthood, 5 the conquest, 7 and the passion of Christ.

¶ A Psalm of David.

THE [a] LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

[a] Matt. 22. 44. Mark 12. 36. Luke 20. 42. Acts 2. 34. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Hebr. 1. 13.

2 The LORD shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

18. — like water, &c.] These expressions admirably mark out an adhering rooted curse, which penetrated the body, as the water which one drinks, and as the oil with which one is rubbed: they have swallowed cursing like water; see Job xv. 6; Prov. iv. 17; they are penetrated by it, as by the oil wherewith they have been anointed. Calmet.

19. — a girdle &c.] As the people of the East have ever been accustomed to wear long and loose garments, they are obliged to tuck them up, and fasten them by a girdle or sash, when they are travelling or at work. See 1 Kings xviii. 46; John xiii. 4. Travell.

21. — do thou for me,] Take my part. Bp. Patrick.

23. — tossed up and down as the locust.] The swarms of locusts are so large and numerous in Barbary, that they fly in the air like a succession of clouds. When the wind blows briskly, so that these swarms are crowded by others, or thrown one upon another, we have a lively idea of this comparison of the Psalmist, of being "tossed up and down as the locust." Dr. Shaw.

Especial care should be taken that we do not pervert this Psalm in a criminal and impious manner, by imagining we are at any time allowed to wish that the vengeance of God may fall on those who hate us and do us hurt. David here speaks in the quality of a king chosen by God, and of a Prophet; he rather foretold than desired the destruction of his enemies: he even returned them good for evil, as he himself says, and love for hatred. But, above all, let us remember that a Christian should hate no man; that the character we bear, as disciples of Jesus Christ, obliges us to love all men, even our greatest enemies, to pray for them with all our heart, and to wish and do them all the good in our power. Ostervald.

Psalm CX. In this Psalm David prophesieth concerning the exaltation of Christ; the sceptre of His kingdom; the character of His subjects; His everlasting priesthood; His tremendous victories and judgments; and the means of His obtaining both kingdom and priesthood, by His sufferings and resurrection. Bp. Horne. This Psalm is with good reason appointed for the service of Christmas-day.

Ver. 1. The Lord said &c.] God the Father, in His eternal counsel, said unto His Son, Take Thou all power and authority, as the only Mediator and true King of Thy church, until I shall utterly have subdued all those that dare to rise up against Thee; then, do Thou deliver up this royal state and kingdom of Thy Mediatorship. Bp. Hall.

—— thy footstool.] This expression is borrowed from the Eastern custom of conquerors putting their feet upon the necks of their enemies. See Josh. x. 24. The Divinity of our Saviour is clearly deducible from this verse. See Mark xii. 36, &c. Dimock.

2. — the rod of thy strength] The "rod," or sceptre, of Christ's "strength" is His word, accompanied by His Spirit. Bps. Horne and Nicholson.

—— out of Zion:] Christ's spiritual kingdom was to begin at Jerusalem. Edwards.

3. Thy people] They that are fit for Thy kingdom. Fenton.

—— the day of thy power,—holiness] "The day of His power" is the season of their conversion, when the corruptions of nature can no longer hold out against the prevailing influences of grace; and they make a free and voluntary offering of themselves to their Redeemer. Then it is that they appear "in the beauties of holiness," adorned with humility, faith, hope, love, and all the graces of the Spirit. Bp. Horne.

——from the womb of the morning: &c.] The words should rather be translated, "more than the dew from the womb of the morning is the dew of Thy progeny;" that is, Thy children, begotten to Thee through the Gospel, shall exceed in number, as well as brightness and beauty, the spangles of early dew, which the morning discloseth to the eye of the delighted beholder. Bps. Lowth and Horne.

4. — Thou art a priest for ever &c.] Thy priesthood is everlasting: in Thy person and office is and shall be fulfilled that which was figured in the royal priesthood, person, and name of Melchizedek, king of Salem, the king of righteousness and peace. Bp. Hall. The Epistle to the Hebrews places the resemblance between Melchizedek and Jesus on the name and title of the former, on his having no father, or mother, or priestly descent, or birth, or death, or successor, mentioned; which so far agreed with the latter, as He had no human father, nor mother, in the ordinary way of generation; nor was of a sacerdotal family, nor began to exist at His birth, nor continued in a state of death, nor could have any successor in His office. Abp. Secker. See the note on Gen. xiv. 18.

5. — shall strike through &c.] Jesus destroyed both the Jewish and Roman persecutors, and will destroy all the enemies of His Church. Abp. Secker. See Ps. ii. 9, and xlv. 5; Rev. xix. 15.

6. He shall judge &c.] He shall convince the heathen world, that He is their Lawgiver and their Judge. He shall take severe vengeance on those who persecute His subjects, and shall crush the supreme power in various countries. Bp. Patrick.

7. He shall drink &c.] By "drinking of the brook by the way," allusion seems to be made to the support and refreshment which Christ experienced. The phrase relates, it is probable, to those consolations which He received at the beginning of His great conflict with the powers of darkness, particularly in His agony, when there appeared to Him an angel from heaven strengthening Him, Luke xxii. 43. Merrick, Bp. Lowth.

We should remember on reading this Psalm, that we have a Priest in heaven, who stands continually pleading the merits of His sacrifice once offered on the cross. Oblation, intercession, and benediction are the three great branches of the sacerdotal office, which our great High Priest now exercises for us, and in the exercise of which the Father has condescended in the most awful manner to promise, that He will hear Him, and accept Him in our behalf. His priesthood is not like that of Aaron, transient, figurative, and successive, but real and effective, fixed and incommunicable, eternal and unchangeable. He is "a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek." Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXI. The author of this Psalm celebrates the majesty and goodness of God displayed in a very eminent manner in the wonderful things He had done for, and the signal blessings He had bestowed upon, the Jewish nation, of which this sacred hymn seems to have been designed as a short memorial. Edwards.

This is one of the proper Psalms appointed by the Church to be read on Easter-day.

Ver. 1. Praise ye the Lord.] These words are the title to the Psalm, and not part of the Psalm itself, as in the beginning of Ps. cxii, cxiii. Bps. Patrick and Lowth. See the note on Ps. cv. 45.

7. The works of his hands &c.] In all God's dispensations towards His faithful servants, and towards His impenitent adversaries, we admire and adore His "verity" in the performance of His promises to the former, and His "justice" in executing vengeance on the latter. Thus the time of fulfilling His promise to Abraham came not till the iniquity of the Amorites was full. Bp. Horne.

9. He sent redemption unto his people:] He means that great deliverance out of Egypt, which was a type and pledge of that greater and higher redemption by Christ. Poole.

We ought to join our praises to those which are offered to God in this hymn; we have even more reason than the faithful of old had to confess that the works of the Lord are great and wonderful; that He is merciful, righteous, and full of compassion; that He has remembered His covenant, and sent salvation and redemption to His people. These inestimable blessings should excite us to declare His goodness and marvellous works before men, and particularly in the assembly of the faithful. Ostervald.

Psalm CXII. This Psalm is a kind of commentary upon the last verse of the former Psalm, enumerating the various degrees of happiness which they enjoy, who fear God and keep His commandments; and concluding with a description of the envy and wretchedness of the ungodly. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

2 His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth and riches shall be in his house: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with † discretion.

† Heb. judgment.

6 Surely he shall not be moved for ever: the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

[a] 2 Cor. 9. 9.

10 The wicked shall see it, and be grieved; he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away: the desire of the wicked shall perish.

PSALM CXIII.

PSALM CXIV.

An exhortation, by the example of the dumb creatures, to fear God in his Church.

WHEN [a] Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language;

[a] Exod. 13. 3.

2 Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion.

3 [b] The sea saw it, and fled: [c] Jordan was driven back.

[b] Exod. 14. 21. [c] Josh. 3. 13.

4 The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

Ver. 4. — righteous.] "Righteous" here seems to include the idea of generosity and charity; a man generous upon principles of religion. Mudge.

6. — the righteous shall be &c.] That is, Eminently good men do commonly leave a good name behind them, and transmit a grateful memory of themselves to afterages. Abp. Tillotson.

9. — his horn &c.] God shall give him an increase of true honour, and abundantly reward his liberality. Bp. Hall. See note at 1 Sam. ii. 1.

The character which the Psalmist here gives of good men is, that they fear the Lord; that they take great delight in His commandments; that they are just and sincere; that they conduct all their affairs with uprightness; that they are kind and full of compassion, and love to give alms to the poor. He afterwards teaches us, that those who live thus are perfectly happy; that God blesses them in their persons, in their posterity, and in their possessions; that they enjoy peace of conscience; that they fear no evil, always trusting in the Lord; and that their righteousness and their memory shall remain for ever. These are very important instructions, which should powerfully encourage us to the study, and practice of piety. Ostervald.

Psalm CXIII. The servants of God are here exhorted to praise Him at all times, and in all places, on account of His power and glory, His mercy in redeeming man, and making the Gentile Church to be a joyful mother of children. This Psalm is appointed to be used on Easter-day. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 3. From the rising &c.] Signifying, either from morning to evening, or from east to west. Merrick.

6. Who humbleth himself &c.] Highly as our Lord is exalted above this system, above this heaven and this earth of ours, yet He condescendeth to regard every thing that passes here, and to make us, the inhabitants of this lower world, and, for our sakes, all the other creatures in it, the objects of His peculiar care, and paternal love. Bp. Horne.

Such is God's mercy to the poor sons of Adam in their fallen state, that from the lowest and most abject condition, from the pollutions of sin, and from the dishonour of the grave, He raiseth them to righteousness and holiness, to glory and immortality; He setteth them on high, with the inhabitants of the heavenly Jerusalem, "with the princes of His people," the leaders of the armies above, with angels and archangels before His throne. What is the exaltation of the meanest beggar from a dunghill to an earthly diadem, when compared with that of human nature from the grave to the throne of God! Here is honour worthy our ambition; honour, after which all are alike invited to aspire: which all may obtain who strive worthily and lawfully; and of which, when once obtained, nothing can ever deprive the possessors. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXIV. This is another of the Psalms appointed by our Church to be read on Easter-day. It celebrates the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, and the miracles wrought for that people, prefiguring the redemption of our nature from sin and death, and the wonders of mercy and love wrought for us by Jesus Christ. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 1, 2. When Israel went &c.] When Jehovah delivered Israel from the bondage of Egypt, He chose them for His peculiar people: His presence presided in their camp, as in a "sanctuary," or temple; and He ruled them as an earthly king exerciseth sovereignty in his "dominions." Bp. Horne.

4. The mountains skipped &c.] The mountains of the wilderness shook and were moved sensibly at His terrible presence, when He delivered the law to His people, Exod. xix. 18. Bp. Hall.

5 What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?

6 Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and ye little hills, like lambs?

7 Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the God of Jacob;

[d] Exod. 17. 6. Numb. 20. 11. 8 [d] Which turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters.

PSALM CXV.

1 Because God is truly glorious, 4 and idols are vanity, 9 he exhorteth to confidence in God. 12 God is to be blessed for his blessings.

NOT unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

2 Wherefore should the heathen say,

[a] Ps. 42. 10. & 79. 10. [a] Where is now their God?

[b] Ps. 135. 6. 3 [b] But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.

[c] Ps. 135. 15. 4 [c] Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

5 They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not:

6 They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not:

7 They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

8 They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

9 O Israel, trust thou in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

10 O house of Aaron, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

11 Ye that fear the LORD, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

12 The LORD hath been mindful of us: he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.

13 He will bless them that fear the LORD, both small † and great. † Heb. with.

14 The LORD shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

15 Ye are blessed of the LORD which made heaven and earth.

16 The heaven, even the heavens, are the LORD's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

17 The dead praise not the LORD, neither any that go down into silence.

[d] Dan. 2. 20. 18 [d] But we will bless the LORD from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the LORD.

PSALM CXVI.

1 The psalmist professeth his love and duty to God for his deliverance. 12 He studieth to be thankful.

I LOVE the LORD, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

2 Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him † as long as I live. † Heb. in my days.

[a] Ps. 18. 5, 6. 3 [a] The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell † gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow. † Heb. found me.

4 Then called I upon the name of the LORD; O LORD, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

5 Gracious is the LORD, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful.

6 The LORD preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and he helped me.

If the Divine presence hath such an effect upon inanimate matter, how ought it to operate on rational and accountable beings! Let us be afraid with an holy fear at the presence of God, in the world by His providence, and by His Spirit in our consciences; that so we may have hope and courage in the day when He shall arise to shake terribly the earth; when "every island shall flee away, and the mountains shall be no more found," Rev. xvi. 20. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXV. This Psalm has always been used as an hymn of thanksgiving for victories, from the earliest Christian ages. Dr. Delaney. This and the three following Psalms were sung by the Jews, after eating the passover, and were called the great hallelujah. Bp. Wilson.

Ver. 3.—he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.] He doeth whatsoever He pleaseth. Mudge, Street.

10. O house of Aaron,] This expression comprehends the priests and Levites. Travell.

11. Ye that fear the Lord,] This seems to comprehend those, all the world over, that worshipped the one supreme God. Mudge.

12. The Lord hath been mindful of us:] Rather, The Lord remembereth us. Mudge.

From the former part of this Psalm we learn, that God is induced to do good to men, not by any merit on their part, but by His own pure mercy, which ought therefore to be the foundation of our trust when we direct our prayer to Him. In the latter part we see how happy those are who worship God and fear Him; since the Psalmist assures us, that God is the help and buckler of all those that trust in Him, and that His favours are extended to them and their posterity. These glorious promises should prevail on us more effectually to fear God, and to expect all our happiness from His blessing alone. Ostervald.

Psalm CXVI. This is a Psalm of thanksgiving for some special deliverance from grievous calamity, wherein the Psalmist acknowledges his gratitude to the Divine mercy, describes his extreme distress and happy deliverance out of it, and determines from henceforth to serve and praise the Lord, from whom he had received such signal benefits. It is highly applicable to the case of those who have been blessed with deliverance from sickness and distress, and therefore the Church has appointed a considerable portion of it to be used in the solemn Thanksgiving of Women after Childbirth. Travell.

This Psalm has frequent and quick changes of scenes and persons. Mudge.

Ver. 3.—the pains of hell] That is, such pains as had almost brought me to the grave. Dr. Wells.

6.—the simple:] The "simple" are here opposed to the crafty, who use indirect means for their deliverance; whereas the simple

18 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people,

19 In the courts of the LORD's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXVII.

An exhortation to praise God for his mercy and truth.

O [a] PRAISE the LORD, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people. [a] Rom. 15. 11.

2 For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the LORD endureth for ever. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXVIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy. 5 The psalmist by his experience sheweth how good it is to trust in God. 19 Under the type of the psalmist the coming of Christ in his kingdom is expressed.

O [a] GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: because his mercy endureth for ever. [a] Ps. 106. 1. & 107. 1. & 136. 1. 1 Chron. 16. 8.

2 Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Let the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 I called upon the LORD † in distress: the LORD answered me, and set me in a large place. † Heb. out of distress. [b] Hebr. 13. 6.

use only such means as God approves, and rely upon Him for the success of them. Green.

10, 11. I believed, &c.] In afflictions and distresses, those of the spirit and conscience more especially, the soul is tempted to despond, and can only be supported by faith exerting itself in prayer: "I believed, and therefore have I spoken," or, therefore spake I; that is, as above, ver. 4, "I called upon the name of the Lord; O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul." And this I did, though so "greatly afflicted," that I had "said in my haste," in my hurry and trepidation, occasioned by fear and amazement, "All men are liars;" there is no credit to be given to their promises of deliverance, I am lost and undone for ever; yet my faith failed not entirely, and, lo, my prayer hath been heard, and answered. Bp. Horne.

13. — the cup of salvation,] This cup of salvation is the drink-offering annexed to and poured upon the sacrifice, at the time they used to call upon the name of the Lord. Jos. Mede. This phrase is taken from the common practice of the Jews in their thank-offerings, in which a feast was made of the remainders of the sacrifices, and the offerers, together with the priests, did eat and drink before the Lord; and, amongst other rites, the master of the feast took a cup of wine into his hand, and solemnly blessed God for it, and for the mercy which was then acknowledged, and then gave it to all the guests, who drank successively of it. See 1 Chron. xvi. 2, 3. To which custom it is supposed that our blessed Saviour alludes in the institution of the cup, which also is called "the cup of blessing," 1 Cor. x. 16, which is in effect the same with "the cup of salvation." Poole.

15. Precious in the sight &c.] That is, good men are so precious in God's esteem, that He will not prematurely deliver them up to the power of death. Dr. Wells.

16. — thou hast loosed my bonds.] Thou hast rescued me from the power of death. Bp. Patrick.

We should particularly here observe with what sentiments of joy and gratitude the Psalmist celebrates the wonderful deliverances which God had vouchsafed him in the great dangers he had been exposed to, with what zeal he praises Him, and vows to love and obey Him. From his example we learn, that when God has bestowed any particular favour on us, and especially when He has delivered us from any great danger, it is our duty to love Him, to bless His holy name, and praise Him in the presence of all His people; and above all, to walk before Him all the days of our life, and to testify our gratitude to Him, not only by our words, but by all our actions. Ostervald.

Psalm CXVII. This short Psalm seems altogether prophetical of the joy that all the world should conceive at the coming of the Messiah, to give salvation, first to the Jews, and then to all other nations. St. Paul applies part of it to this purpose, Rom. xv. 11. Bp. Patrick.

Psalm CXVIII. This is a Psalm of triumph: of which the four first verses are the preface; from thence to the 18th, an account of the victory, in which the author seems to have had a narrow escape from death: he attributes his deliverance and victory to the particular protection of the Almighty: after this is a kind of sacred dialogue: David, being come to the temple, speaks the 19th verse; they that open the gates, the 20th; he again, as he enters, the 21st; they with him seem to speak the four next verses, to the 25th; the priests of the temple, the 26th; the first part to the king, the other to the people; the people, the 27th; he, the 28th; the 29th is the chorus verse, concluding as it began. Mudge. The triumphant subject of this Psalm makes it applicable to the service of Easter-day, when we celebrate the glorious victory which our blessed Lord gained over sin and death. Travell. It is also one of the proper Psalms in the thanksgiving on the twenty-ninth of May.

Ver. 5. — in a large place.] In a state of liberty and freedom from my enemies. Dr. Wells.

6, 7. The Lord is on my side; &c.] By frequent experience of the Divine power and mercy, from time to time exerted in behalf of Israel, that nation was instructed to trust in Jehovah; and, whenever they did so, success and victory never failed to attend their steps. Would not the case be the same with us in all our

PSALM CXIX.

This psalm containeth sundry prayers, praises, and professions of obedience.

undertakings, if our faith was right and steadfast in God, who raised up Jesus from the dead, and who hath promised to make us "more than conquerors?" Bp. Horne.

10. All nations] That is, all the neighbouring nations. Bp. Patrick.

12. They compassed me about like bees; &c.] Their numbers and rage might be compared to a swarm of angry bees; but their fury was short-lived and died away, like a sudden blaze of thorns, which is quickly extinguished. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

13. Thou hast thrust sore at me] This seems spoken of his enemies generally. Rosenmüller.

15. The voice of rejoicing &c.] In the tabernacles, that is, the tents of the righteous, is the voice of shouting and triumph, proclaiming that the right hand of the Lord hath done mighty things. Green. The mention of tents shews that they celebrated their deliverance, not only publickly, but also privately, which was a sign of great and unfeigned joy. Rosenmüller.

19. — the gates of righteousness:] The gates of the sanctuary. Dr. Wells.

22. The stone &c.] No text of the Old Testament is quoted by the writers of the New so often as this, which we meet with in five different places: see the margin. The sum and substance of the New Testament applications and expositions is, that Jesus Christ is the stone here mentioned; that He was rejected and set at nought by the chief priests and Pharisees, the then builders of the Church; but that, being chosen of God, and precious to Him, this most valuable stone, thus despised and rejected of men, was at length exalted to be the chief corner stone in the building, and a centre of union for the Jew and Gentile, the two parts of which it consisted; that this was the work of God, and the admiration of man. Bp. Horne.

24. This is the day &c.] Of the day on which Christ rose from the dead, it may with more propriety than of any other day be affirmed, "This is the day which the Lord hath made." Then it was that the rejected stone became "the head of the corner:" a morning then dawned which is to be succeeded by no evening. Bp. Horne.

27. — bind the sacrifice &c.] Bind the sacrifice, or lamb, with cords; (which was done previous to slaying it;) offer it up at the horns of the altar. See Exod. xxx. 10. Dimock.

—— even unto the horns of the altar.] The meaning of this passage probably is, that the sacrifices offered would be so great that the accustomed place for the victims would not be large enough to hold them, but from their number they would press even to the very "horns of the altar."

This Psalm, which the Jews sang at their feasts, should be made use of by Christians in giving thanks to God, not only for the favours and deliverances, whether publick or private, which He grants them; but, above all, for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Spirit of God signifies in this Psalm, that the Messiah should be rejected by the chief of the Jews; and that, notwithstanding, He should become the King and Head of the Church; which was fulfilled when Jesus Christ was crucified, and when, after His resurrection, He ascended into heaven, and His Kingdom was established in the world. Ostervald.

Psalm CXIX. This Psalm consists of twenty-two staves of eight verses each, beginning with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, and ending with the last. All the verses of each single stave begin with the same letter, from which it is denominated, so that the first eight verses begin with Aleph, the next with Beth, and so on. Fenton. It was probably written for the instruction of youth. Every division if it expresses the excellence of the law; a resolution to keep it, under all circumstances, particularly of distress, when his piety exposed him to danger of reproach; and a petition for grace. The words "laws," "statutes," "testimonies," "judgments," "precepts," &c. which occur so constantly, seem here to be used promiscuously. Bp. Patrick, Green.

Ver. 3. They also &c.] "For they commit no iniquity who walk in His ways." Green.

6. — when I have &c.] All the commandments have the same Author, and the same sanction. He who thinks to atone for the breach of one, by the observation of another; he who reserves to himself a licence of indulging any favourite darling lust, while in general he preserves the appearance of an exemplary conduct, is an hypocrite; and, unless he repent, will be brought to shame, if not before men here, yet before men and angels hereafter. Bp. Horne.

9. Wherewithal shall a young man &c.] Youth enters upon the journey of life headstrong and inexperienced, with a bias of original corruption, and all the passions awake. In such circumstances, how shall a young man direct his steps, so as to "escape the pollution that is in the world through lust?" He must for this purpose take with him the directions to be found in the Scriptures of truth. Bp. Horne.

11. — have I hid] Have I treasured up. Green.

12. Blessed art thou, &c.] The meaning seems to be this; Thou, O Jehovah, art blessed, that is, art the supreme God, to whom I acknowledge all blessing and adoration to be due; teach me therefore Thy statutes, as being the only laws to which we owe all obedience. Mudge.

14. I have rejoiced &c.] Truth and holiness afford to the sincere believer a pleasure more exquisite, as well as more solid and enduring, than that which a miser feels at the acquisition of his darling wealth. Let us no longer envy the joys of worldly men, no longer be chagrined at the prosperity of the wicked. The "true riches" we may always acquire; and, surely, as much as heaven is higher than the earth, so much are heavenly joys above earthly, in kind, degree, and duration. Bp. Horne.

18. — that I may behold &c.] That is, that I may be able to comprehend the Divine mysteries contained in Thy law. Dimock.

19. I am a stranger &c.] I am a stranger, unacquainted with the way; give me Thy commandments to guide me.

20. My soul breaketh &c.] That is, my soul is wasted with a continual longing after Thy judgments. Edwards.

21. Thou hast rebuked &c.] Thou rebukest the proud; cursed are they that stray from Thy commandments. "The proud" always mean, the contemptuous disregarders of God and His laws. Mudge.

25. My soul cleaveth &c.] I am brought exceeding low by Thy afflicting hand: oh, do Thou raise and comfort me, as Thou hast graciously promised. Bp. Hall.

29, 30. Remove from me &c.] It is plain that "the way of truth," in the latter of these two verses, is opposed to "the way of lying," or of falsehood, in the former. The one comprehends every thing in doctrine or in practice that is right, and therefore 31 I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.

HE.

33 Teach me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

† Heb. Make to pass.

37 † Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.

38 Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.

VAU.

41 Let thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation, according to thy word.

‖ Or, So shall I answer him that reproacheth me in a thing.

42 ‖ So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.

43 And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.

44 So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.

† Heb. at large.

45 And I will walk † at liberty: for I seek thy precepts.

46 I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD; and have comforted myself.

53 Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

54 Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.

55 I have remembered thy name, O LORD, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

CHETH.

57 Thou art my portion, O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I intreated thy † favour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word. † Heb. face.

59 I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 The ‖ bands of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law. ‖ Or, companies.

62 At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: teach me thy statutes.

"true;" the other denotes every thing that is wrong, and therefore "false." Bp. Horne.

32. — when thou shalt enlarge my heart.] When Thou shalt enlighten my understanding by Thy Spirit. God gave to Solomon "largeness of heart," 1 Kings iv. 29.

36. Incline my heart &c.] By the words "incline not my heart to covetousness," is meant, "suffer not my heart to be inclined," or, "give it not over to covetousness." Bp. Horne.

37. Turn away mine eyes &c.] Oh, let not mine eye betray my heart unto vanity; let me not be so transported with any earthly objects, as to depart from my perfect love of Thee, and desire of heavenly things. Bp. Hall.

—— quicken thou &c.] Give me grace to go on with more and more vigour in Thy way. Dr. Wells.

45. — I will walk at liberty:] The liberty of the sons of God; freed from the fetters of sin.

48. My hands also will I lift &c.] I will earnestly employ myself, and all my actions, to the performance of what Thou commandest me. Bp. Hall.

49. Remember the word &c.] The Psalmist here instructs us to prefer our petition upon these grounds; first, that God cannot prove false to His word; "Remember the word unto Thy servant;" secondly, that He will never disappoint an expectation which Himself hath raised; "upon which Thou hast caused me to hope." Bp. Horne.

50. — quickened me.] Revived me in my sorrows. Dr. Wells.

54. — in the house of my pilgrimage.] In all my wanderings up and down, 1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2, 5, and xxiii. 13. Bp. Patrick.

56. This I had,] That is, this composure of mind and cheerfulness of spirit. Bp. Patrick.

60. I made haste, &c.] No future time that we can fix upon will be more convenient than the present is for our reformation. On the contrary, the more we defer, the more difficult and painful our work must needs prove; every day will both enlarge our task, and diminish our ability to perform it. We should consider that we are mortal and frail, and therefore any designs of future reformation may be cut off by death; which is always creeping towards us, and may, for all we can tell, be very near at hand. Dr. Barrow.

TETH.

65 Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou art good, and doest good; teach me thy statutes.

69 The proud have forged a lie against me: but I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart.

70 Their heart is as fat as grease; but I delight in thy law.

71 It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes.

c Ps. 19. 10. Prov. 8. 11.

72 c The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver.

JOD.

73 Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding, that I may learn thy commandments.

74 They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are † right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

† Heb. righteousness.

76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be † for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

† Heb. to comfort me.

77 Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for thy law is my delight.

78 Let the proud be ashamed; for they dealt perversely with me without a cause: but I will meditate in thy precepts.

79 Let those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

80 Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed.

CAPH.

81 My soul fainteth for thy salvation: but I hope in thy word.

82 Mine eyes fail for thy word, saying, When wilt thou comfort me?

83 For I am become like a bottle in the smoke; yet do I not forget thy statutes.

84 How many are the days of thy servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?

85 The proud have digged pits for me, which are not after thy law.

86 All thy commandments are † faithful: they persecute me wrongfully; help thou me.

† Heb. faithfulness.

87 They had almost consumed me upon earth; but I forsook not thy precepts.

88 Quicken me after thy lovingkindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth.

LAMED.

89 For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.

90 Thy faithfulness is † unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it † abideth.

† Heb. to generation and generation.

91 They continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.

70. Their heart is as fat &c.] The "fatness of the heart" implies, in this place, two things in those of whom it is affirmed; luxury, and its consequence, insensibility to those spiritual and divine truths, which are not only the study, but the "delight" of temperate and holy persons. Bp. Horne.

71. It is good for me &c.] There is a class of most important duties, which can only be practised in affliction; namely, patience and composure under distress, pain, and affliction: a steadfast keeping up of our confidence in God, and our dependance upon His final goodness, even at a time that every thing present is discouraging and adverse; and, what is no less difficult to retain, a cordial desire for the happiness and comfort of others, even then, when we are deprived of our own. The possession of this temper is almost the perfection of our nature. But it is then only possessed when put to the trial: tried at all it could not have been in a life made up only of pleasure and gratification. It is in the chambers of sickness; under the strokes of affliction; amidst the pinchings of want, the groans of pain, the pressures of infirmity; in grief, in misfortune; through gloom and horrour, that it will be seen, whether we hold fast our hope, our confidence, our trust in God; whether this hope and confidence be able to produce in us resignation, acquiescence, and submission. Archdeacon Paley.

74. — when they see me;] When they see me delivered out of all these troubles. Dr. Wells.

75. I know, &c.] From whatever quarter afflictions come upon us, they are the "judgments of God," without whose providence nothing befalls us. His judgments are always "right," or just, duly proportioned to the disease and strength of the patient; in sending them God is "faithful" and true to His word, wherein He hath never promised the crown without the cross, but hath, on the contrary, assured us, that one will be necessary in order to our obtaining the other; and that they who are beloved by Him shall not sin with impunity, nor go astray without a call to return. Bp. Horne.

79. — turn unto me,] Turn to my side, and become my friends. Bp. Patrick.

81. My soul fainteth &c.] My soul languisheth with a longing desire of Thy salvation; yet still I am sustained by an assured hope of Thy merciful performances. Bp. Hall.

83. — like a bottle in the smoke;] Bottles, among the Jews, were made of skins. One of these, if exposed to heat and "smoke," would become shrivelled and useless. Such a change will labour and sorrow cause in the human frame; and the Psalmist here represents, that his beauty and strength were gone, and the natural moisture dried up; in consequence of which the skin shrivelled, and both colour and vigour departed from him. Bp. Horne.

85. — which are not after thy law.] Who act without any regard to Thy law. Mudge.

89. For ever, &c.] Or, "Thy word, O Lord, is for ever, it is firmly fixed like the heavens." God's word, and His truth and faithfulness, upon which His laws are founded, are as fixed as the heaven and the earth; for they owe their durability to the same word and truth. Green, Mudge.

92 Unless thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I am thine, save me; for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The wicked have waited for me to destroy me: but I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies: for † they are ever with me.

† Heb. it is ever with me.

99 I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

[d] Ps. 19. 10. † Heb. palate.

105 Thy word is a ‖ lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.

106 I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

107 I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, the freewill offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and teach me thy judgments.

109 My soul is continually in my hand: yet do I not forget thy law.

110 The wicked have laid a snare for me: yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

113 I hate vain thoughts: but thy law do I love.

114 Thou art my hiding place and my shield: I hope in thy word.

115 [e] Depart from me, ye evildoers: for I will keep the commandments of my God. [e] Matt. 7. 23.

116 Uphold me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe: and I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: for their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou † puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross: therefore I love thy testimonies. † Heb. causest to cease.

120 My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

AIN.

121 I have done judgment and justice: leave me not to mine oppressors.

122 Be surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and teach me thy statutes.

125 I am thy servant; give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

95. — I will consider thy testimonies.] I will carefully attend to Thy commands. Mudge.

96. I have seen an end &c.] Of "all perfection" in this world, whether of beauty, wit, learning, pleasure, honour, or riches, experience will soon shew us the "end." But where is the end or boundary of the word of God? Who can ascend to the height of its excellency; who can fathom the depth of its mysteries; who can find out the comprehension of its precepts, or conceive the extent of its promises? Bp. Horne.

99, 100. I have more understanding &c.] That is, the spiritual wisdom, in which Thy law instructs me, for conducting myself most advantageously, is infinitely to be preferred before all other knowledge. Dr. Hammond.

108. — the freewill offerings of my mouth,] The "offerings" of the believer are prayer, praise, and holy resolutions and vows, like that of the Psalmist above, to keep God's righteous judgments, in which he therefore petitions to be more and more taught and instructed by the Spirit of truth. Bp. Horne. "Freewill offerings" were such sacrifices as were not offered by the law, or for any fault, but for the sake of thanksgiving. Rosenmüller.

109. My soul is continually in my hand:] I am exposed to continual danger of my life. Bp. Hall. See the note from Dr. Durell on Job xiii. 14.

111. Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage] That is, as that which will be the means of my enjoying the chiefest good. Dr. Wells.

118. — for their deceit is falsehood.] Because it will fail and ruin those who trust in it. Bp. Horne.

122. Be surety for thy servant for good:] Do Thou take my cause upon Thee, and stand out for the protection of mine innocence. Bp. Hall.

126 It is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.

150 They draw nigh that follow after mischief: they are far from thy law.

151 Thou art near, O LORD; and all thy commandments are truth.

152 Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old that thou hast founded them for ever.

RESH.

153 Consider mine affliction, and deliver me: for I do not forget thy law.

154 Plead my cause, and deliver me: quicken me according to thy word.

155 Salvation is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes.

‖ Or, Many. 156 ‖ Great are thy tender mercies, O LORD: quicken me according to thy judgments.

157 Many are my persecutors and mine enemies; yet do I not decline from thy testimonies.

158 I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved; because they kept not thy word.

159 Consider how I love thy precepts:

---

126. It is time for thee, — to work:] To shew Thy hatred of the wicked courses of men, by executing due judgments upon them. Bp. Hall.

—— made void thy law.] The law of God is "made void" by those who deny its authority, or its obligation; by those who render it of none effect through their traditions, or their lives. Bp. Horne.

129. Thy testimonies are wonderful: &c.] The Scriptures are "wonderful," with respect to the matter which they contain, the manner in which they are written, and the effects which they produce. Bp. Horne.

130. The entrance of thy words &c.] That is, Thy word or law is no sooner known, but it enlightens the mind with most useful knowledge. Dr. Wells.

—— it giveth understanding unto the simple.] Or, to the most unlearned, so far as to teach them how they may be happy. Dr. Wells.

131. — and panted:] An action expressive of great and affectionate desire.

139. My zeal &c.] "Zeal" is a high degree of love; and when the object of that love is ill-treated, it vents itself in a mixture of grief and indignation, which are sufficient to wear and "consume" the heart. This will be the case, where men rightly conceive of that dishonour, which is continually done to God, by creatures whom He hath made and redeemed. But never could the verse be uttered with such fulness of truth and propriety by any one, as by the Son of God, who had such a sense of His Father's glory, and of man's sin, as no person else ever had. Bp. Horne.

150, 151. They draw nigh that follow &c.] If our enemies "draw nigh" to destroy us, God is still nearer to preserve us; and however His word may be rejected by the wicked, the faithful always find it to be true, to their great and endless comfort. Bp. Horne.

152. — thou hast founded them for ever.] That is, Thy will and pleasure is firm and steadfast, and shall never fail those that depend upon it. Bp. Patrick.

159, 160. Consider how I love &c.] It is observable how the Psalmist delights to dwell on these two grateful topicks, the "lovingkindness" of God in promising salvation, and His "truth" quicken me, O LORD, according to thy lovingkindness.

160 † Thy word is true from the beginning: and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever.

† Heb. The beginning of thy word is true.

SCHIN.

161 Princes have persecuted me without a cause: but my heart standeth in awe of thy word.

162 I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil.

163 I hate and abhor lying: but thy law do I love.

164 Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments.

165 Great peace have they which love thy law: and † nothing shall offend them.

† Heb. they shall have no stumblingblock.

166 LORD, I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments.

167 My soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly.

168 I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: for all my ways are before thee.

TAU.

169 Let my cry come near before thee, O LORD: give me understanding according to thy word.

170 Let my supplication come before thee: deliver me according to thy word.

171 My lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes.

172 My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness.

173 Let thine hand help me; for I have chosen thy precepts.

174 I have longed for thy salvation, O LORD; and thy law is my delight.

175 Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me.

176 I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant; for I do not forget thy commandments.

PSALM CXX.

1 David prayeth against Doeg, 3 reproveth his tongue, 5 complaineth of his necessary conversation with the wicked.

¶ A Song of degrees. about 1058.

in the constant performance of that promise to His Church, while she loves and adheres to His "precepts." Thus it hath been "from the beginning," and thus it will be, until the whole counsel of Heaven shall be fulfilled, by the resurrection and salvation of the just. Bp. Horne.

164. Seven times.] That is, many times, in the day. Bp. Hall.

165. Great peace &c.] To enjoy a peace which sets us above the power of evil; which places us out of the reach of fortune; which inspires us with courage in the midst of danger; which opens our eyes to look through the gloomiest scenes of sorrow to the blessed hope of future glory; which establishes our hearts in a patient expectation of God's deliverance, so that nothing can terrify or dismay us; is that which the world can never give, and which can only proceed from the blessed Spirit of God, whose province it is to confirm the faithful to the end, and so to arm their faith, that "nothing can offend them." This is that peace of which the Psalmist here speaks, and which is the peculiar lot and inheritance of the righteous, of him who loveth the law of God. Bp. Sherlock.

——and nothing shall offend them.] Or, cause them to fall. Dr. Wells.

168. —before thee.] That is, perfectly known to Thee. The consideration of God's omnipresence is the best motive to an holy life. Bp. Wilson.

That this Psalm may be read with improvement, it will be convenient to add to the particular reflections already made, these three principal reflections: 1. That the law of God is most excellent, and its effects most wonderful. David teaches us, that this Divine law is the most perfect; that it gives a heavenly light, which enlightens us; that it gives understanding; that it purifies and rejoices the heart; that it supports us in afflictions; that it gives us unspeakable peace of conscience; and that it is infinitely better than all the treasures and riches in this world. 2. In this Psalm we learn to distinguish good men. They are sincere and upright in their ways; they do that which is right; they walk in the law of the Lord, and meditate on it day and night; they love God and His word with all their heart; they abstain from evil, and from the company of the wicked; they join themselves to the righteous; they are struck with terrour at the sight of God's judgments; they trust in Him, and are calm and patient under afflictions. 3. Lastly, this Psalm is full of many excellent prayers, which should be continually in our mouths and in our hearts, begging God to enlighten our minds, to teach us His law, to incline our hearts to obey Him, to take us under His care, and guide us always by His providence and His Holy Spirit. These are the instructions with which this Psalm furnishes us; for which purpose we should do well frequently to read it, and meditate on its contents. Ostervald.

Psalm CXX. This Psalm is one of the fifteen, which are entitled Psalms of Ascensions; that is, which were sung when the people came up either to worship in Jerusalem at the annual festivals, or perhaps from the Babylonish captivity. Bp. Lowth. The Psalmist here begs of God to defend him from the deceits and calumnies of the wicked, and complains that he is forced to dwell among them. Green.

A Song of degrees.] Or rather, of ascensions. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 4. Sharp arrows &c.] That is, All the reward thou shalt meet with shall be a swift vengeance from the Almighty. This is figuratively represented by sharp arrows and burning coals of juniper, (or, as some think, the Spanish broom,) the wood of which is supposed to burn more intensely than any other. Green, Parkhurst.

5. Woe is me, &c.] Mesech was the son of Japhet, Gen. x. 2, and Kedar the son of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 13. The descendants of both of them were idolaters, remarkable for their barbarity and cruelty, and for being enemies to peace. David is not to be understood as saying that he actually dwelt among these people, but only that he lived among people who were of the same tem-

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace:

PSALM CXXI.

The great safety of the godly, who put their trust in God's protection.

¶ A Song of degrees.

: Or, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills? whence should my help come? [a] Ps. 124. 8.

I WILL lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

2 [a] My help cometh from the LORD, which made heaven and earth.

3 He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

4 Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

5 The LORD is thy keeper: the LORD is thy shade upon thy right hand.

6 The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

7 The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.

8 The LORD shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.

PSALM CXXII.

1 David professeth his joy for the church, 6 and prayeth for the peace thereof.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

I WAS glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the LORD.

pers and manners with the descendants of Mesech and Kedar. Edwards.

This Psalm teaches, 1st, That good men may be exposed to calumny and the malice of men, but that God protects and delivers them. 2dly, That it is a great affliction to good men to live among the wicked and ungodly. Lastly, that it is the character of the righteous to love peace, as it is of the wicked to be addicted to confusion and trouble. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXI. This Psalm is of the dramatick or dialogue form. It is both concise and elegant. The king apparently going forth to battle, first approaches the ark of God, and in the two first verses humbly implores the Divine assistance, on which alone he professes to rest his confidence. In the third and following verses the high priest answers him from the tabernacle. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — unto the hills,] To the mountains of Zion and Moriah, where Jerusalem was built, where the tabernacle was placed, and from whence Jehovah assisted His people when they were in distress. Green.

5. — thy shade] Thy shelter. Dr. Wells.

6. The sun &c.] The meaning is, that the good man, during his journey through life, shall be under God's protection at all seasons. Bp. Horne.

8. The Lord shall preserve &c.] Bishop Lowth refers these words to the king's going forth to battle. But they may be applicable to the preservation of the Jews from their enemies on their going to their feasts at Jerusalem. Dimock.

How happy is that man "whose help cometh from the Lord." Though the whole creation frowns upon him, and all nature looks black upon him, he has His light and support within him, that is able to cheer his mind and bear him up in the midst of any horrours which may encompass him. He knows that his Helper is at hand, and is always nearer to him than any thing else can be which is capable of annoying or terrifying him. In the midst of calumny or contempt, he attends to that Being who whispers better things within his soul, and whom he looks upon as his Defender, his Glory, and the Lifter-up of his head. In his deepest solitude and retirement, he knows that he is in company with the Greatest of Beings; and perceives within himself such real sensations of His presence, as are more delightful than any thing to be met with in the society of His creatures. Even in the hour of death, he considers the pains of his dissolution to be nothing else but the breaking down of that partition which stands between his own soul, and the sight of that Being who is always present with him, and who will then manifest Himself to him in fulness of joy. Addison.

Psalm CXXII. The subject of this Psalm is that joy which the people were wont to express, upon their going up in companies to keep a feast at Jerusalem, when the Divine services were regulated, and that city was appointed to be a place of publick worship. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — shall stand] More literally, stood, or are standing. Abp. Secker.

3 Jerusalem is &c.] Jerusalem is compact as to its buildings, and the inhabitants of it firmly united by mutual harmony and friendship. Dr. Chandler. Jerusalem is built as a city that is placed in the centre of union; that is, it was the great seat and centre of religion and justice, was the centre of union to all the tribes. Mudge, Dr. Delaney.

4. — unto the testimony of Israel,] That is, "unto the ark of the testimony." Dr. Wells, Edwards, Merrick.

6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem:] A concern for the peace and happiness of our country is not only a political, but a religious virtue; a care that becomes us both as we are men, and as we are Christians; which stands not upon the narrow bottom of self-interest, but rises from a more generous principle, partaking of the love of God and love of our neighbour; since, whilst we seek the publick peace, we shew our benificence to the one, and our obedience to the other. Bp. Sherlock.

As we are concerned for the happiness of our country in general, so ought we to be for the welfare of the Church in particular. The kingdom of our Master must subsist, as well as other kingdoms and societies do, by the cultivation of peace and unity among those who are the subjects of it. Joined to one common head, Christians should be joined likewise to each other, "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. iv. 3. Bp. Horne.

PSALM CXXIII.

1 The godly profess their confidence in God, 3 and pray to be delivered from contempt.

¶ A Song of degrees.

UNTO thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens.

2 Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that he have mercy upon us.

3 Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4 Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

PSALM CXXIV.

The church blesseth God for a miraculous deliverance.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

IF it had not been the LORD who was on our side, now may Israel say;

2 If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us:

3 Then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us:

4 Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

6 Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

7 Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.

8 [a] Our help is in the name of the LORD, who made heaven and earth. [a] Ps. 121. 2.

PSALM CXXV.

1 The safety of such as trust in God. 4 A prayer for the godly, and against the wicked.

¶ A Song of degrees.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.

2 As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth even for ever.

3 For the rod of † the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity. † Heb. wickedness.

4 Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth the good success thereof.

Psalm CXXIII. This is a short address to God for His special assistance under circumstances of distress, from the proud and insolent behaviour of some haughty oppressors. Travell.

Ver. 2. — unto the hand of their masters, &c.] The servants or slaves in the East still attend their masters or mistresses with the profoundest respect. Maundrell observes this to be the case in Turkey: and Bp. Pococke says, that in Egypt "every thing is done with the greatest decency and the most profound silence: the slaves or servants standing at the bottom of the room with their hands joined before them, watching with the utmost attention every motion of their master, who commands them by signs." Parkhurst.

We have never more need of the influence of God's Spirit, than when those who oppress us add contempt and scorn to their injustice, and when the spectators of our misery take occasion from thence to deride and despise our persons; nor can any thing preserve us, in those cases, from some unwarrantable excesses of grief, but the casting up our eyes unto Him from whom all afflictions come. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CXXIV. This Psalm is an acknowledgment of God's assistance, and a thankful commemoration of the deliverances wrought signally by Him. It was appointed to be sung by the Levites after the return from the captivity, and is very suitable to any other eminent deliverance wrought by God for His servants. Dr. Hammond. This is one of the proper Psalms for the thanksgiving days of the fifth of November, and the twenty-ninth of May.

The great lesson which this Psalm, from the beginning to the end, inculcates, is, that for every deliverance, whether of a temporal or a spiritual nature, we should, in imitation of the saints above, ascribe "salvation to our God, and unto the Lamb," Rev. vii. 10. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXV. This Psalm, like the preceding, is appointed for the thanksgiving on the fifth of November.

Ver. 2. As the mountains &c.] As Jerusalem is encompassed by high hills, which render it inaccessible by enemies, so is the good providence of God a never-failing barrier and protection to His people. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

3. For the rod &c.] This implies, that the Almighty, with a view to the maintenance of pure religion, will preserve His people from subjection to the power of the wicked.

—— the rod] The power. Merrick.

The clearest and most unquestionable proof that we put our trust in the Lord, is our steadiness and constancy in His precepts; that no allurements and invitations of pleasure and profit, no apprehensions of terrour and misery and calamity, can persuade us in the least degree to swerve from them, in order to compass the one, or to avoid the other; and the surest evidence that He doth accept this our trust in Him, is, when He blesses our constancy, and makes us, as it were, as unmoveable as Himself; and as He cannot fail, or be shaken in His resolutions towards us, so we cannot be shaken in our confidence in Him, or misled by that confidence. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CXXVI. There is little doubt that this Psalm was expressly composed on the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon, which the Psalmist prays may be fully completed by the entire restoration of the faithful. Travell. This is one of the proper Psalms for the thanksgiving on the twenty-ninth of May.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God.

¶ A Song of degrees.

BLESSED is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

Ver. 1. — we were like them that dream.] We could scarcely believe it, but thought ourselves only in a dream of so great an happiness. Dr. Wells.

4. Turn again our captivity, &c.] The joy occasioned by Cyrus's proclamation having been described in the former part of the Psalm, we may now suppose some of the Jews ready to set out on their return home; at which time, and during their journey, they prefer this petition to God, that He would be pleased to bring back the rest of their countrymen, who, like floods rolling down upon the thirsty regions of the "south," might people the land, and by their labours put an end to the desolations of Judah. Bp. Horne.

—— the streams in the south.] This image seems to be taken from the torrents in the deserts to the south of Judea; which were constantly dried up in summer, (see Job vi. 17, 18,) and as constantly returned after the rainy season, and filled again their deserted channels. Bp. Lowth.

5, 6. They that sow in tears &c.] These verses pray in general, that God from a melancholy beginning (for such was the restoration at first, rather the seed of one, than one maturely grown) would grant a happy issue. Mudge, Green.

This Psalm engages us to reflect on the wonderful things which God has done at all times for His people, by delivering them, contrary to all appearance, from the power of their enemies. It assures us moreover, that if the Church, or the righteous, are in affliction and tears, God gives them at last occasion to rejoice; and, in general, when men have been tried and humbled by affliction, He makes gladness succeed to sorrow; causing those who sow in tears to reap in joy. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXVII. This is a Psalm which can never be out of season, the design of its author being to teach us the necessity of a dependance upon God and His blessing, in every work to which we set our hands. Bp. Horne. It is used in our service for the Thanksgiving of Women after Child-birth.

Ver. 2. It is vain for you &c.] That is, it is in vain for you to rise up early to labour, to go late to rest, and to eat the bread of carefulness, unless the Lord bless your endeavours: whereas He giveth to His beloved even while they sleep. Green.

4. — children of the youth.] Rather, as in the old translation, "the young children." Rosenmüller, Street.

5. — but they shall speak &c.] The "gate" was the place of resort for publick business and justice under the porch that belonged to it. Children would support a man there in his contest and pretensions. Mudge. See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10, and on Deut. xvi. 18. There is said to be a Chinese proverb to this effect, "When a son is born into a family, a bow and arrow are hung up before the gate:" this should seem to be a figurative expression, signifying that a new protector is added to the family. Merrick.

The Psalmist does not certainly intend to say at ver. 2, that labour and diligence are vain, but that they are so, except the Lord be with the labourer: the business is not to be done by all the industry and pains in the world without Him: whereas, if His aid be called in, if part of our time be spent in prayer, not the whole of it in toiling without prayer, our work will become easier, and go on better; a solicitude and anxiety for its success and completion will no longer prey upon our minds by day, and break our rest at night; we shall cheerfully fulfil our daily tasks, and then with confidence and resignation lay our heads upon our pillows, and God will "give to His beloved" a sweet and undisturbed "sleep," which shall fit them to return every morning, with renewed vigour and alacrity, to their stated employments. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXVIII. This is generally considered as a marriage-song, sung at the marriages of the Israelites; strongly pointing out the happiness of such as are truly religious, and the claim they thereby obtain to be blessed in their person, in their family, and in the prosperity of their country. Travell. It is introduced into our marriage service.

Marriage was ordained by God to complete the felicity of man

6 Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

4 The LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

5 Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let them be as the grass upon the housetops, which withereth afore it groweth up:

OUT of the depths have I cried unto thee, O LORD.

2 LORD, hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3 If thou, LORD, shouldest mark iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand?

4 But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared.

5 I wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

6 My soul waiteth for the LORD more than they that watch for the morning: ‖ I say, more than they that watch for the morning.

‖ Or, which watch unto the morning.

7 Let Israel hope in the LORD: for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

8 And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

in a state of innocence; and the benediction of Heaven will ever descend upon it, when undertaken in "the fear of the Lord." The vine, a lowly plant, raised with tender care, becoming, by its luxuriancy, its beauty, and its clusters, the ornament and glory of the house to which it is joined, and by which it is supported, forms the finest imaginable emblem of a fair, virtuous, and fruitful wife. The olive trees planted by the inhabitants of the Eastern countries around their tables, or banqueting places in their gardens, to cheer the eye by their verdure, and to refresh the body by their cooling shade, do no less aptly and significantly set forth the pleasure which parents feel at the sight of a numerous and flourishing offspring. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXIX. This Psalm was perhaps composed by Ezra or Nehemiah, for the consolation of the Jews at the time that their enemies obstructed the rebuilding of the city and temple. Dimock. It is one of the proper Psalms of the thanksgiving day on the twenty-ninth of May.

Ver. 3. The plowers plowed &c.] A figurative mode of expressing severe oppression.

4. The Lord is righteous: &c.] But God, who is ever faithful to His promises, has destroyed the power of these wicked oppressors. Travell.

7. — his bosom.] See the note on Ps. lxxix. 12.

8. — The blessing of the Lord &c.] This is a poetical form of saying, Let them be destroyed, as that which is useless; which affords neither the plenty nor the joy of harvest.

Both under the Old Testament and under the New, the church of God has often been assaulted, but He has always preserved it, and its enemies have not been able to destroy it. Hence we may rest in sure belief, that His Church will ever stand secure, and that those who "hate Zion" will be "confounded and turned back." Ostervald.

Psalm CXXX. In the first part of this Psalm, the author prays God earnestly to forgive him his sins, and to remit the consequences of them, in strong expectation that, pursuant to His word, He would grant his prayer: in the second, he has obtained his request, and encourages therefore all his brethren to put their trust in God, for redeeming them from their sins and the punishment of them. Mudge. It seems to have been composed, or at least used, upon occasion of the publick penitence, of which mention is made in the ninth and tenth chapters of Ezra. Rosenmüller. This Psalm is appointed to be used on Ash-Wednesday, and is one of those which are styled penitential Psalms.

Ver. 1. Out of the depths] Or deep waters. Troubles and calamities are figuratively represented by deep waters. Green.

3. — shouldest mark iniquities,] Shouldest charge us with all our sins. Bp. Wilson. Wilt be extreme to mark what is done amiss. Old Translation.

6. My soul &c.] The meaning is, The guards every morning that hasten to their watches, are not earlier than I am in my daily addresses to God. By these guards seem to be meant the priests, or some officers of theirs, which were peculiarly appointed, from a tower, to expect the first appearance of break of day, for the purpose of offering the morning oblation. Dr. Hammond. See the note on Exod. xiv. 24.

8. And he shall redeem &c.] He will assuredly rescue them from those distresses and sufferings, which He hath inflicted on them, as a punishment for their iniquities. Travell.

The fourth verse of this Psalm should teach us, upon what ground every man is to build the persuasion of the pardon of his sins. It is the temper of most persons, to be more busy about their assurance, than their obedience; and to be confident of their reward, while they should be solicitous about their duty. But to discover whether such men's confidence be sound and rational, or vain and fallacious, I should recommend them to this one criterion and mark of trial, namely, to reflect upon and consider what effects this persuasion of God's mercy works upon their spirits. If men, from the persuasions of mercy, grow impudent and bold in sin, presume upon God's patience, and venture far upon the stock of a supposed forgiveness, they must know that they are under the power of a destructive infatuation. Mercy was never intended to serve any man in his vice, to smooth him in his sin, and by abused hopes of pardon to strengthen the hands of his corruption. And therefore he that from God's mercy gathers no argument for His fear, may conclude thus much, that there is indeed forgiveness with God, but no forgiveness for him. Dr. South.

PSALM CXXXII.

1 David in his prayer commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark. 8 His prayer at the removing of the ark, 11 with a repetition of God's promises.

¶ A Song of degrees.

LORD, remember David, and all his afflictions:

about 1004. 2 How he sware unto the LORD, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out a place for the LORD, †an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob.

† Heb. habitations.

6 Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah: we found it in the fields of the wood.

7 We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.

8 [a] Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength.

9 Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For thy servant David's sake turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11 The LORD hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; [b] Of the fruit of †thy body will I set upon thy throne.

[b] 2 Sam. 7. 12. 1 Kings 8. 25. 2 Chron. 6. 16.

12 If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

Luke 1. 69. Acts 2. 30. † Heb. thy belly.

13 For the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 I will ‖abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread.

‖ Or, surely.

16 I will also clothe her priests with salvation: and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 [c] There will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a ‖lamp for mine anointed.

[c] Luke 1. 69. ‖ Or, candle.

Psalm CXXXI. This Psalm was probably intended as a form of humble devotion, to be used at seasons of religious humiliation.

Ver. 2. Surely I have behaved &c.] The meaning seems to be, I depend wholly upon God's providence for the way and time of bringing me to the kingdom, as the poor helpless infant, when it is deprived of its natural and accustomed food, the mother's milk, takes no care to provide for itself, but wholly relies upon its mother's care for its support. Poole.

This Psalm expresses the sentiments which all the children of God ought to entertain: they are to be humble, not aiming at high things, but resembling little children in innocence and simplicity. What David teaches us on this head, is the same with what our Lord more fully recommends in the Gospel, when He tells us, that if we become not as little children, He will not acknowledge us for His disciples, nor shall we enter into the kingdom of heaven. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXXII. Some are of opinion that this Psalm was composed by Solomon at the dedication of the temple, since he concludes his prayer upon that occasion with three verses of it. See 2 Chron. vi. 41, 42. Many parts of it refer so plainly to the Messiah, that it is well adapted to the service of Christmas-day. Travell.

Ver. 3. — I will not come into &c.] This is not to be understood literally, but as a figurative expression of his passionate desire to do this work, which was so earnest that neither his house, nor bed, nor sleep, could give him any content till it was completed, or in some forwardness. Poole.

5. — a place for the Lord,] A convenient place for the ark of the Lord, 1 Chron. xv. 1, and xvi. 1—43. Bp. Patrick.

6. Lo, we heard of it &c.] In other words, as Bp. Patrick hath paraphrased this verse, "And now, behold, the Lord Himself, to our great joy, hath told us the very place where He will fix His habitation, (1 Chron. xxi. 18, 26,) in the territory of Beth-lehem Ephrata, (Gen. xxxv. 13, 19,) in the fields of that forest, where the angel stood, and directed David to build an altar to the Lord, 1 Chron. xxi. 18, and xxii. 1. Bp. Horne. Jerusalem being situated not far from Beth-lehem, might be comprehended in the region of Ephrata. Merrick.

7. — we will worship at his footstool.] The Lord's footstool here mentioned, was either the ark of the testimony itself, or the place at least where it stood, called the Holy of Holies, towards which the Jews in their temple used to worship. Jos. Mede.

8. Arise, O Lord, into thy rest;] Arise, O Lord, to take possession of Thy resting-place. Green.

10. — turn not away &c.] Do not reject the prayer of him, whom Thou hast consecrated to be king of Thy people. Travell.

11. The Lord hath sworn &c.] That this is a prophecy of the Messiah, we have the authority of St. Peter to say, Acts ii. 30. This promise to David occurs, 2 Sam. vii. 12, and hath a twofold sense, relating to Solomon in type and shadow, to Christ in truth and substance. Bp. Horne.

12. — for evermore.] The temporal kingdom of David continued in the line of David till the birth of Christ, when the spiritual kingdom commenced in the person of this Son of David, of which there shall be no end. Dimock.

16. I will also clothe her priests with salvation:] I will spread My protection and defence over her priests, which are consecrated to Me. Bp. Hall.

17. — the horn of David &c.] The "horn" and "lamp" signify the regal dignity of David. No sooner shall one of his successors fail, but another shall be raised up to succeed him. Green. The Jews confess that this verse mystically refers to Christ. Bp. Horne.

The vow which David had made to establish a fixed place of

PSALM CXXXIII.

The benefit of the communion of saints.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell † together in unity!

† Heb. even together.

2 It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments;

PSALM CXXXIV.

An exhortation to bless God.

¶ A Song of degrees.

BEHOLD, bless ye the LORD, all ye servants of the LORD, which by night stand in the house of the LORD.

3 The LORD that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.

PSALM CXXXV.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy, 5 for his power, 8 for his judgments. 15 The vanity of idols. 19 An exhortation to bless God.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the name of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; for it is pleasant.

4 For the LORD hath chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that the LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

6 Whatsoever the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.

7 [a] He causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings for the rain; he bringeth the wind out of his treasuries.

[a] Jer. 10. 13.

Divine service, was a striking mark of his piety. From hence great men, magistrates, and all men in general, ought to learn, that they should desire, with the greatest fervency, the glory of God, and His true worship, and promote them to the utmost of their power. The choice which God had made of Zion for the place of His worship, and the promises with which He had engaged to dwell there for ever, to bless and prosper it, are to be applied to the Christian Church, in which He dwells in a more particular manner, and wherein He is to be worshipped and adored unto the end of the world. We ought all of us continually to pray for the preservation of the Church, for a blessing on its ministers, and on all its members. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXXIII. This short but pleasing Psalm was composed either to recommend unity among the tribes of Israel, or to celebrate it when it had taken place. It was fitly used by the first Christians to express their joy for the blessed union of Jews and Gentiles; and may now serve the uses of all Christian societies, whose happiness lies in holy peace and concord. Bps. Horne and Patrick.

Ver. 2. It is like the precious ointment &c.] The happiness derived to all classes of the community from the establishment of unity, is here aptly compared to the holy oil, which diffuses sanctity and fragrance over the person and garments of the high priest.

——skirts] The original word does not signify "skirts," but the upper part of the garment about the neck, near the beard. This garment was put over the head; and the neck part or collar, where the head came through it, is the part meant. Reeves.

3.—the dew of Hermon,] Maundrell says, 'We were sufficiently instructed by experience what the holy Psalmist means by "the dew of Hermon," our tents being as wet with it as if it had rained all night.'

——the mountains of Zion:] These seem to be those mountains which stood round about Jerusalem. Rosenmüller.

——for there &c.] That is, God hath promised all kind of prosperity upon the dwelling of those who live together in unity. Green, Rosenmüller.

The colouring of the picture presented to us in this Psalm is much heightened by its being viewed in another light, as a representation of spiritual unity in the Church. The spirit of heavenly love was that oil of gladness which Jehovah poured without measure on Him who is the High Priest and Head of His Church. Insinuating and healing, comforting and exhilarating, it is diffused from Him over His body mystical, even down to the least and lowest members; "of His fulness have we all received." Nor did the dew of heaven, in time of drought, ever prove more refreshing and beneficial to the mountains of Judah, than are the influences of Grace, when descending in soft silence from above upon the Church; in the union and communion of which, God hath "commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXIV. This Psalm seems to be nothing more than the alternate cry of the two different divisions of the temple watch. The first watch addresses the second, reminding them of their duty: the second answers by a solemn blessing: the address and the answer seem both to be a set form, which each division proclaimed, or sung aloud at stated intervals, to notify the time of night. Bp. Lowth.

The ministers of God should learn from this Psalm, that as the priests and Levites were by their office called to praise God day and night in His temple, and to pray for the people of Israel; so are the ministers of the Christian church, by their office, in a particular manner, called to bless and praise continually God's holy name, and to pray without ceasing for the prosperity of the Church. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXXV. This Psalm is thought to have been sung by the Levites at the opening of the gates of the temple. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 7.—he maketh lightnings for the rain;] He maketh the lightnings to attend the rain. Green. Dr. Russell, in his description of the weather at Aleppo, in September, tells us, that seldom a night passes without much lightning in the northwest quarter,

18. They that make them &c.] They, who form them for objects of worship, or who blindly depend upon them for favour and support, are as stupid and senseless, as the very idols themselves. Travell.

All the servants of God, they more especially who minister in the temple, are repeatedly in this, as in the foregoing Psalm, excited to praise their blessed Master. Two of the reasons assigned, why they should do this, are; first, the goodness of that Master, and secondly, the pleasantness of the employment. The latter of these reasons hath a natural and necessary dependance on the former. A sense of the Divine mercy will tune our hearts and voices to praise. We, who are upon earth, often find ourselves indisposed for the duty of thanksgiving, because the concerns of the body, the cares and pleasures of life, extinguish, for a time, this sense in us, until grace, prayer, and meditation, render it again lively and active. In the inhabitants of heaven, who behold God without the vail of matter interposed, it is always so; and therefore, they rest not day nor night from singing hallelujahs, nor cease one moment to rejoice in God their Saviour. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXVI. This is a delightful hymn of praise and thanksgiving to Jehovah, God of gods, and Lord of lords, for the wonders of creation, of providence, and grace; which were probably celebrated in due order by one half of the choir, while the other half, or perhaps the whole in full chorus, took up the burden of each verse, "For His mercy endureth for ever:" a form prescribed by David (1 Chron. xvi. 41.) to be used continually in the Divine service: a form highly proper for creatures, and sinful creatures, to use; whose great employment it is now, and will be for ever, to magnify the mercy and lovingkindness of their God. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — God of gods:] That is, Sovereign of all the heavenly hosts. Bp. Patrick. See Exod. xviii. 11. Dimock.

3. — Lord of lords:] Lord of the kings and princes of the earth. Bp. Patrick.

4. To him who alone doeth great wonders:] All the works of God are wonderful, and speak Him alone to have been their author. The established course of the world is in reality no less admirable, than are those extraordinary interpositions of Omnipotence, whereby it hath been sometimes interrupted and suspended; though the latter, on account of their novelty, are apt to affect us more than the former doth, which is ever before our eyes, and therefore less regarded by us. How many of those for whom the wonders of creation, providence, and redemption have been wrought, think none of them worthy their attention! Angels admire and adore, where man will not deign to cast an eye, or employ a thought. Bp. Horne.

sible for the mind of man to go, it will fall infinitely short of what He really is. "There is no end of His greatness." The most exalted creature He has made is only capable of adoring it, none but Himself can comprehend it. Such He is, when considered by the light of reason and philosophy. But if we would see Him in all the wonders of His mercy, we must have recourse to revelation, which represents Him to us not only as infinitely great and glorious, but as infinitely good and just in His dispensations towards man. We should often refresh our minds with such thoughts of Him, and annihilate ourselves before Him, in the contemplation of our own worthlessness, and of His transcendent excellency and perfection. Addison.

Psalm CXXXVII. This is the woful lamentation of one of the Jewish captives in Babylon, either at the time of their captivity, or at their return from it. It contains a mournful reflection on their banishment from their native country, combined with the insolent behaviour of their enemies; and foretells the future destruction which awaited the city of Babylon and its devoted inhabitants. Travell.

Ver. 1. — we sat down,] Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. See Lam. ii. 10; Job ii. 13. Bp. Lowth.

4. How shall we sing &c.] Many singers were carried captives, Ezra ii. 41. These would of course carry their instruments with them and be insulted, as here. Their songs were sacred, and unfit to be sung before idolaters. But the words, "How shall we sing, &c." are not an answer given to their enemies, but the free utterance of the feelings of the Jews amongst themselves. Abp. Secker.

5. — her cunning.] Or, skill to play upon the harp. Dr. Wells.

6. — if I prefer not &c.] Literally, if I do not exalt Jerusalem above the chief, or top, of my joy; that is, if I do not make it the principal subject of my joy. Bp. Lowth.

7. Remember, O Lord,—day of Jerusalem;] Or, Remember, O Lord, to "the children of Edom" the day of Jerusalem; that is, punish them for their cruel insults. Dimock.

—— the day of Jerusalem;] The day on which it was destroyed. Rosenmüller.

8. — happy shall he be,] The meaning of these words is, He shall go on and prosper, for the Lord of hosts shall go with him, and fight his battles against the enemy and oppressor of His people. Bp. Horne.

9. — dasheth thy little ones against the stones.] That the Babylonians probably used this cruelty to the Israelitish children, see Lam. ii. 11, and Isai. xiii. 16. Dimock.

If the law of nature obliges a man to love and reverence his parents who begat him, it also binds him to a vehement affection and concernment for his country, the place of his birth, and the air that nourished him. The happy state and condition of his country is a greater joy and comfort to a true patriot, than his own particular state of wealth and prosperity can be; and he is more afflicted and cast down for any publick misery that befalls it, than for any circumstance of it that brings calamity to himself. Lord Clarendon.

3 In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for great is the glory of the LORD.

6 Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.

7 Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his allseeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He defieth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

O LORD, thou hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off.

3 Thou ‖ compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways.

‖ Or, winnowest.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it.

7 Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 [a] If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there.

[a] Amos 9. 2, 3, 4.

9 If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, [b] the darkness † hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: † the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

[b] Job 26. 6. Hebr. 4. 13.
† Heb. darkeneth not.

13 For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

† Heb. as is the darkness, so is the light.

Ver. 1. — before the gods] Probably, in the presence of the princes and nobles assembled at some national solemnity.

2. — toward thy holy temple,] Wherever the ark was, there was the temple of Jehovah. See 1 Sam. iii. 3. And the Psalmist probably directed himself to that point. See Dan. vi. 10. Dimock.

——for thou hast magnified &c.] God, he says, had done honour to His word beyond all that had ever been said or imagined of Him. Mudge. Or the rendering may be, "for Thou hast magnified Thy name and Thy word above all things." Dimock and Old Translation.

5. — they shall sing in the ways of the Lord:] They shall rejoice in the doctrine of God delivered by Christ.

6. — but the proud he knoweth afar off.] As to the proud, God "knoweth" and He detesteth them; He beholdeth and keepeth them at a distance. Bp. Horne.

In the former part of this hymn, the fervent zeal which animates true believers appears in a strong light; it inclines them to rejoice in God, to worship Him, to sing His praises, and to declare His lovingkindness before all men, even before the great men of the earth, that they may learn to fear God, and shew forth His glory. Ostervald. From the last verse we learn, that in troublous times, and the days of affliction, we must look back on that which God hath already done for us, and from thence draw an argument, that He will perfect that which remains, and not leave His work unfinished: we must remember that His mercies fail not after a time, but endure for ever the same; and when we call to mind, that we are the work of His own hands, how can we think He will forsake us, unless we utterly and finally forsake Him? Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXIX. It seems evident, from the latter part of this noble and instructive Psalm, that the author penned it at a time when he was persecuted and calumniated, as an appeal to the all-seeing Judge between him and his adversaries. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — afar off.] From heaven, Thy dwelling-place. Green. "Long before;" that is, Long before they are uttered, is the rendering in the old translation.

3. Thou compassest my path &c.] That is, Thou watchest and siftest all my actions, both by day and night. Travell.

5. — laid thine hand upon me.] That is, hast so restrained me, that I cannot stir without Thy leave. Bp. Patrick.

7. — from thy spirit?] By this expression most of the ancient Fathers, and the generality of modern interpreters, understand the Holy Ghost. It is also clear from Psalm li. 11, &c. that this Person of the Trinity was well known to the Jews in the time of David. Dimock.

8. — if I make my bed in hell,] That is, if I lie down in the grave. Abp. Secker.

9. If I take the wings &c.] Could I be transported, with the swiftness of light, to the regions of the farthest east; or could I make my dwelling in the remotest western sea. Travell.

——the sea;] That is, the Mediterranean sea, which was west of Judea. Dimock.

13. For thou hast possessed my reins:] Or rather, Because Thou hast created my reins. This verse contains the reason why 14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth † right well.

† Heb. greatly.

15 My ‖ substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

‖ Or, strength, or, body.

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book † all my members were written, ‖ which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

† Heb. all of them. ‖ Or, what days they should be fashioned.

17 [c] How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

[c] Ps. 40. 5.

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies.

23 Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts:

24 And see if there be any † wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.

† Heb. way of pain, or, grief.

PSALM CXL.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from Saul and Doeg. 8 He prayeth against them. 12 He comforteth himself by confidence in God.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

DELIVER me, O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the † violent man;

† Heb. man of violences.

3 They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; [a] adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

4 Keep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man; who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah.

6 I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O God the LORD, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.

8 Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device; ‖ lest they exalt themselves. Selah.

‖ Or, let them not be exalted.

darkness could not screen him from the Lord, because He, who fashioned the heart and reins, would in every place be able to search them. Dimock, Green.

14. I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made:] Those who were skilled in anatomy among the ancients, concluded from the outward and inward make of the human body that it was the work of a Being transcendently wise and powerful. As the world grew more enlightened in this art, their discoveries gave them fresh opportunities of admiring the conduct of Providence in the formation of a human body. Galen was converted by his dissections, and could not but own a Supreme Being upon a survey of this His handy-work. By means of modern discoveries we see new wonders in the human frame. In short, the body of man is such a subject as stands the utmost test of examination. Though it appears formed with the nicest wisdom upon a superficial survey of it, it still mends upon the search, and produces our surprise and amazement in proportion as we pry into it. Addison.

15.—in the lowest parts of the earth.] By this expression is meant "the womb;" where, by the wonderful power and wisdom of the Divine Workmaster operating in secret, the human form is gradually fashioned and matured for its birth. Bp. Horne.

16. Thine eyes did see &c.] When the matter, of which I am made, was without form, it was visible to Thee how all my body should be framed; and accordingly all my members were fashioned, and adapted to their several uses. Bp. Patrick.

17. How precious &c.] How precious unto me, O God, are the thoughts of Thee! how numerous are the subjects of them! Green.

19.—ye bloody men.] Ye blood-thirsty men, shedders of blood. Bp. Horne, Poole.

The consideration that the Divine Being inhabits infinitude, that He dwells among all His works, that He is present to the mind of man, and that He discovers Himself in a more glorious manner among the regions of the blessed, should be kept awake in us at all times and in all places, and possess our minds with a perpetual reverence and awe. It should be interwoven with all our thoughts and perceptions, and become one with the consciousness of our being. It is not to be reflected on with the coldness of philosophy, but ought to sink us into the lowest prostration before Him, who is so astonishingly great, wonderful, and holy. Addison.

Psalm CXL. This Psalm is a prayer of David's for deliverance from his malicious and treacherous enemies, such as Doeg and the Ziphites, who had undertaken to overthrow him, and a prediction of the evils which should fall upon them, as a just reward of their dealings with him. Dr. Hammond.

Ver. 1.—from the violent man;] Thus Saul is characterized, Ps. xviii. 48. Green.

3. They have sharpened &c.] That is, By their false accusations, as by so much poison, they have endeavoured to destroy me. Dr. Wells.

5. The proud have hid a snare &c.] David here describes the subtilty and industry employed by his enemies to effect his destruction, by lying in wait for him, as a skilful fowler doth for his game, so that they thought it impossible he should escape their hands. Bp. Horne.

——gins] Or, "traps." Old Translation.

9—11. As for the head &c.] The Prophet, in these three verses, predicted those just judgments, which Heaven will inflict on the slanderers and persecutors of the righteous. Their lips, me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them.

10 Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again.

† Heb. a man of tongue. ‖ Or, an evil speaker, a wicked man of violence, be established in the earth: let him be hunted to his overthrow.

11 Let not †‖ an evil speaker be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.

12 I know that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall dwell in thy presence.

PSALM CXLI.

1 David prayeth that his suit may be acceptable, 3 his conscience sincere, 7 and his life safe from snares.

¶ A Psalm of David.

LORD, I cry unto thee: make haste unto me; give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee.

† Heb. directed.

2 Let my prayer be †set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

3 Set a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practice wicked works with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties.

5 ‖ Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

‖ Or, Let the righteous smite me kindly, and reprove me; let not their precious oil break my head, &c.

6 When their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; for they are sweet.

7 Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But mine eyes are unto thee, O GOD the Lord: in thee is my trust; †leave not my soul destitute.

† Heb. make not my soul bare.

9 Keep me from the snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal †escape.

PSALM CXLII.

David sheweth that in his trouble all his comfort was in prayer unto God.

¶ ‖ Maschil of David; A Prayer when he was in the cave.

‖ Or, A Psalm of David, giving instruction.

I CRIED unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I poured out my complaint before him; I shewed before him my trouble.

which uttered mischief against others, shall be the means of covering themselves with confusion, when out of their own mouths they shall be judged. Those tongues, which have contributed to set the world on fire, shall be tormented with the hot burning coals of eternal vengeance: and they who with so much eagerness and diligence have prepared pits for the destruction of their brethren, shall be cast into a deep and bottomless pit, out of which they shall never rise. Bp. Horne.

We are here to observe, that God defends the righteous from the violence of the wicked; that His vengeance pursues cruel and unjust men, and those who slander and deceive their neighbours; that, how formidable soever their power may appear, He defeats all their designs; and if He suffers the innocent to be oppressed for a while, He shews at last that He is their Protector, and gives them occasion to own and celebrate His power, justice, and goodness. In this view, and with such a spirit as this, and not with a spirit of resentment and revenge against them that have offended us, we ought to read and meditate on this Psalm. Ostervald.

Psalm CXLI. David being driven out of Judea by Saul, begs of God grace that he may not sin against Him with his tongue, nor be drawn into any sinful compliances by living amongst idolaters. He confides in God's help, and prays that He would deliver him from those who sought his ruin. He probably composed this Psalm just before his flight to Achish, king of Gath; when he had a second time spared Saul's life, but could trust him no longer. See 1 Sam. xxvi, and xxvii. 1. Green, Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. Let my prayer &c.] This verse plainly shews, that the Psalmist was then at a distance from the tabernacle, where all the solemn prayers of the Israelites, together with their daily sacrifices, were offered up. And therefore he begs that God would accept of all which it was in his power to perform, namely, the devotion of his heart, and the elevation of his hands in prayer; that the one might ascend to heaven, fragrant and well-pleasing as the cloud of "incense" mounting from the holy altar; and the other, in conjunction with it, prevail instead of the "evening oblation," for the deliverance of himself and his companions. Bp. Horne.

4. Incline not my heart] "O let not mine heart be inclined." Old Translation.

—— let me not eat of their dainties.] Let me not partake of their society.

6. When their judges &c.] This passage has been variously rendered. According to our translation, the sense may be, "When their "judges" (the leaders, principal persons of my enemies) "are overthrown in stony places," endeavouring to escape into a place of safety, they will hearken to my counsels and offers, which they now despise. Poole.

7. Our bones are scattered &c.] Expressing the great danger, in which he and his friends were, of being utterly destroyed by their enemies. Junius.

The chief security against the fruitless anguish of impatience, must arise from frequent reflection on the wisdom and goodness of the God of nature, in whose hands are riches and poverty, honour and disgrace, pleasure and pain, life and death. A settled conviction of the tendency of every thing to our good, and the possibility of turning miseries into happiness by receiving them rightly, will incline us to bless the name of the Lord, whether He gives or takes away. Dr. Johnson.

Psalm CXLII. This Psalm is entitled, "A prayer of David when he was in the cave," probably of En-gedi, or Adullam; 1 Sam. xxiv. 1—3, and xxii. 1. It is an earnest supplication to God, stating the utter failure of all human assistance, and humbly praying for the Divine aid. Travell.

Ver. 1. I cried] Rather, I will cry. The whole of this Psalm seems to be an actual prayer. Bp. Horne.

3 When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

‖ Or, Look on the right hand, and see. † Heb. perished from me. † Heb. no man sought after my soul.

4 I ‖looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge †failed me; †no man cared for my soul.

5 I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry; for I am brought very low: deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 for destruction of his enemies.

¶ A Psalm of David.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for [a] in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

[a] Exod. 34. 7. Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 2. 16.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 Hear me speedily, O LORD: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, ‖ lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

‖ Or, for I am become like, &c.

8 Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: I † flee unto thee to hide me.

† Heb. hide me with thee.

10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: for I am thy servant.

---

3. When my spirit was overwhelmed &c.] Or, When my spirit is overwhelmed within me, then Thou knowest my path: in the way wherein I walk, have they privily laid a snare for me. The meaning is, Though my thoughts are so broken and confused, that I am not able to counsel and direct myself in these straits, yet Thou knowest the path wherein I walk, Thou art with me, and wilt preserve me from those who watch all my steps, and lie in ambush for me. Bp. Horne.

7. — out of prison,] That is, out of the cave in which he was confined. Bp. Patrick.

—— the righteous shall compass me about;] To join my party and assist me.

The state of David in the cave of Adullam was a state of utter destitution; but in that disconsolate, and seemingly desperate situation, he desponded not. He had a Friend in heaven, into whose bosom he "poured forth his complaint," and to whom he told the story of his trouble and distress. When danger besets us around, and fear is on every side, let us follow the example of David, and that of a greater than David, who, when the Jews and Gentiles conspired against Him, and He was left all alone, in the garden, and on the cross, gave Himself unto prayer. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXLIII. In this Psalm David beseeches God that, passing by his manifold sins, and considering only what he suffered from his enemies, He would be pleased, according to His mercies in times past, to hearken unto his prayer, to conduct him by His good Spirit, and to deliver him from persecution. This being one of the penitential Psalms, is appointed to be used on Ash-Wednesday. Travell.

Ver. 2. —for in thy sight shall &c.] For if Thou shouldest proceed according to the rigour of the law, the best man living would not be acquitted at Thy tribunal. Bp. Patrick.

3. — he hath made me to dwell &c.] He hath forced me to seek my safety in holes and obscure places in the wilderness, where I seem to be buried alive, without any hope of a resurrection. Bp. Patrick.

5. — on the work of thy hands.] On what Thou hast done for others in the like distress. Bp. Wilson.

6. — as a thirsty land.] The circumstance of the lands of the East being subject to great dryness, which causes them to crack, affords the foundation of this figure, which is certainly extremely beautiful; for these dry lands have deep chinks, which "thirst" for the rain: this may be observed in India more than any where, a little before the rains fall, and wherever the lands are rich and hard. Harmer.

8 — in the morning;] That is, speedily. Dimock.

10. — thy spirit is good; lead me] Let Thy good Spirit lead me. Abp. Secker.

—— into the land of uprightness.] Or, "through plain ground;" the clause before leads to this sense, and there is an expression much the same, Ps. xxvii. 11, in which the Psalmist prays God to conduct him in a plain level way, (such was that of God's law,) because, if he went out of that, he should be liable to stumble. Mudge.

The prayer which king David makes at the beginning of this Psalm, in these words, "Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified;" is of such general use, that there is no man who has not reason to make it with humility and fervency. His application to God in the time of trouble teaches us, that, whatever danger we are in,

1 David praiseth God for his fame, 8 for his goodness, 11 for his kingdom, 14 for his providence, 17 for his saving mercy.

¶ David's Psalm of praise.

I WILL extol thee, my God, O king; and I will bless thy name for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

we ought to seek for security and comfort in prayer, and trust in God; and to this end we should meditate upon His works, and the many proofs He has given in all ages of His lovingkindness towards those that fear Him. But whether we are in affliction, or in any other state, we ought above all things to beg of God grace to fear Him, that we may feel the effects of His love, and be guided by His good Spirit. Ostervald.

The last verse of this Psalm leads us to reflect, wherein the peculiar happiness doth now principally consist, of "that people, whose God is the Lord." Their happiness consists in something far above riches and outward greatness; it consists in having the Lord Himself, the Supreme Governour of the world, to take care of them, and to provide all things needful for them. They have His wisdom to instruct them; His power to protect them; His mercy to pardon them; His grace to adorn them here, and His glory to crown them for ever; and all because they have the Lord Himself for their God, not only for their light, their life, their hope, their help, their strength, their tower, their sun, their shield, and their exceeding great reward, but for their God; which is infinitely more than can be couched under any other expression whatsoever. What can those persons lack who are thus related to, and interested in, Him that is all things in Himself? Bp. Beveridge.

Psalm CXLV. Hitherto in this Divine book we have been presented with chequered scenes of danger and deliverance, distress and mercy. The voice of complaint hath been sometimes succeeded by that of thanksgiving; and praise, at other times, hath terminated in prayer. But now, as if the days of mourning in Zion were ended, we hear no more of Messiah as a man of sorrows, or of the Church as despised and afflicted, after the same example, in the world. Henceforth we seem not to be upon earth, but in heaven, mingling with celestial spirits around the throne, and singing, as in the following Psalm, the praises of our God and King; extolling His greatness, His might, His glory, His justice, His mercy; the majesty of His kingdom, and all His adorable perfections and wondrous works. The general subject of this Psalm makes it suitable to the service of Whit-Sunday, when we celebrate that great blessing, the descent of the Holy Spirit. Bp. Horne, Travell.

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in man. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise the LORD, O my soul.

† Heb. Hallelujah.

2 While I live will I praise the LORD: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being.

3 [a] Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no ‖ help.

[a] Ps. 118. 8, 9.
‖ Or, salvation.

4 His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God:

6 Which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever:

7 Which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry. The LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The LORD openeth the eyes of the blind: the LORD raiseth them that are bowed down: the LORD loveth the righteous:

Ver. 5—7. I will speak of the glorious honour &c.] Those works of God which demand to be celebrated by the tongues of men, are here divided into three kinds: First, such as declare His glory, and excite our admiration, whenever we behold them. Of this sort are the shining frame of the heavens, and all the bodies which move therein; the earth, with its furniture without, and contents within; the magnificent and stupendous ocean, which flows around it; the different tribes of animals inhabiting both the one and the other; and above all, the construction of man, the lord of this lower world. Under the second class of God's works are ranged all those which the Psalmist styles His "terrible acts," or the exertions of His power against His enemies; such as the destruction of the old world by water; of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire; of Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea; of the Canaanitish nations by the sword; and the victory gained over sin and death by the resurrection of Christ. In the third rank stand those works which have proceeded from the goodness of God, and His righteousness in the performance of His promises. And among these we may reckon all the different provisions, which have been made by Him for the bodies of men in the world, and by grace for their souls in the church. On any of these subjects, meditation cannot be long employed without breaking forth into wonder, gratitude, and praise. Bp. Horne.

We can never speak too much upon the goodness of God, nor ought we to be ever weary in hearing about it. Yet it is to be feared that this point is not well considered and applied. For how could we be so void of love to God, of gratitude towards Him, of faith and hope in Him, were we thoroughly persuaded, did we seriously consider, that He is so exceedingly good towards us? How can we be so insensible of the benefits we enjoy, so distrustful of finding succour in our need, so dissatisfied and discontented with what befalls us, if we conceive and weigh, that all things are guided and governed by immense goodness? How also, if men have such an opinion of God impressed on their minds, comes it to pass, that they are so little careful to imitate Him in kindness, bounty, and mercy to one another? Dr. Isaac Barrow.

Psalm CXLVI. It is observable that, in the original, this and the following Psalms all begin and end with Hallelujah, that is, Praise ye the Lord. The Psalmist here extols the name of God, and calls upon all men to place their confidence in Him alone, who is the Creator, the Preserver, and the Governour of the universe, the Protector of the helpless, and the everlasting King of His people. Travell.

Ver. 4. — his thoughts] All his devices and contrivances. Dr. Wall.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1. That the best use we can make of our lives is to employ them in praising and glorifying God's holy name. 2. That it is a great folly to put our trust in princes, or in any man, since they are mortal, and therefore are mere weakness, and even as nothing; but to enjoy true happiness, we must confide alone in God, who is the Creator of the world, who loves truth and equity, does right to those that are oppressed, and delivers them; and who will reign for ever for the defence of His people and children. Ostervald.

9 The LORD preserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down.

Psalm CXLVII. This is a Psalm of praise: by the second, third, and thirteenth verses, it seems to have been composed just after the restoration from captivity upon the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Mudge. Whether it were composed upon the above occasion or not, it is an earnest exhortation to praise God for the illustrious proofs of His power, wisdom, mercy, and justice towards all His creatures, and more especially for the abundant marks of His kindness and favour, which He bestowed upon His chosen people. Travell.

10. He delighteth not &c.] He grants not His favour to the nations which excel in military power, in cavalry and infantry; but He "taketh pleasure &c." ver. 11.

13. For he hath strengthened &c.] That is, He hath enabled us to fortify again the city of Jerusalem with walls and gates. See Neh. vi. 15, 16. Dr. Wells.

15. He sendeth forth &c.] Whatsoever His pleasure is concerning His creatures upon earth, it is speedily and effectually accomplished. Bp. Hall.

17. — his ice] Meaning the hail. Street.

This Psalm presents us with two grand motives to induce us to love and praise God. The first, which is common to us with the Jews, and with all men, is taken from the power and wonderful wisdom by which He governs the world. The second is taken from the blessings God bestowed on the Jews; and particularly for granting them, together with His protection, the peace and plenty which they enjoyed in the land of Canaan, and giving them His holy word and His law. In this respect we have still stronger motives to praise the Lord, in consideration of the spiritual blessings vouchsafed to us; among which, the most valuable privilege of all is, to be enlightened by the Gospel, and by the knowledge of His will. Ostervald.

Psalm CXLVIII. In this most beautiful Psalm the whole creation is incited to celebrate the glory of the most high God. This hymn is elegantly imitated, and put into the mouth of Adam by our countryman Milton, (Paradise Lost, b. v.) who is justly accounted the next in sublimity to those poets who wrote under the influence of Divine inspiration. In truth, if we consider man on his first creation, such as the sacred writings represent him; in perfect possession of reason and speech; neither ignorant of his own nor of the Divine nature, but fully conscious of the goodness, majesty, and power of God; not an unobservant spectator of the beautiful fabrick of the universe; it is most probable, that on the contemplation of these objects his heart would glow with gratitude and love, and that the effect of such an emotion would be an effusion of praise to his great Creator, accompanied with a suitable energy and exaltation of voice. Indeed we scarcely seem to conceive rightly of that original and perfect state of man, unless we assign to him some of the aids of harmony and poetical expression, to enable him to testify, in terms becoming the dignity of the subject, his devout affections towards his infinite Creator. Bp. Lowth.

2 Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for he commanded, and they were created.

6 He hath also established them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the LORD from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word:

9 Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars:

10 Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and † flying fowl: † Heb. birds of wing.

11 Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth:

12 Both young men, and maidens; old men, and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for his name alone is † excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven. † Heb. exalted.

14 He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his love to the church, 5 and for that power which he hath given to the church to rule the consciences of men.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints. † Heb. Hallelujah.

2 Let Israel rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.

3 Let them praise his name ‖ in the dance: let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp. ‖ Or, with the pipe.

4 For the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: he will beautify the meek with salvation.

5 Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds.

6 Let the high praises of God be † in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; † Heb. in their throat.

7 To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;

8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;

9 [a] To execute upon them the judgment written: this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD. [a] Deut. 7. 1.

PSALM CL.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 3 with all kind of instruments.

Ver. 7. — ye dragons,] The word here translated "dragons," probably means whales and other sea monsters. Dimock. See note on Lam. iv. 3.

8. Fire,] That is, lightning. Dimock.

9. — and all cedars:] Comprehending all forest trees.

14. He also exalteth &c.] He hath given strength and power to His chosen people, and hath thereby afforded them a constant subject of praise and thanksgiving; even that peculiar people, with whom He made a special covenant, and who are near that sacred spot where His glory resides. Travell.

—— near unto him.] Namely, by special relation, friendship, and covenant, and by familiar intercourse, God manifesting His presence and favour to them, and they frequently and solemnly approaching His presence and worshipping Him at His footstool. Poole.

The material heavens, through all their various regions, with the luminaries placed in them, and the waters sustained by them, though they have neither speech nor language, and want the tongue of men, yet by their splendour and magnificence, their motions and their influences, all regulated and exerted according to the ordinance of their Maker, do, in a very intelligible and striking manner, declare the glory of God: they call upon us to translate their actions into our language, and copy their obedience in our lives; that so we may, both by word and deed, glorify, with them, the Creator and Redeemer of the universe. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXLIX. In this Psalm there is a reference to some signal deliverance or victory, which God vouchsafed to His people; whom therefore the Psalmist exhorts to praise the Lord with every mark of joy and gratitude, in expectation of their future complete triumph over all their opponents and persecutors. Travell.

Ver. 1. — a new song,] An illustrious hymn for recent victory. Fenton.

3. — in the dance:] See 2 Sam. vi. 16, and the note there.

4. — he will beautify the meek with salvation.] Those that meekly depend upon Him, He will make glorious; both with His rich blessings here, and with salvation hereafter. Bp. Hall.

5. — in glory:] That is, for the honour which God putteth upon them. Poole.

—— upon their beds.] That is, in a state of perfect ease and security. Bp. Horne.

6. Let the high praises &c.] That the Jews were wont to sing the praises of God as they advanced to combat, may be seen in 2 Mac. xiii. 15, and xv. 26. Street. See also 2 Chron. xx. 21.

9. — the judgment written:] The judgment written in the law, Deut. vii. 24, and xxxii. 41—43. Dr. Wells. This is added to shew that they do not this work to satisfy their own malicious or revengeful inclinations, but in obedience to God's commands. Poole.

This Psalm should stir up all the true members of the Church to sing and publish the praises of God, and to rejoice in Him continually. And as the Israelites sung hymns of joy, because God had made them triumph over their enemies, and the kings that waged war with them; we ought likewise to praise Him for the care He has taken of His Church, and for all the favours we have received from Him; but chiefly, for subduing our spiritual enemies, and putting it in our power to triumph over them ourselves, and to be in all things "more than conquerors," through Jesus Christ our Lord. Ostervald.

Psalm CL. This short concluding Psalm is an invocation to every creature to declare the glory of God, by the tribute of a grateful heart, and the cheerful sound of musical instruments.

† Heb. Hallelujah.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power.

2 Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

3 Praise him with the sound of the ‖ Or, cornet. ‖ trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and ‖ dance: ‖ Or, pipe. praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high sounding cymbals.

6 Let every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

Travell. The Hebrews themselves acknowledge that they do not understand the several sorts of musical instruments mentioned in this Psalm. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1.—praise him in the firmament &c.] That is, Let the angels and heavenly hosts praise Him in heaven, where He clearly shews forth His power. Rosenmüller.

3. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: &c.] The people of God are enjoined in this Psalm to use all the various kinds of musical instruments, in the performance of their Divine services. Sacred musick, under proper regulations, removes the hindrances of our devotion, cures the distractions of our thoughts, and banishes weariness from our minds. It adds solemnity to the publick service, raises all the devout passions in the soul, and causes our duty to become our delight. Bp. Horne.

6. Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord.] How can we sufficiently prostrate ourselves and fall down before our Maker, when we consider that ineffable goodness and wisdom, which contrived existence for finite natures! What must be the overflowings of that good will, which prompted our Creator to adapt existence to beings, in whom it is not necessary; especially when we consider, that He Himself was before in the complete possession of existence and of happiness, and in the full enjoyment of eternity! What man can think of himself, as called out and separated from nothing, of his being made a conscious, a reasonable, and happy creature, in short, of his being admitted as a sharer of existence, and a kind of partner in eternity, without being swallowed up in wonder, in praise, in adoration! It is indeed a thought too big for the mind of man, and rather to be entertained in the secrecy of devotion, and in the silence of the soul, than to be expressed by words. The Supreme Being has not given us powers or faculties sufficient to extol and magnify such unutterable goodness. It is however some comfort to us, that we shall be always doing what we shall be never able to do, and that a work, which cannot be finished, will be the work of AN ETERNITY. Addison.

THE PROVERBS.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Proverbs, as we are informed at the beginning, and in other parts of the Book, were written, for the most part, by Solomon, the son of David; a man, as the Sacred Writings assure us, peculiarly endued with Divine wisdom. Whatever ideas of his superiour understanding we may be led to form by the particulars recorded of his judgment and attainments, we shall find them amply justified on perusing the works which remain, and give testimony of his abilities. This enlightened monarch, being desirous of employing the wisdom which he had received, to the advantage of mankind, produced several works for their instruction. Of these, however, three only were admitted into the canon of Sacred Writ by Ezra; the others being either not designed for religious instruction, or so mutilated by time and accident, as to have been judged imperfect. The Book of Proverbs, that of Ecclesiastes, and that of the Song of Solomon, are all that remain of the writings of him, who is related to have spoken "three thousand proverbs," whose "songs were a thousand and five," and who "spake of trees from the cedar that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall;" who "spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." If, however, many valuable compositions of Solomon have perished, we have reason to be grateful for what still remains. Of his Proverbs and Songs the most excellent have been providentially preserved; and as we possess his doctrinal and moral works, we have no right to murmur at the loss of his physical and philosophical productions.

This Book of Proverbs contains the maxims of long experience, framed by one who was well calculated, by his rare qualities and endowments, to draw just lessons from a comprehensive survey of human life. Solomon judiciously sums up his precepts in brief energetick sentences, which are well contrived for popular instruction. The wisdom, indeed, of all ages, from the highest antiquity, hath chosen to compress its lessons into compendious sentences, which were peculiarly adapted to the simplicity of earlier times; which are readily conceived and easily retained; and which circulate in society as useful principles, to be unfolded and applied as occasion may require. The inspired son of David had the power of giving peculiar energy and weight to this style of writing, and his works have been as it were the storehouse from which posterity hath drawn its best maxims. His Proverbs are so justly founded on principles of human nature, and so adapted to the permanent interests of man, that they agree with the manners of every age, and may be assumed as rules for the direction of our conduct in every condition and rank of life, however varied in its complexion, or diversified by circumstances; they embrace not only the concerns of private morality, but the great objects of political importance. The Book may be considered under five divisions. The first part, which is a kind of preface, extends to the tenth chapter. This contains general cautions and exhortations from a teacher to his pupil, delivered in very various and elegant language: duly connected in its parts, illustrated with beautiful descriptions, decorated with all the ornaments of poetical composition, and well contrived as an engaging introduction to awaken and interest the attention. The second part extends from the beginning of the tenth chapter to the seventeenth verse of the twenty-second chapter, and contains what may strictly and properly be called Proverbs, given in unconnected general sentences with much neatness and simplicity; adapted to the instruction of youth, and probably more immediately designed by Solomon for the improvement of his son. In the third part, which contains what is included between the sixteenth verse of the twenty-second chapter and the twenty-fifth chapter, the tutor is supposed, for a more lively effect, to address his pupil as present; he drops the sententious style of Proverbs, and communicates exhortations in a more continued and connected strain.

The Proverbs which are included between the twenty-fifth and thirtieth chapters, and which constitute the fourth part, are supposed to have been selected from a much greater number by the "men of Hezekiah;" that is, by the Prophets whom he employed to restore the service and the writings of the church, as Eliakim, and Joah, and Shebna, and probably Hosea, Micah, and even Isaiah, who all flourished in the reign of that monarch, and doubtless co-operated with his endeavours to re-establish true religion among the Jews. These Proverbs, indeed, appear to have been selected by some collectors after the time of Solomon, as they repeat some which he had previously introduced in the former part of the Book. The fifth part contains the prudent admonitions which Agur the son of Jakeh delivered to his pupils Ithiel and Ucal; these are included in the thirtieth chapter. It contains also the precepts which the mother of Lemuel delivered to her son, as described in the thirty-first chapter. Concerning these persons, whose works are annexed to those of Solomon, commentators have entertained various opinions. The original words which describe Agur as the author of the thirtieth chapter, might be differently translated; but admitting the present construction as most natural and just, we may observe, that the generality of the Fathers and ancient commentators have supposed that under the name of Agur, Solomon describes himself, though no satisfactory reason can be assigned for his assuming this name. Others, upon very insufficient grounds, conjecture that Agur and Lemuel were interlocutors with Solomon. The Book has no appearance of dialogue, nor is there any interchange of person: it is more probable, that though the Book was designed principally to contain the sayings of Solomon, others might be added by the "men of Hezekiah:" and Agur might have been an inspired writer, whose moral and proverbial sentences (for such is the import of the word Massa, rendered Prophecy) were joined with those of the Wise Man, because of the conformity of their matter. So likewise the dignity of the Book is not affected, if we suppose the last chapter to have been written by a different hand, and admit the mother of Lemuel to have been a Jewish woman, married to some neighbouring prince; or Abijah, the daughter of the high priest Zechariah, and mother of king Hezekiah; since in any case it must be considered as the production of an inspired writer, or it would not have been received into the canon of Scripture. But it was perhaps meant that by Lemuel we should understand Solomon; for the name which signifies one belonging to God, might have been given unto him as descriptive of his character, since to Solomon God had expressly declared that He would be a Father. Dr. Gray.

This Book is frequently quoted by the Apostles, who considered it as a treasure of revealed morality, from which Christians were to derive their rules of conduct; and the canonical authority of no part of the Old Testament is so ratified by the evidence of quotations as that of the Proverbs. But it is remarkable, that the Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach, which has so striking an affinity to the Book of Proverbs, is not quoted in a single instance by the Apostles and Evangelists; and the difference between Canonical and Apocryphal, is no where so strongly marked as in this example. Michaelis.

This Book is entitled "the Proverbs;" but what we call Proverbs, properly and strictly speaking, are of a different nature; and most of Solomon's Proverbs are rather to be called Maxims or Sentences. A proverb is a short moral sentence, which means something else than what the words naturally and literally imply; that is to say, it must be expressed in a figurative manner. When Solomon says, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding;" this is no proverb, but a moral sentence. When he says, "Drink waters out of thine own cistern;" this is a proverb: and it means, "Meddle not with that which belongs to another." These Proverbs of Solomon are a collection of wise and moral sayings, usually plain and concise; they are also of the poetical kind, and fall into metre, and therefore were the more easily learned and remembered by those in whose language they were written. They have not that air of smartness and vivacity and wit which modern writers have usually affected in their maxims and sentences; but they have what is better, truth and solid good sense. No one subject is long pursued in this treatise of Solomon, nor is there any coherence or connection between its parts. The nature of this sort of writing does not admit it. But, though the composition be of the disjointed kind, yet there is a general design running through the whole, which the author keeps always in view: and that is, to instruct the people, and particularly young people, at their entrance into publick and active life; to give them an early love and earnest desire of real wisdom, and to lay down such clear rules for their behaviour, as shall carry them through the world with peace and credit.

Solomon is the first author that we know of who may be called a moralist; and as such he appears in this book, as well as in that of Ecclesiastes. He says nothing, or very little, concerning the Law of Moses; he leaves the explaining or enforcing of it to the Prophets, the Priests, and the Levites. He says nothing about revealed religion, but rather confines himself to natural religion or morality. He wrote under the assistance of the Divine Spirit, but has no claim, that we perceive, to the title of a Prophet; for he does not discourse in the prophetical style and manner: he says not, The word of the Lord came to me; and, Thus saith the Lord; he foretold no future events, and wrought no miracles. Dr. Jortin.

Chap. I. ver. 2. To know wisdom &c.] The use of these proverbs is, to give true moral and spiritual wisdom and instruction to those that carefully hear of, and read them. Bp. Hall.

4. To give subtilty to the simple,] Meaning, that the reading of this book will strengthen and shield all easy, flexible, seducible persons, especially the young, who want experience in affairs, and so are subject to be misled and ensnared. Dr. Hammond.

6. To understand a proverb, &c.] To understand a proverb, and its mysterious sense. This study was much in vogue in the time of Solomon, as appears from the instance of the queen of Sheba, who came to prove Solomon "with hard questions." Calmet.

A wise writer requires a wise reader; and therefore it is that Solomon, in his introduction to the Book of Proverbs, represents that person a considerable proficient in knowledge, who is able to understand a proverb and the interpretation of it; the words of the wise and their dark sayings. Dr. Jortin.

7. The fear of the Lord &c.] The first lesson he gives, as being worthy of the first consideration, is, that all saving knowledge, including a practice answerable to that knowledge, an uniform persevering obedience to the commands of God, is founded in humble and pious reverence towards God, in the tender fear of displeasing Him, and the readiness to receive, embrace, and lay up, in an honest heart, His word and His grace, whenever it shall be revealed and afforded to us. Dr. Hammond.

"The fear of the Lord" is not only now and then, but almost every where, in Scripture, put for the whole duty of man, for godliness in general; and the reason is, that the true fear of God always qualifies and tempers the mind so, that a man dares not do otherwise than please and obey God to the utmost of his knowledge and power. Bp. Beveridge.

8. My son, hear the instruction of thy father, &c.] Listen to the instructions, that is, follow the lessons of piety and virtue, which thy father and mother give thee.

9. For they shall be an ornament &c.] Meaning, that a child well brought up is adorned by the wisdom, and virtues, and graces, which he wears; they are like a crown covering his head, and a chain embellishing his neck. Calmet.

10—16. My son, if sinners entice thee, &c.] The next and most important advice is, to avoid ill company. "The whole world lieth in wickedness," saith an Apostle, 1 John v. 19; and nothing can be more proper or seasonable than for instructors of youth to caution their inexperience against bad examples. The wise man here instances in one particular vice, the love of money, as being the most predominant and common of all others; and shews how it leads to the most enormous crimes, and is indeed the very "root of all evil." Wogan.

17. Surely in vain the net is spread &c.] The general sense seems to be, Surely a bird has sense enough to fly from the net when he sees it: but these persons are by their wicked deeds laying snares for their own lives.

18. And they lay wait for their own blood;] These men are setting a trap for themselves, when they lie in wait to take away the lives of others: for they shall not always escape the hand of justice. Bp. Patrick.

19. — which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.] Which (evil gain) bringeth destruction on those who pursue it. Bp. Hall.

20. Wisdom crieth without; &c.] Men cannot fail to be as well acquainted with the excellent instructions of wisdom, as they are with that which is proclaimed in the streets. Bp. Patrick.

Wisdom is opposed to folly, and folly in the sacred style is all impiety; so by wisdom is meant universal piety, or obedience of all sorts due unto God; and so the precepts of universal righteousness are those things which wisdom proclaims. Dr. Hammond.

20, 21. — in the streets: — in the chief place of concourse, &c.] Here seems to be an enumeration of all the publick places where proclamations were made: the highways, the streets, the tops of houses, the gates where all go in and out, and particularly the chief city Jerusalem, from which all laws were proclaimed and dispersed to the lesser cities and regions. Dr. Hammond.

22. — the scorners] Profane persons, who mock at religion and piety.

27. When your fear cometh as desolation, &c.] When calamities and dangers come upon you, which, the less they are before expected, will the more frightfully, tumultuously, and dismally seize you.

The Hebrew word translated "a desolation" seems to signify an occasion of great noise and tumult, when men are thrown into an alarm of approaching danger, and, not knowing what it is, are unable to prepare for avoiding it. Dr. Hammond.

28. Then shall they call upon me, &c.] This awful menace of God's judgment upon impenitent and hardened sinners is incorporated by the Church into the solemn and impressive exhortation contained in her Commination Service.

31. — be filled with their own devices.] Be glutted with that which they have chosen, receive the just rewards of their own ways and works. Dr. Hammond.

32. — the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.] Foolish sinners are hardened in their wicked courses by the sense of their continuing prosperity, and are therefore hurried on to their own destruction. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. ver. 1—6. Solomon in this passage teaches us, that God is the only fountain of all true wisdom; and that the only way by which we can draw wisdom out of this fountain is, by studying and practising the sacred law of God. Reading.

desire of it, as men do of that for which they have the most ardent affection. Bp. Patrick.

The Chaldee version expresses "criest" by a word which signifies the impatient crying of a child to its mother, aptly describing that vehement desire of grace and wisdom here, which is a special ingredient in piety. Dr. Hammond.

4. If thou seekest her as silver,] If thou seekest her with as much earnestness as covetous men search for money. Perhaps it is a proverbial expression, taken from those who dig in mines. Bp. Patrick.

8. He keepeth the paths of judgment,] He preserves pious men in their integrity, encouraging them not to swerve from the rules of justice, or to cease to exercise mercy and kindness, being their Keeper and Defender in all their proceedings. Bp. Patrick.

12. — from the man that speaketh froward things;] Not to suffer thee to be perverted by the mouth of him, who would subtilely insinuate his evil principles into thee. Bp. Patrick.

13. — to walk in the ways of darkness;] In the melancholy gloomy crooked path that leads to eternal misery. Dr. Hammond.

16. — the strange woman,] The proper meaning of the Hebrew word is, one who is estranged or alienated in her affections from her husband or her God. Dr. Durell.

The practice here alluded to was chiefly and more openly carried on by women who came from neighbouring and heathen countries; and these being of another religion, if they were of any religion, would probably seduce those who frequented them into the additional and heinous crime of idolatry, as Solomon afterwards knew by his own woful experience. Dr. Jortin.

17. Which forsaketh the guide of her youth,] The adulteress which forsakes her husband, to whom she was joined in her youth, and whom she took for her guide and governour when love was in its greatest warmth, and has wickedly broken the laws of God, and violated the solemn vow of fidelity which she formerly made. Bp. Patrick.

18. — her house inclineth unto death, &c.] Various plagues and miseries of this world attend upon this sin, which promises pleasure at a distance, but in reality ensnares men into an abyss of endless evils. Dr. Hammond.

22. But the wicked &c.] The proper portion of the wicked is, to be cut off and extirpated, either by the hand of human justice, or by the curse of God, which invisibly pursues them till they be rooted out. Dr. Hammond.

The happiness of good and bad men in this world has this signal and important difference: that of the righteous is chiefly internal; less visible, perhaps, but more perfect: the others is only external; more dazzling and conspicuous, but never lasting nor sincere. When the good man dies, he passes to a state of most consummate felicity: when the wicked man departs, all his prosperity dies with him; he exchanges a mere empty show of happiness for real and eternal misery. So that his end, whenever it comes, is indeed "a cutting off from the earth," earth being the only ground in which his happiness can grow; his end is indeed a "rooting out." Wogan.

Chap. III. ver. 2. For length of days, &c.] I can give thee all assurance from God, Solomon says, that, besides the endless advantages of another world, thou shalt thus obtain the blessings of this life, the prolonging of thy days here in peace and prosperity: not that the pious faithful servant of God will be exempt from afflictions in this world; but that, in the general course of things, such a person will, by God's special blessing, and by the very temper of Christian virtues, have a security of much greater real worldly happiness, than those who use unlawful arts to obtain the riches and honours of the world. Dr. Hammond.

5. — lean not unto thine own understanding.] Rely not on thy wisdom, contrivances, or artifices, to compass thy designs in this world, but keep thyself to the ways and means which God affords thee, and approves: and this, beyond all worldly policy, will secure to thee a happy and easy passage through the dangers of this life. Dr. Hammond.

7. Be not wise in thine own eyes:] That is, Do not follow the dictates of worldly prudence in opposition to the commands of God.

——fear the Lord, and depart from evil.] We find these expressions frequently put together in Scripture, as having nearly the same import, differing only as cause and effect; the proper fear of the Lord producing a departure from evil. Abp. Tillotson.

8. It shall be health to thy navel, &c.] This is the means of preserving a good habit both of body and soul, and of remaining, under all circumstances, cheerful, happy, and without dejection. These peculiar expressions seem to be merely a metaphorical representation of that firmness, and vigorous health and cheerfulness of mind, which virtue imparts. Bp. Patrick.

In the East, it is usual, for the most part, to apply medicines externally, and especially to the stomach. The expression "health to thy navel" seems to bear allusion to this custom. Harmer.

9. Honour the Lord with thy substance,] Honour the Lord in His ministers, by paying them their dues, and bringing oblations to His house at the three solemn feasts, (Exod. xxiii. 14, 15,) together with the firstfruits of all that thy estate produces, (Exod. xxii. 29, 30,) in token of thy gratitude to Him for His blessings. "So shall thy barns be filled, &c." So will God pour His blessings upon thee more abundantly, and convince thee, by sending a seasonable and plentiful harvest and vintage, that this is the method, not to diminish, but to increase the possessions which He hath given thee, Deut. xxviii. 4, 5; 2 Chron. xxxi. 10. Bp. Patrick.

11. My son, despise not the chastening] Neither disregard the chastening of the Lord, nor be impatient under it.

15. — than rubies:] The meaning of the Hebrew word is not well ascertained: there are reasons for thinking that pearls are meant by it, as they were esteemed at a very high rate, not only by the Jews, but by the Romans, and even by the Medes, Persians, and Indians. Bochart.

16. Length of days is in her right hand;] Wisdom is here represented figuratively as a queen, holding in one hand length of days, and in the other, riches and honours.

17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness,] Thus it is most true that religion gives us the greatest delights and advantages in this life, even if there were no life hereafter; and hence is most apparent the extreme folly of Atheists, who, besides running a most desperate hazard after death, deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity, for which they so anxiously seek. Dr. Bentley. When Solomon observes that the ways of wisdom, that is, of piety, are ways of pleasantness, he means, that this is not only the excellence, but the peculiar excellence of religion; and consequently that the ways of folly and vice, all things considered, are not ways of pleasantness. Thus the sense of this text is, that the good will infallibly enjoy a satisfaction and delight, of which the wicked will as certainly be deprived. Dr. Jortin. See note on ver. 2.

18. She is a tree of life] This seems an allusion to the tree of life which God planted at first in paradise, and which was to give to man life, health, and immortality. Such is wisdom to those who possess it; it preserves to them a long and happy life in this world, and a blessed immortality in the next. Calmet.

In all these respects it cannot better be represented than by the light of the sun, when it is come above the horizon, continually increasing till it come to perfect noon, the day continually arraying and adorning itself, and putting on new lustre, till the whole face of nature is fully illuminated, no degree of shade or darkness any where remaining. Dr. Hammond.

21. —keep them in the midst of thine heart.] Preserve them studiously, and lay them up as a most precious treasure, in the closest affections of thy heart. Bp. Patrick.

23. Keep thy heart with all diligence;] The heart is here used to denote the seat of the affections, passions, and desires; and by the precept "to keep our hearts," is meant, that we should diligently preserve our good dispositions, and correct our bad ones; for which two things principally are necessary, a frequent examination of our own heart, and a constant endeavour to wean our affections from this world, and to fix them on another. Dr. Waterland.

——for out of it are the issues of life.] The genuine and natural sense of this is, that all the actions of a man's life issue and proceed from the heart; which is the fountain, not only of our natural life, but of our moral too; so that, as a man's heart is, so will his life be: if his heart be kept clear and pure, his life cannot be wicked and vicious; and if his heart be wicked and vicious, his life cannot be kept clean and pure from sin; as our Saviour Himself teaches, Matth. vii. 16—20. Bp. Beveridge.

24. Put away from thee a froward mouth,] Never speak any thing thyself contrary to truth, honesty, and religion, nor listen to, or associate with, those that do so. Bp. Patrick.

25. Let thine eyes look right on, &c.] Let neither thine eyes, nor thy other senses, be drawn aside to the right hand or to the left, but let them be directed aright, according to the law of thy God. Bp. Hall.

27. Turn not to the right hand &c.] Let no temptation either of hope or fear, passion or interest, be able to seduce or divert thee from the straight and even path of virtue, but exactly and carefully preserve thyself from every thing that is evil. Dr. Hammond.

Chap. V. ver. 3. For the lips of a strange woman] The wise man here gives a new caution against those impure desires, which he had before noticed, chap. ii. 16, 17, as great obstructions to religious wisdom; and he describes their miserable effects by several apt resemblances, ver. 4, 5, which shew how by these vices men lose their honour, their time, their health and estates, and at last lie down in sorrow, and end their days in an unprofitable repentance. Bp. Patrick.

——drop as an honeycomb,] Are full of sweet enticements. Bp. Hall.

5. Her feet go down to death;] She leads those that follow her steps to certain and inevitable destruction, not only here, but in another world. Bp. Patrick.

——her steps take hold on hell.] Rather, "her steps lead on to the tomb." By the English term "hell," is commonly understood the place of torment; whereas here is meant the grave, the place where the body is consumed. Dr. Hodgson.

6. Lest thou shouldest ponder the path of life,] The Hebrew words admit of being translated in the third person, "She ponders not the path of life;" and this seems a preferable construction. Dr. Durell. "Her paths are always moveable," "wandering," "dangerous," "unstable," according to different versions. Dr. Hammond. She gives herself up to pleasure without reflection: her ways are inconstant, she has no fixed attachments, has neither knowledge, wisdom, or discernment, and follows no rule but her passion. Calmet.

9. Lest thou give thine honour unto others, &c.] Lest thou put thy reputation in the power of others, and even thy life; that is, of those who may divulge or revenge thy adultery, chap. vi. 34.

11. And thou mourn.] "Mourn" is too feeble a word to convey the meaning of the original. It signifies more properly, "and thou roar" with pain. Dr. Hodgson.

12. —How have I hated &c.] How stupidly foolish have I been, in not considering all this sooner; how senselessly bent on my own ruin! I am amazed to think how I hated the timely cautions and just reproofs which were given me. Bp. Patrick.

14. I was almost in all evil &c.] Better, perhaps, "I was in almost all evil." I have plunged myself into all sort of evil, in the midst of my people, being too well known for my vices, and obtaining no compassion. Calmet.

15 ¶ Drink waters out of thine own cistern, and running waters out of thine own well.

CHAP. VI.

1 Against suretiship, 6 idleness, 12 and mischievousness. 16 Seven things hateful to God. 20 The blessings of obedience. 25 The mischiefs of whoredom.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

MY son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger,

2 Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

3 Do this now, my son, and deliver thyself, when thou art come into the hand of thy friend; go, humble thyself, ‖ and make sure thy friend.

‖ Or, so shalt thou prevail with thy friend.

4 Give not sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eyelids.

5 Deliver thyself as a roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

6 ¶ Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise:

7 Which having no guide, overseer, or ruler,

8 Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

9 [a] How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

[a] Chap. 24. 33.

10 Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

11 [b] So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

[b] Chap. 13. 4. & 20. 4.

---

15. Drink waters &c.] The wise man, having thus represented the dangers and wasting miseries of incontinence, gives the seasonable and necessary advice, that every man should strictly abstain from wandering lusts, and remain in the society of his own wife. Dr. Hammond.

16. Let thy fountains be dispersed &c.] Besides many other blessings, thou wilt hence derive the comforts of a numerous flourishing offspring, which, as streams or rivers from a fountain, will flow from a chaste conjugal bed. Dr. Hammond.

17. Let them be only thine own,] Thou wilt thus have the assurance, that the children thou ownest are truly thine. Dr. Hammond.

19. — as the loving hind and pleasant roe;] Rather, "as the beloved hind and the favourite roe." The comparison is here very appropriate, for it is well known that all the males of the deer-hind are remarkably fond of the females which they have selected for their partners; and, although timid animals in general, will, on their account, encounter any danger to the hazard of their lives. Dr. Durell.

22. — he shall be holden with the cords of his sins.] The wicked man engages in these shameful and illicit pursuits, without foreseeing their mournful consequences; he thinks he will be able to disengage himself from them whenever he pleases, but he is forging chains for himself which he will not be able to break; when he has contracted the habit, he will not have the power to quit it. Calmet.

23. He shall die without instruction;] He shall die for want of instruction. Dr. Waterland.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. — if thou be surety for thy friend,] My son, be advised by me not to pass thy word rashly for the money which thy neighbour or friend borroweth of another, much less stand bound to a stranger, of whose honesty or ability thou art not assured; for if thou hast been so incautious as to be drawn into such engagements, "thou art snared with the words of thy mouth," look upon thyself no longer as a free man, but hampered and enslaved by dangerous obligations. Bp. Patrick.

— if thou hast stricken thy hand &c.] To strike hands with another person was a general emblem of agreement, bargaining, or suretiship. Thus the ancient poets often represent it. Burder. Solomon frequently exhorts to the avoiding of suretiship, as a most dangerous indiscretion; by which he seems to mean, that we should never be bound in behalf of another for more than we can afford to lose, without any considerable detriment to our fortunes or families. Dr. Jortin.

3. — go, humble thyself, &c.] These words may rather be rendered, "Go, stir up thyself, and prevail with thy companion;" "give not sleep to thine eyes," ver. 4; that is, without the least delay take this course to disentangle thyself. Dr. Hammond.

6. Go to the ant, thou sluggard; &c.] As in the matter just mentioned, the least delay is pernicious, so, in all things else, sluggishness or negligence of those things which concern us most nearly, should ever be avoided; and if we need any instructor on this head, we may go to one of the least and meanest of creatures. Dr. Hammond.

8. Provideth her meat in the summer,] The industry of the ant has been frequently noticed by the ancient poets. It has been generally believed that these animals lay up stores of corn for their winter's provision, and that they gnaw off the buds of the grains so as to prevent their growing in the earth. This fact is asserted by Pliny; Bochart produces many writers asserting the same. La Pluche says, "A prevailing passion in these little animals is to amass stores of grain; and, lest the humidity of the cells should make the corn shoot up, we are told for a certainty, that they gnaw off the buds which grow at the point of the grain." Parkhurst.

10. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber,] By the repetition of the words here seems to be implied, sleep and slumber often repeated at different intervals. The change of the person speaking, from the preceptor to the sluggard, in this verse, is extremely beautiful.

11. — as one that travelleth, — as an armed man.] "As one that travelleth," that is, by surprise: "as an armed man," with irresistible violence. Bp. Patrick, Calmet.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

12 ¶ A naughty person, a wicked man, walketh with a froward mouth.

13 He winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers;

14 Frowardness is in his heart, he deviseth mischief continually; he † soweth discord.

† Heb. casteth forth.

15 Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly; suddenly shall he be broken without remedy.

16 ¶ These six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination † unto him:

† Heb. of his soul.

17 † A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, † Heb. Haughty eyes.

18 An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, [c] feet that be swift in running to mischief,

26 For by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to a piece of bread: and † the adulteress will hunt for the precious life.

† Heb. the woman of a man, or, a man's wife.

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

30 Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry;

31 But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house.

32 But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh † understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul.

† Heb. heart.

33 A wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance.

35 † He will not regard any ransom; neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts.

† Heb. He will not accept the face of any ransom.

---

12. A naughty person,] In the Hebrew, "a man of Belial;" denoting probably an idle foolish wicked man, who cares not for God's directions of his tongue or life. "With a froward mouth;" in the Hebrew, "with perverseness of mouth," in the sense of detracting from the actions of other men, and so perverting all to the worst sense that is possible. Dr. Hammond.

13. He winketh with his eyes, &c.] Such a person, when he has nothing of weight to say against a man, will, by significant gestures of all sorts, intimate matters to his disadvantage, and so persuade others, without laying any particular thing to his charge. Dr. Hammond. Such a person composes all his parts to deceit; every gesture of his tends to fraud; the very motion of his eyes, of his feet, of his fingers, is significant, and expresses some secret intimation of guile. Bp. Hall.

15. Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly;] Such a person shall be brought to utter ruin, when he fancies he has carried his matters so cunningly, that no one discerns his villany. Bp. Patrick. "He shall be broken without remedy;" alluding, it appears, to an earthen vessel which, when broken into pieces, cannot be made whole again. Dr. Wells.

16. These six things &c.] These six things, which are commonly found in such profligate persons, "doth the Lord hate:" yea, there is one more, and so in all there are seven things commonly found in such persons, which are an abomination to Him. Dr. Wells. The seven things are these: pride or haughtiness; lying or fraudulence; guilt of blood; malice or projecting of evil; a pleasure in doing mischief; false witness or calumny; a causing of discord or ill-will among those who live friendly together. Dr. Hammond.

22. — it shall talk with thee.] Shall suggest good thoughts to thee. Dr. Wells.

25. — with her eyelids.] See note at 2 Kings ix. 30.

26. — will hunt for the precious life.] Will bring the adulterer to his grave. See Ezek. xiii. 18. Dr. Isham.

30. Men do not despise a thief, &c.] The general meaning of this verse and the following is, However odious is the sin of theft, yet if the thief be compared with the adulterer, we shall find much difference made in the heinousness of the offence. Men are not wont to be inexorably cruel against him who steals out of pure necessity; but if he be detected, however dearly he may pay for his fault by way of satisfaction, the sum is yet accepted of the injured party; but he who committeth adultery, destroyeth his own soul. Bp. Hall.

31. — he shall restore sevenfold;] The law of Moses does not enjoin a restitution of sevenfold, but in a smaller proportion, Exod. xxii. 1, 4. Bp. Patrick. Seven seems only put here for a number of perfection: the meaning is, he shall make perfect and full restitution according to the law, so far as his substance or estate will reach. Abp. Tillotson.

32. But whoso committeth adultery &c.] The adulterer robs a man of his wife, without any such necessity, and therefore is destitute of all excuse, and must be looked upon as void of all understanding; and when he is discovered, he will be punished, not merely in his estate, but with the loss of his life, Lev. xx. 10. Bp. Patrick.

34. For jealousy is the rage of a man:] No translation can fully express the force of the original here. "The inflammation of jealousy is the setting a man on fire:" as much as to say, The jealousy with which a man is inflamed, so heats him and rages within him, that he can never be appeased, but is borne with irresistible violence to the revenge of his defiled bed. Schultens.

25 Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

26 For she hath cast down many wounded: yea, many strong men have been slain by her.

Chap. VII. ver. 2. — as the apple of thine eye.] Rather, "as the pupil of thine eye." Dr. Durell.

3. Bind them upon thy fingers, &c.] It is sufficiently evident that Solomon could not mean this precept to be understood literally, any more than the next expression, which frequently occurs, "Write them on the table of thine heart;" yet it was on such texts as these (see Exod. xiii. 16; Deut. vi. 8; xi. 18.) that the Pharisees founded the practice of binding on their foreheads phylacteries, or slips with particular precepts of the law inscribed upon them. Dr. Durell. See note at Exod. xiii. 9.

4. Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister;] Be as familiar with wisdom, as if she were thy own natural sister. Bp. Hall. The name of "sister" occurs often as the name of friendship, and is employed to express the affection of the husband to his bride, Cant. iv. 9; v. 1, &c. It here marks the chaste love which we ought to bear to wisdom. Calmet.

9. In the twilight, &c.] He seems to enumerate the several periods of the night, intending to imply that he had frequently observed the scene which he describes, although he professes to be describing only one particular instance. Schultens.

11. (She is loud and stubborn;] Translators have differed in rendering these words; they seem rather to mean, "She is prating, petulant, and wandering, running about from house to house." Dr. Hammond.

14. I have peace offerings with me; &c.] "I have peace offerings with me," that is, "I have an entertainment or feast at my house;" for in sacrifices of this sort, the person that offered reserved a part of the victim for convivial purposes. Dr. Durell. This narrative is strongly expressive of the woman's character; of her levity in making the payment of vows a prelude to sin, and of her shameless falsehood, ver. 15.

16. — with carved works,] Meaning probably figured tapestry or carpeting, from its resemblance to carved work. Parkhurst.

17. — aloes,] See note at Cant. iv. 14.

—— cinnamon.] It is remarkable that the name of this tree in Hebrew is the same as in English. Parkhurst.

19. — the goodman] Literally in Hebrew "the man," meaning her husband. In the earlier English writers, "goodman" was a common appellation for the master of a family.

20. — at the day appointed.] Some interpreters prefer the reading of our margin, "at the new moon," or, "at the day of assembly," which the time of the new moon was amongst the Jews. The Greek translators render it, "after many days." Dr. Hammond.

23. Till a dart strike through his liver; &c.] Thus he yields to his lust, until the revenging husband, actuated by jealousy, give a deadly stroke to the adulterer, or till the just judgment of God seize upon body and soul, being thus heedlessly drawn in as a bird is into the snare, not considering that its life is brought into danger. Bp. Hall.

26. For she hath cast down &c.] For many have been the examples of no mean persons, who have fallen in their reputation, their estates, their healths, and comforts of life, and in truth have utterly perished by her; innumerable are the mighty men, both for valour and wisdom, whom she has brought to ruin. Solomon himself, as well as Samson, became an example of the "mighty

27. — the chambers of death.] The Jewish sepulchres consisted of large vaults and caves, in the sides of which were cut out distinct niches for receiving each a dead body. Parkhurst.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. Doth not wisdom cry? &c.] We may consider this chapter as connected with the preceding, and forming with it a continued discourse. The wise man had before been representing the dangerous seductions of false pleasure. He now describes to us wisdom, who invites us to love her by a noble, grand, elevated discourse, and by magnificent promises of substantial good. Calmet.

A sublime allegory is here introduced, of wisdom standing in the most conspicuous and frequented places of the city, and proclaiming aloud to men those great precepts of truth, religion, and virtue, by which they may rise from the vanities of the world to life and immortality. Schultens.

10. Receive my instruction, and not silver;] That is, receive it in preference to silver. Calmet. Make no comparison of my instruction with silver and gold, for these are base and corruptible metals, not worthy to be mentioned together with those heavenly treasures, which are contained in, and conveyed by, my Divine counsels. Bp. Hall.

12. I wisdom dwell with prudence,] I alone endow men with real prudence, always giving the most safe and least fallible advice, and directing men to more discreet resolutions in difficult cases than the most subtile head in the world that consults not with me. Bp. Patrick.

—— and find out knowledge of witty inventions.] Implying, that no advice or subtile contrivances can be good, or can have a happy event, which are not agreeable to true piety. Dr. Wells.

14. — I have strength.] I inspire men with true and rational courage to persist in good resolutions which are neither rashly taken up, nor wrongly pursued. Dr. Wells.

15, 16. By me kings reign, &c.] Meaning, that all lawful authority, the power of all kings and magistrates, are most surely founded in wisdom.

17. — those that seek me early shall find me.] This holds true in every useful acquisition: youth is the time when the foundation of knowledge, either secular or religious, is to be laid; and they who begin any useful study or pursuit late in life, seldom become great proficients. Dr. Jortin.

19. — and my revenue] Rather, "my produce," which answers better to "my fruit," in the preceding clause. Dr. Durell.

21. That I may cause &c.] That I may confer on all those who sincerely love and adhere to me a happy settlement in a state of eternal peace and substantial satisfaction. Bp. Patrick.

22. The Lord possessed me &c.] The passage which follows is expressed in such magnificent language, that the ancient Christians thought the application of the words was to the wisdom revealed to us in the Gospel by the Son of God, nay to the Son of God Himself, the Eternal Word and Wisdom of the Father. Bp. Patrick.

The wisdom, he says, which directs us to all this, is but a ray of that Eternal Wisdom of the Father, the Word and Son of God, which, in the fulness of time, was to be incarnate, but before all time was present with God, before any part of this world, earth, sea, fountains, hills, mountains, or valleys, were created. Dr. Hammond. God has possessed the Son from all eternity, since "the Word was with God," from the beginning, John i. 1. Calmet.

"The Lord possessed me in the beginning of His way;" rather, "The Lord possessed me when He first went forth," that is, when He first exerted Himself in the work of creation. Dr. Durell.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

25 Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth:

26 While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the ‖ fields, nor ‖ the highest part of the dust of the world.

‖ Or, open places. ‖ Or, the chief part.

27 When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he set ‖ a compass upon the face of the depth:

‖ Or, a circle.

28 When he established the clouds above: when he strengthened the fountains of the deep:

[e] Gen. 1. 9, 10. Job 38. 10, 11. Ps. 104. 9.

29 [e] When he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth:

30 Then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him;

31 Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights were with the sons of men.

[f] Ps. 119. 1, 2. & 128. 1. Luke 11. 28.

32 Now therefore hearken unto me, O ye children: for [f] blessed are they that keep my ways.

33 Hear instruction, and be wise, and refuse it not.

34 Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors.

35 For whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall † obtain favour of the LORD.

† Heb. bring forth.

36 But he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul: all they that hate me love death.

CHAP. IX.

1 The discipline, 4 and doctrine of wisdom. 13 The custom, 16 and error of folly.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

WISDOM hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars:

2 She hath killed † her beasts; she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table.

† Heb. her killing.

3 She hath sent forth her maidens: she crieth upon the highest places of the city,

4 Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

5 Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.

6 Forsake the foolish, and live; and go in the way of understanding.

7 He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame: and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot.

8 [a] Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee: rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee.

[a] Matt. 7. 6.

9 Give instruction to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser: teach a just man, and he will increase in learning.

10 [b] The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding.

[b] Job 28. 28. Ps. 111. 10. chap. 1. 7.

11 [c] For by me thy days shall be multiplied, and the years of thy life shall be increased.

[c] Chap. 10. 27.

12 If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise

---

30. Then I was by him,] Then was I very near to Him, contriving all things; nor had He greater delight in any thing than in me, who day by day, during the creation of the world, produced some lovely work or other, in which He rejoiced, to see how good and agreeable they were, Gen. i. 4, &c. Bp. Patrick.

31. —my delights were with the sons of men.] Beholding them made in the image of God, and after His likeness, and capable of holding converse with me. Bp. Patrick.

34. —waiting at the posts of my doors.] Going to the places where true religion and piety are taught. Dr. Wells.

36. —all they that hate me love death.] These words can scarcely signify any thing else than the destruction brought upon the soul by death eternal. Dr. Graves.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Wisdom hath builded her house, &c.] Wisdom is represented as a glorious queen, the daughter of heaven, adorned with all excellencies and perfections, inviting all misguided souls to her stately palace, and promising to them the most delicious entertainment, if they will forsake their follies. By this notion of a feast the sacred writers are wont to express the high satisfaction, joy, and pleasure, with which the principles of virtue and wisdom fill the hearts of men when they have a true relish for them. This is the substance of the allegory here given, but the several parts of it are not to be too minutely scanned. Bp. Patrick.

2. She hath killed her beasts; &c.] She hath made a plentiful provision for all hungry and thirsty souls, who will find no less life, and vigour, and strength, and joy communicated to them from her sacred instructions, than the body does when it partakes of a liberal and delicious feast. Bp. Patrick.

3. She hath sent forth her maidens:] She hath sent forth her attendants and ministers, persons of uncorrupted purity and sincerity, to invite men with a loud voice, which cannot but be heard by whole cities and countries. This expression may be illustrated by a passage from Hasselquist, who at Alexandria, in Egypt, saw ten or twelve women going about and inviting people to a banquet by a particular kind of cry or noise. Parkhurst.

——upon the highest places of the city,] The schools of the Prophets were seated on "high places," as appears from 1 Sam. x. 5, 10, &c.; which seems to be the allusion here of wisdom crying upon the highest places of the city, to invite those who had a disposition towards her to come and hear her instructions. Bp. Patrick. Or the expression may allude merely to the tops of the houses and parapets, to which it was customary to go for the purpose of proclaiming any thing aloud, agreeably to the expression of our Saviour, "Preach ye upon the housetops," Matt. x. 27. Calmet.

7. He that reproveth a scorner &c.] He who performs the charitable office of reproving those who deride religion, and scoff at all good admonition, not only loses his labour, but will probably be requited with reproaches. Bp. Patrick.

——getteth himself a blot.] Suffers vile and unworthy usage. Dr. Wells.

10. —of the holy] Of sacred things, or Divine revelations. Dr. Isham.

12. If thou be wise, &c.] If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for the good of thyself; but if thou scornest religion, thou alone shalt bear the punishment of it. Dr. Wells.

for thyself: but if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it.

13 ¶ [d] A foolish woman is clamorous: she is simple, and knoweth nothing.

14 For she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city,

15 To call passengers who go right on their ways:

16 Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither: and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

17 Stolen waters are sweet, and bread † eaten in secret is pleasant.

18 But he knoweth not that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.

CHAP. X.

From this chapter to the five and twentieth are sundry observations of moral virtues, and their contrary vices.

THE proverbs of Solomon. [a] A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

2 [b] Treasures of wickedness profit nothing: but righteousness delivereth from death.

3 [c] The LORD will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish: but he casteth away ‖ the substance of the wicked.

4 [d] He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

5 He that gathereth in summer is a wise son: but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.

6 Blessings are upon the head of the just: but [e] violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

7 [f] The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot.
